VOLUME XXI, PART VII.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

of the matter on Wednesday and it is not considered on that day, it is in the nature of a special order, and you probably would not get a vote on it, except by a special rule, in case the matter should fail to be brought up on that day.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest that you let it pass to a third reading and that the previous question be ordered on the final passage of the bill, with the understanding that when the business of the House is such that it can be taken up for consideration it may be so taken up. I would suggest that to the gentleman.

Mr. MORRILL. That is the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. I would suggest that the previous question be considered as ordered, and that the bill be reported to the House, and then taken up in its order when reached.

Mr. PAYSON. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

By unanimous consent, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FLORIDA G. CASEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1813) granting an increase of pension to Florida G. Casey.

The bill was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Florida G. Casey, widow of Maj. Gen. Silas Casey, of the regular Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month, in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, this is a case precisely like the one that has just been acted upon, and I ask that a similar order be made, and I should think that the time suggested with reference to debate upon the other bill, an hour and a half, would be ample for debate upon the two bills.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no order made with reference to that in the other case.

Mr. SPOONER. I would suggest that the same course be taken as in the case of the former bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SPOONER. And the previous question ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. That order was not made in the other case.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be made in the House.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, if there was another $100 bill considered since I addressed the Chair.

A MEMBER. The same course was taken as with reference to the first one.

MRS. ADELAIDE H. WOODALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2245) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Adelaide H. Woodall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension to $50 per month of Adelaide H. Woodall, widow of French B. Woodall, late colonel of the One hundred and fifty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2245) granting a pension to Adelaide H. Woodall, submit the following report:

The committee have considered this case and adopt the report of the Senate herein as their report with an amendment striking out the word "fifty," in the second line of said bill and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," and that as so amended the bill do pass.

The report of the Senate is in the following language:

"Mrs. Woodall, the beneficiary in this bill, is the widow of the late Col. French B. Woodall, who entered the service as lieutenant of Company K, Sixteenth Illinois Volunteers, May 24, 1861, and was promoted to the colonelcy of the One hundred and fifty-first Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, which commission he held at the close of his service and the war.

"Colonel Woodall was found drowned in the East River, foot of Whitehall street, New York, and the coroner's jury on the 12th of June, 1869, made a report to this effect. His widow made application for a pension, claiming that the drowning was the result of a brain disease incurred during his military service. The Pension Office rejected the claim on the ground that it was not shown that his death was the result of his service.

"After a protracted effort to obtain an allowance of her pension under the general law she appealed to Congress, and the report of a member of this committee on the bill introduced for her relief demonstrated so clearly that her claim was just that the Pension Office finally granted her a pension.

"The facts, briefly stated, show that about the 1st of October, 1863, there was an explosion of ammunition at Bridgeport, Ala., from which Colonel Woodall received a tremendous shock; was thrown down, covered with earth; was unconscious and unable to get up. It is in evidence, medical and lay, that his brain was affected thereby; that he had attacks of intense pain, continuing many days, and from which he was often delirious and irresponsible. These attacks increased in frequency and occurred at shorter intervals, and the conclusion was that he fell into the river during one of his paroxysms of pain and prostration.

"The cause of death was admitted and the Pension Office allowed the claim, rating it on the grade of a lieutenant; and now the widow comes to Congress and asks an increase on grounds that, in the opinion of the committee, are entitled to very liberal consideration.

"Colonel Woodall was a well man when he went into the service. He had all the qualifications requisite to a prosperous career. He came out of the service disabled, tortured with suffering. He struggled to overcome his mental and physical incapacity, that he might provide a present and future subsistence for his family. Had he succeeded they would have been provided for. As the result of his service and death his widow asks the relief which the Government should provide."

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOR] had some apprehension about this bill and wished to make some examination, but he thought this was another case. He was here when the bill was laid aside temporarily, but I see he is not here this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill the gentleman has referred to has not yet been read.

The amendment to the bill reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I would like to know why a special pension act is asked in this case. Why does it not come under a general law? I must object to it unless I am informed.

Mr. LANE. This case was rejected in the Pension Office originally, and then the Senate passed a special bill. It came to the House, but failed to be reached in the House; but on the strength of the report made by the Senate the Pension Office allowed the pension; but the officer was filling one rank and was commissioned to another.

Mr. MORRILL. What is the name? Is it the Woodall case?

Mr. LANE. Yes, it is the man that was found drowned in the river, and he was filling one office while he was commissioned to another.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. And the object of the bill is to give his widow the pension that the higher rank would have entitled her to?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that he was misinformed. This is the bill that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOR] objected to the other evening.

Mr. LANE. Yes; I see it is.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. McKINNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1269) granting a pension to James M. McKinney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. McKinney, late second lieutenant of Company A, North Cumberland Battery, Kentucky State Militia.

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1269) granting a pension to James M. McKinney, submit the following report:

The committee adopt the report on this bill made by the Senate committee, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1269) granting a pension to James M. McKinney, late a second lieutenant of Company A, North Cumberland Battery, Kentucky State Militia, have examined the same and report:

"It appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that the said James M. McKinney was a second lieutenant Company A, North Cumberland Battery, Kentucky State Militia; that he was enlisted in 1864 in the military service and served until the summer of 1865; that he was never mustered into the service of the United States; that he was occupied in the military service in protecting the people and public property in Kentucky; that while so engaged he and a detachment under his command were captured by a detachment of Confederate soldiers; that he was taken from the place where he was captured some distance away; that a troop of United States cavalry followed this band of Confederate soldiers, came upon them, and during the fight which ensued Lieutenant McKinney, in attempting to escape from the enemy and come into the lines of the Union forces, was badly wounded, being shot in three places, one wound destroying an eye.

"The service of Lieutenant McKinney was meritorious, his loyalty is not questioned, and, as the committee is advised, his services were paid for by the Government.

"Under all the circumstances, the committee recommend that Lieutenant McKinney be granted the pension which the bill calls for, and recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. What is the amount provided for?

The CHAIRMAN. The ordinary amount which the law provides.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SALLIE H. MICHLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1546) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sallie M. Michler, widow of the late Bvt. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Michler, United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the pension of Mrs. Sallie M. Michler, widow of the late Bvt. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Michler, United States Army, to be increased from $90 per month, the rate she is now receiving, to $50 per month.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. There is a technical error in that bill. The name is reported as "Sallie M. Michler," and it should be "Sallie H." I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 4, after the word "Sallie," the initial "M." and inserting "H."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. And I move to make the same amendment in the title of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Is there a report in that case?

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1546) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sallie M. Michler, submit the following report:

Your committee adopts the report of the Senate committee upon this bill, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1546) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sallie Michler, have examined the same and report:

"Mrs. Michler is the widow of the late Bvt. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Michler, United States Army.

"The records of the War Department show that General Michler was in the regular service about forty years, during which he rendered uninterrupted and important service in topographical work. From the time of his graduation at the Military Academy to the commencement of the civil war he was constantly in the field engaged in work, for which he was selected on account of his professional skill and his fidelity to the duties assigned him. He was in the field as chief topographical engineer of the Department of the Cumberland to November 21, 1861; of the Department of the Ohio to March 11, 1862; of the Army of the Ohio to October 30, 1862, and of the Army of the Cumberland to June 1, 1863; en route to join the Army of the Potomac, he was captured near Rockville, Md., June 28, 1863, and paroled; on duty in the field with the Army of the Potomac to April, 1865; in charge of making surveys and maps of the operations of the armies about Petersburg and Richmond, Va., to March, 1867; in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia to June, 1871; en route to and at San Francisco, Cal., as engineer officer of the military division of the Pacific to July, 1872, and as engineer of the twelfth light-house district to September, 1873; at Portland, Oregon, in charge of defensive works and river improvements, and engineer of the thirteenth light-house district to December 27, 1878.

"In 1879 he was military attaché to the legation of the United States at Vienna, Austria. His last work was in charge of river and harbor improvements at New York City to date of the illness of which he died July 17, 1881.

"Under existing law the widow's allowance is limited to $30 a month. In the opinion of the committee it is a low rating for an officer's widow of his grade, especially when it is remembered that he gave a whole lifetime of useful and important service to his country, that he stood at the head of his profession in the Engineer Department, and that his widow is without means of support other than what she may be allowed as pension.

"There are so many precedents for increase that the committee does not hesitate to report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY E. BORKE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4427) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary E. Borke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary E. Borke, widow of Capt. Francis Borke, late captain of Company I, Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4427) granting a pension to Mary E. Borke, submit the following report:

This woman was a pensioner of the Government until 1886, when her name was dropped from the roll on the ground that she was guilty of adultery since the death of the soldier, and that a child was born as the fruit of such act. There is now in the record the testimony of several of her neighbors who swear that prior to this act of adultery and since her character for chastity was and is good, and she has expressed great regret at her own conduct, and that since the birth of said child she has kept no company with any male person, and she is now living a virtuous and honorable life. The witnesses further testify that her health is very poor and without means of a livelihood except her own labor, and that she is unable to labor.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass, and let the man who is without sin cast the first stone.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, I did not exactly understand from the reading of the report whether it referred to restoring some one to the pension-roll who had been guilty of some misconduct.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been ordered to be reported to the House favorably.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose, then, it was passed before I got the floor. It is never too late in a thin House like this, and I may have something to say about it when it comes up in the House.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIA BROOKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8604) granting a pension to Maria Brooks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Brooks, a nurse in the late war of the rebellion, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8604) granting a pension to Maria Brooks, submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence filed with the committee that the claimant was regularly commissioned as a nurse under Miss D. L. Dix in 1861, and was assigned to Fifth Street hospital, in St. Louis, Mo., and she continued in the service until the close of the war, being assigned to different hospitals. She discharged her duty faithfully and efficiently and she is held in the most grateful remembrance by her officers and those for whom she cared. It is further in evidence that this woman is now old, has no means of support but her own labor, and that she is too far advanced in age to labor, and is now supported by charity, having no friends or relations to care for her in her old age. We recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE P. HARTMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7473) for the relief of George P. Hartman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of George P. Hartman, Company I, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7473) granting a pension to George P. Hartman, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted June 16, 1863, and was discharged July 26, 1863. The basis of claim is inflammatory rheumatism contracted in the service.

The claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that there was no hospital record and the soldier was unable to show incurrence of injury according to rules of the Pension Office.

It is in evidence in the record by the soldier himself and S. F. Hartman that when the soldier enlisted he was a sound, healthy man, and that during the Gettysburg campaign the soldier was exposed to rain for three days, and was constantly wet during that time, and after that the soldier had rheumatism, and is still suffering with the same.

Other witnesses testify to the incurrence of the disability of the soldier, and the committee are of opinion that the soldier contracted rheumatism in the manner stated in the record, and that it has continued to grow worse, until now it is rated by the medical board of examining surgeons at second grade locomotor ataxy. We recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA HINDMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8167) granting a pension to Martha Hindman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Martha Hindman, widow of Daniel W. Hindman, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom said bill was referred, respectfully report: That Daniel W. Hindman enlisted December 3, 1861, in Company D, Fourteenth Michigan Infantry, for three years, and was discharged October 3, 1862, at Evansville, Ind., on surgeon's certificate of disability because of "phthisis pulmonalis, which he has been suffering from for several months; has night sweats, hectic fever, and muco-purulent expectoration, occasional hemorrhage."

He was treated in the field hospital near Corinth from June 1, 1862, to June 23, 1862, and at Evansville from July 3 to October 3, 1862. In December, 1862, he applied for a pension for phthisis pulmonalis, resulting from fever contracted in the service, which was rejected December 1, 1867, on account of claimant's failure to furnish the necessary proof to establish the same. He died March 24, 1865, nearly three years before his claim was rejected, and had been in very feeble health continuously from his discharge to the date of his death. He was married February 24, 1862, to his present widow, Martha Hindman.

Her health is very poor, so much so that for several years she has been unable to do any work except a little sewing and knitting, and requires the constant care of a physician, who calls three or four times a week, and for that she is dependent on the charity of her friends. She is unable to walk and is suffering from spinal disease and is entirely dependent on others for support and maintenance. A post mortem examination showed that the primary cause of her husband's death was disease of the liver, or "melanosis of the liver, stomach, and adjacent organs," and also of the right lung, resulting from disease of the liver. The proofs clearly show that he had the symptoms of both lung and liver disease. His family physician, who treated him almost continuously from 1864 to the time of his death, testifies:

"It was not till after two years of close observation that I became convinced that his principal disease was that of the liver instead of the lung, and that this organ was undergoing some pathological change. The attacks of colic were more frequent and the functions of the liver more and more interrupted. His skin became more yellow and at times of a dark and dusky hue."

And this testimony is corroborated by other reliable physicians. An examination by a surgeon, made April 27, 1863, showed that the upper lobes of both lungs were affected, giving positive evidence of diseased condition. This was less than two years before his death. Under these circumstances your committee feel warranted in finding that the disease which caused his death, whether of the lungs or liver, or both, was contracted in the service, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM RICHARDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7002) granting a pension to William Richardson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Richardson, late a private in Company K, First Ohio Artillery.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7002) granting a pension to William Richardson, submit the following report:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Fiftyeth Congress reported this case favorably to the House, which report this committee adopt as their report. It is as follows:

William Richardson, a private in Company K, First Regiment Ohio Light Battery, enlisted March 10, 1862, and was honorably discharged on the 14th of March, 1863, by reason of expiration of service. He applied for a pension in March, 1876, basing his claim upon the ground that he was wounded in the latter part of December, 1863, by a gunshot in the left side of the head from a gun in the hands of William Perkins, who was a member of his company and in a state of intoxication.

The claim was rejected June 2, 1877, on the ground that "the wound was not received in the line of duty."

The claimant makes affidavit to the following circumstances happening at the time of his injury:

"That he was on guard the day of the shooting, and was guard over a boy who was bucked and gagged; in the afternoon William Perkins wanted him to aid him to release the boy, and he refused to do so. After he was relieved Perkins wanted him to go and take the officers' whisky, and upon his refusing,

Perkins called him a damned coward. After he had gone to bed late in the evening Perkins again came to him and, having waked him, wanted him to go with him to take a demijohn from the officers' tent, who were then absent.

"Upon his refusal he said I was a damned coward and that he would kill me, and without further remark shot me. Perkins shot Sergeant Fairhurst of my company. I am unable to do manual labor."

A number of the privates of Company K testify that the shooting was done by Perkins without any apparent cause or provocation, and Perkins himself says: "I entered the tent where Richardson was in bed, and without any provocation fired my revolver at him, wounding him in the head; that he did this while maddened with liquor."

Some of the witnesses, when examined by a special agent of the Pension Bureau, testified that Richardson was teasing an old man, a member of the company, when Perkins interfered and shot him (referring to Private Quigley, then a member of the company). Private Quigley files his affidavit denying that he was present at the time of the shooting, and showing that he was then performing guard duty. And other witnesses, who previously testified to this fact, subsequently filed affidavits admitting that after having their recollections refreshed by conversation with their comrades they were satisfied that they had done the claimant an injustice, and that the time to which they referred was anterior to the date of the shooting.

On May 18, 1876, Dr. Isaac Scott, examining surgeon, certified to the Pension Bureau that—

"On examination of the applicant I find cicatrix showing scalp wound 2 inches in length on the crown of the head 1½ inches to the left of the sagittal suture and in line with it. Applicant states that a number of spicula of bone have come out since he received the wound, and he complains of pain in that side of the head, and giddiness, on stooping. In my opinion the said William Richardson is one-half totally incapacitated. The disability is probably permanent."

On November 9, 1880, George O. Hildreth, examining surgeon, certified to the bureau that—

"In my opinion the said William Richardson is three-eighths incapacitated; that the disability is permanent. The top of the head shows no cicatrix, but a groove or depression is felt in the left parietal bone about an inch from the line of the sagittal suture. It commences near the coronal suture and runs back about 2 inches, like a furrow. It seems to be two or three lines wide, the border or edge rather tender on pressure. He alleges a feeling of heat about the wound; pains extending front and back, irregular in character, and increased by stooping work and by heat of weather; occasional vertigo; results, as stated, of a raking revolver-wound of scalp and cranium."

This analysis of the testimony clearly establishes the existence of three facts:

First. That the claimant received a wound on left side of the head.

Second. That the wound so received was from a ball fired from a pistol in the hands of a comrade while under the influence of liquor, without provocation and while the claimant was in bed; and Third. That in the opinion of one examining surgeon his disability should be rated at one-half, and in the opinion of the other examining surgeon at three-eighths disability.

The record discloses another important fact as bearing upon the right of this claimant to a pension under the law as it existed, where it states the fact that Sergeant Fairhurst was pensioned for injury of the left knee, caused by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of Private Perkins. In the one case the injury was received at the hands of Private Perkins by the "accidental discharge" of his pistol, and in the other by the deliberate and unprovoked discharge of his pistol with intent to injure the claimant.

It is impossible for the committee to draw so fine a distinction as the Pension Bureau in these two cases. The committee is of opinion that Sergeant Fairhurst was properly pensioned, and that they are equally of opinion that the claimant, William Richardson, is entitled to be placed on the pension-roll.

Senate bill No. 1638 is therefore reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

And the committee, being satisfied with the justice of the claim of the said William Richardson, recommend that said bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. FLEMING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8226) granting a pension to James H. Fleming.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Fleming, of Company E, One hundred and fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8226) granting a pension to James H. Fleming, submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted August 11, 1862, and discharged June 3, 1865. Basis of claim, injury to knee in battle, which finally resulted in amputation of the leg. The claim was rejected in the Pension Department on the ground of want of connection of injury with any service.

The committee have carefully examined the record in this case, and find the following facts established: That the soldier was a sound and healthy man when he entered the service, and that he was a good soldier, as proven by his officers, and they also testify to his high character for truth and veracity. The soldier swears that in battle at Jonesboro, Ga., he was thrown and injured his knee, and the same gradually grew worse until he was compelled to submit to amputation, in 1886.

Several comrades testify that the soldier was sound and well when he went into the battle and that he complained of injury when he came out, and that he was lame ever since and continued to complain of the injury in the knee, and that the limb was finally amputated. There is no injury shown to this soldier except the one mentioned by the soldier, and the Department of Pensions evidently thought that as the leg was not amputated until twenty years after the injury it might be traced to some other cause than the injury in battle, but the committee fail to find any such testimony in the record, and in the absence of any testimony showing some other injury the committee think they are warranted in believing the soldier's sworn statement and his witnesses, and that his injury is due to his army service, and we therefore recommend that said bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH KEELY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8170) granting a pension to Elizabeth Keely.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Keely, mother of George D. Keely, late a private of Company G, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8170) granting a pension to Elizabeth Keely, submit the following report:

The claimant is the dependent mother of George D. Keely, who enlisted December 29, 1861, and was discharged July 15, 1865, and died December 22, 1877. The claim was rejected on the ground that the death of the soldier was not due to his army service. The testimony in this case is very voluminous, all of which has been examined by the committee, and the conclusion reached that this soldier was taken sick at Rienz, Miss., in 1862, with lung fever, from which he never recovered and of which he finally died. These facts are fully proven by a great number of witnesses.

There is some question in the record as to whether the soldier was ever married or not, some testimony tending to show he was, and a great deal of other testimony showing that he was not married, and one of the examiners states in his report that he is of opinion that the soldier was never married. No person has ever been found who claims to be the wife of the soldier, and it is now thirteen years since the death of the soldier, and no claim has ever been made for a pension as a widow of the soldier, and if he was ever married, and such wife had not been heard of for thirteen years, there would be a presumption of death. The dependence of the mother is fully proven and she is now very old, and the bill is reported back with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH BURNETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4513) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burnett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Burnett, of Gallatin County, Illinois, late a nurse in the Fifty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers during the late rebellion, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4513) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burnett, submit the following report:

The evidence in this case shows that the claimant, Elizabeth Burnett, was enrolled as a matron of the Fifty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Infantry April, 1862, in the name of Elizabeth Bradberry, and served faithfully as a nurse in the hospital and in the field until the fall of 1864. That she was sick considerably during her service as nurse, and that her health is very poor at this time.

Your committee are satisfied from the evidence that the present bad health of the claimant is due in part, at least, to her army service, and they report the bill back with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. SMAIL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5348) to place the name of Sarah A. Smail upon the pension-roll and grant her a pension of $25 per month.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sarah A. Smail, blind and dependent sister of James H. Smail, deceased, late a private in Company B, Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteers (and who was killed in battle at Iuka, in the State of Mississippi, on or about September 19, 1862) be, and she is hereby, placed upon the pension-roll and granted a pension of $25 per month during her natural life.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5348) granting a pension to Sarah A. Smail, submit the following report:

The claimant is a dependent sister of James H. Smail, deceased, who was killed in battle at Iuka, Miss., September 19, 1862. The mother of the soldier drew a pension in her lifetime on account of the death of the soldier, but she is now dead and no pension is being paid by the Government on account of the death of the soldier, he having left no widow or children. The claimant is now forty-four years of age and totally blind. She was depending on her brother for support in his lifetime, and she has no means of support, but is depending on charity for a livelihood.

We recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "pension" in line 8 to the end of the bill, and insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Also, amend the title so as to read: "A bill to place the name of Sarah A. Smail upon the pension-roll."

Mr. HILL. As I caught the reading of the report, this is a case of a sister of a deceased soldier, and I think that the amendment recommended by the committee was to strike out $25 and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." I would like to inquire if there is a general law making provision for dependent sisters? I am not aware of any.

Mr. MORRILL. There is such a provision, and I will find the law.

Mr. LANE. I will make the motion to pay her a pension at the rate of $18 a month, which is the same as the law in such cases.

Mr. HILL. I would like to know if there is any precedent for pensioning sisters of deceased soldiers?

Mr. MORRILL. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that quite a number have been pensioned by special act. Frequently where the sister was dependent upon the brother who was killed in battle they are pensioned.

Mr. HILL. But there is no provision under the general law.

Mr. MORRILL. I think there is, and I am trying to find it now for the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. I have no recollection of such a provision.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I know there is such a provision of law, for I have prosecuted cases of that kind before the Department.

Mr. CHEADLE. I would like to hear the amendment of the committee read again.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee, and it was rejected.

Mr. LANE. I now move to amend by inserting to pay her a pension at the rate of $18 a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Why fix it at a rate higher than the widow of a soldier?

Mr. LANE. Because she is blind.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Well, if she is blind I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. HILL. Before that motion is put, I would like to inquire of the promoter of the bill, whoever he may be, what evidence has been adduced before this House that she was dependent upon the deceased soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman who introduced the bill is not in the House.

Mr. LANE. It appears in the report that she was dependent on this brother, and that she is blind.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Would the blind widow of a soldier receive any more under that general law?

Mr. LANE. No, not necessarily; but we have been allowing $18 a month to decrepit children.

Mr. MORRILL. That is only in cases where a guardian is required, and the extra amount is to meet the expense of the guardian. I think this had better remain as the committee recommend.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment recommended by the committee was rejected.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much confusion that I ask to have the bill read again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the amendment fixing this at $12 a month was voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the amendment recommended by the committee was voted down. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] to make the amount $18 a month.

The question was taken; and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment recommended by the committee was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman made his motion the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] was pending.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. LANE; and there were—ayes 27, noes 7.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire whether the report shows that this sister was dependent? We do not know but what she may be worth $20,000, so far as any information we have here goes.

The CHAIRMAN. The report has been read twice; but if the gentleman demands it, it will be read again.

Mr. LANE. The report shows that she is wholly dependent and that she is blind.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee briefly to the ridiculous position in which we shall be placed if we adopt this amendment. Under the existing law the blind widow of one of our dead comrades receives $12 a month; but it is proposed here to give to the blind sister of this dead soldier $18 a month. Now, we ought to be just, and there ought to be uniformity in these pensions. Unless there is uniformity in these pensions there will be such an outcry raised by the people that the whole pension system will be endangered.

Mr. PICKLER. Why should not all these cases be referred to the general law?

Mr. CHEADLE. Because there is no general law applicable to a dependent sister over sixteen years of age. But we ought to be governed by a general principle which will be applicable to every case that comes up for consideration, the principle of giving a fixed rating for a certain disability. Then let us apply that rating to any given state of facts in any given case. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] will accept the amendment, and let the amount be fixed at $12 per month.

Mr. LANE. I will accept whatever the majority of this Committee of the Whole says is right. That is what I will accept. Now, if the gentleman from Iowa wants to make the point of no quorum, let him do it.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I think we ought to be fair and just in these matters, and I believe that to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois would be setting a dangerous precedent.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I think the bill ought to have been passed putting this claimant on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law.

Mr. LANE. This case would not be reached by the general law.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. So I understand. It ought not to have come here, then. We ought not to set precedents of this kind.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, we are setting precedents every pension night. If this case were controlled by the general pension law it would not be here before us for special legislation. But I think there is great force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE], that there is no reason why this blind dependent sister should have any more than a blind dependent widow would receive, and consequently I think the amount in this case ought to be made $12 a month instead of $18.

Mr. LANE. I am willing to accept the sense of the majority of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] fixing the rate at $18 a month, the ayes are 27 and the noes 7.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that that vote be reconsidered.

Mr. LANE. I object to that, but I am willing that the vote shall be taken over again.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the vote be reconsidered. I voted in the affirmative.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest a way out of this difficulty. If a bill were pending here granting a pension to a widow and it appeared from the report that she was totally blind, according to my judgment and my recollection there would be found a number of precedents, a number of bills passed by Congress and approved by the Executive, granting pensions to widows who were in extreme necessity or were blind or were crippled, and if you put this case upon the same basis as that of a widow in a like situation, I am sure that this House would vote to make the amount not merely $18 but $25 or $30 a month.

Mr. PETERS. If this were a bill to pension a widow who was blind and unable to make proof at the Pension Department, as required by law, the terms of the bill would be that she is granted a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, which would give her $12 a month. Certainly there is no reason why this case should be made an exception in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion to reconsider. The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BLISS. I now move to amend so as to make this pension $12 a month.

Mr. HILL. It seems to me this kind of legislation is of very doubtful wisdom or expediency, especially upon the showing made by this bill and report. The report does not show the extent of the dependency, or how it arose, or by what facts the committee were governed in saying that this sister was dependent upon the soldier. We have the bare, bald statement that she is blind and dependent. I think we ought to have something more than that as a basis for our action if we are going to step as far outside of our ordinary pension legislation as we are asked to do in this case. There ought to appear in the report some facts beyond what we find calling for the exercise of such a discretion.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I feel that to reduce the pension in this case to $12 a month would be a wrong. I know that within the last two years this House has passed a bill giving $18 a month to a totally blind child of a soldier of my district, and another bill giving $18 a month to the helpless child of a soldier. Now here is the sister of a soldier, who was dependent upon him. If we should regard his feelings in any way, we should recognize that sister as being just as near to him as his child would be. She is in a condition of complete helplessness.

I see no force in the suggestion that the report does not set forth in detail the evidence upon which this claim has been reported. The committee has found that this girl was dependent upon the soldier; that she is blind—

Mr. MORRILL. Let me interrupt the gentleman long enough to say that nothing of that kind was sworn in the committee. The evidence shows that the soldier when killed in battle left a mother, who, years after the child had passed sixteen years of age, drew the pension. Under any general law or under any rule we have adopted this sister has no claim whatever.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Admit that that may be true; I was going by the language of the report, which speaks of the "blind dependent sister" of the soldier.

Mr. MORRILL. Not dependent on the soldier, but dependent on charity.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Now, while the case here is that of a girl totally blind, as I understand from the report, and necessarily requiring the care of another person all the time, you propose to give her a pension on account of the service of her brother and to give her but $12 a month, which is a mere pittance, entirely insufficient to provide for her support, while in other cases where the pension has rested upon precisely similar reasons $18 or $25 a month have been given. If we are to have uniformity let us go up to a point where the pension amounts to something to the beneficiary, as we have done in other cases, rather than go down to a point where the pension amounts to not much more than starvation.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Chairman, if I understood correctly the reading of the report in this case it did show that this sister was in the lifetime of the soldier dependent upon him and supported by him.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no.

Mr. PARRETT. Let us have the report read; that will settle it.

A MEMBER. It has been read twice.

Mr. PARRETT. As I understood the reading of the report, this girl was dependent upon her brother while he was living. It may be true that the mother during her lifetime received the pension, for there could not be two pensions granted on account of the services of the one soldier.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Did the gentleman hear the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. MORRILL] a moment ago?

Mr. PARRETT. I heard the reading of the report. Let it be read again, and let us see whether it does not say that she was dependent upon her brother during his lifetime.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. But we have the statement of the gentleman from Kansas who heard the testimony in the committee.

Mr. PARRETT. If the chairman of the committee says that this girl was not dependent on her brother during his lifetime, I will accept that as a proper interpretation of the report. But if he does not so state, I insist that the report shows that during the lifetime of the soldier she was dependent upon him. His mother, of course, during her lifetime received the pension. The mother has died, and there is now no pension granted on account of the service of this soldier. This sister is blind; and by all the rules of nature and of right, she having been dependent upon her brother, her case appeals to the common justice and humanity of this House as much as any case that has been presented since I have been a member. [Applause.]

Mr. LANE. I will ask that the report be read in my time. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] did not prepare the report, and perhaps does not fully understand what the facts are.

The report was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Chair proceeded to put the question.

Mr. BLISS. Let the amendment be stated so that it will be understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to strike out "$25" and insert "$12" in lieu thereof.

Mr. LANE. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 17.

So the amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BISHOP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8595) for the relief of William Bishop.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to place the name of William M. Bishop, late a private in Company E, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8595) granting a pension to William M. Bishop, submit the following report:

This case was considered and passed both Houses of the Forty-ninth Congress but failed to receive the President's signature, and the following report was made thereon, which this committee adopt as their report, as follows:

"That claimant enlisted in the Seventy-ninth Indiana Volunteers on March 25, 1865, to serve one year. On April 3, ten days after enlistment, he was admitted to post hospital, Camp Carrington, Indianapolis, Ind., with measles, which continued six weeks, and resulted in disease of eyes and weakness of the spinal column.

"His claim for pension was rejected on the ground that measles were contracted before service, the medical referee of the Pension Office claiming that the disease must have been well advanced so that the diagnosis could be made at the time—i. e., April 3, ten days after enlistment.

"Claimant swears that he was under military orders for several days in the barracks at Terre Haute, Ind., prior to enlistment at Indianapolis, where he alleges he caught the measles.

Dr. Martin Flenner testifies:

"That he knew of his own personal knowledge that at the date of and prior to enlistment claimant was free from diseased eyes and spinal column. He is positive of claimant's prior soundness, as he was his family physician, and claimant worked as a laborer for him for several years."

Theodore Barnes testifies:

"I formed the acquaintance of William Bishop about the 20th day of March, 1865. While in camp at Indianapolis, Bishop was taken sick with measles, and I helped to carry him to the hospital on or about the 5th day of April, 1865. I was soon after taken down with the measles, and was placed in the same ward and in the same bed with claimant, and know that said disease affected his eyes. I saw him just after he came out of the hospital, and his ears were discharging matter and his eyes were sore."

Nelson Shaffner testifies:

"That he was intimately acquainted with claimant for ten years prior to enlistment, and he was apparently free from all diseases. Is positive his eyes were perfectly sound. Has known him well since his discharge, and noticed that claimant was troubled with some disease of the eyes up to 1872, when he moved from claimant's town."

"A number of affidavits are on file among the papers in the case, which show that the claimant's eyes were sore at the time of his discharge and continue sore to the present time, the board of examining surgeons rating him one-eighth disabled for manual labor by reason of granulation of both upper eye-lids and conjunctivitis of same.

"Your committee believe that the claimant contracted measles after enlistment, notwithstanding the opinion rendered by the medical referee, and report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass."

But that the same be amended by adding M. after the word William and before Bishop where the same occurs in the bill, and also in the title thereof.

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN DE WITT CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4296) granting a pension to John De Witt Clark.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John De Witt Clark, late of Company E, Nineteenth Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. TURNER, of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4296) granting a pension to John De Witt Clark, submit the following report: That claimant was a corporal in Company E, Nineteenth New York Volunteers, and that on or about the last day of July, 1862, while stationed at Fort Delaware, he was pushed from an embankment while cleaning his gun, and sustained an injury to his hip from which he has suffered ever since, and that by the said fall a slight rupture or hernia, from which he had suffered before, was made much worse.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the injury was not incurred in line of duty. All the evidence in the case is that of claimant, Gardner B. Havens, and John W. Jogger; Havens corroborates the claimant throughout, but Jogger says he understood the claimant was injured while wrestling. This claimant denies. Special Examiner Brown calls attention to "the plain and simple story of soldier;" says he is "impressed with its truth."

In view of the foregoing and the excellent character of claimant, your committee believe the claimant should have benefit of doubt, and recommend the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 168) granting a pension to William Gardner.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Gardner, late of Company A, First Regiment California Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TURNER, of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 168) granting a pension to William Gardner, submit the following report:

That this bill passed the Senate, and the report drawn by Senator Paddock is herewith annexed, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 356, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 168) granting a pension to William Gardner, have examined the same and report:

In this case pension is claimed for injury of spine received by the kick of a mule at Fort Craig, New Mexico, February 21, 1862, while claimant was in the line of his military duty, having charge of the ammunition-wagon.

The records of the War Department show that claimant enlisted October 3, 1864, in Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, and served until August 3, 1864; that he re-enlisted as a private in Company A, First Regiment California Volunteer Infantry, January 1, 1865, and was mustered out of the service January 31, 1866.

In affidavit filed October 27, 1887, claimant states that after diligent inquiry he is unable to ascertain the whereabouts of the officers of his company.

In affidavit filed June 11, 1888, Conrad Shoemaker, a comrade, testified that claimant was kicked by a mule while in charge of the ammunition-wagon, crossing the Rio Grande River, in 1862. This testimony is substantiated by Comrade Frank Billain, who was also an eye-witness to the occurrence of the injury to claimant's spine.

The continuance of said injury is shown by the testimony of A. J. Thomas, C. W. Grover, jr., Wickliff Lemon, and twelve other citizens of the State of Nevada.

Claimant is now suffering from total disability, as is shown by the medical examination made through the Bureau of Pensions, October 18, 1889.

The evidence shows that the claim is meritorious, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HILL. I would like to inquire how much that bill carries.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount provided by the general law.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. It is subject to the provisions and limitations of the general law.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM KARGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8060) for the relief of William Karger.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Karger, a sailor in the United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. TURNER, of New York) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8060) granting a pension to William Karger, submit the following report:

That the claimant served as a landsman on the steam-ship Susquehanna from June 10, 1864, until July 14, 1865. The claimant has no record of sickness while in service.

He swears that he suffered from lameness that he called rheumatism ever after he was discharged, which grew much worse in 1863, and developed into locomotor ataxy. In 1870 he was admitted into the German Hospital in Philadelphia, and later into the Hebrew Hospital in the same place. At this time his eyes became affected and he became totally blind.

There is no doubt that he now is, and for many years has been, totally blind, and is unable to stand by reason of the locomotor ataxy above mentioned. The Pension Office rejected his claim in 1887 on the ground of insufficient evidence of origin of disability. The case was examined by five special examiners, three of whom think there is merit in the case, and all of whom report the character of the claimant good. There is no doubt of the truth of claimant's story as to his increasing disability in the years 1868, 1869, and 1870, as he has medical evidence in point.

The claimant also shows conclusively prior soundness and great bodily vigor before enlistment; and Dr. M. Allen Starr, an eminent specialist, of New York, says this disease, locomotor ataxy, usually results from exposure and is slow in development. The claimant's occupation being that of a barber, it would be likely that he incurred same in service.

Dr. Ottoman, of Carbondale, Pa., testifies that he treated claimant soon after his discharge for rheumatism.

In view of the foregoing your committee believe that the claimant probably incurred his disability in the service, and, as the claimant is now sixty years old and poor and has been for nearly twenty years totally blind, they believe any doubt there may be should not debar him from needed relief.

Amended by inserting "and pay him a pension at $40 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY RARDEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7915) granting a pension to Nancy Rarden.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Rarden, widow of Lewis P. Rarden, late a private in Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7915) granting a pension to Nancy Rarden, submit the following report:

We find that the evidence herein establishes these facts, to wit:

Nancy Rarden, the applicant, is the widow of Lewis P. Rarden, deceased, late a private of Company C, Thirteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in the war for the Union, and was married to him on the 5th day of July, 1854, bearing him four children, born, respectively, on December 19, 1856, December 21, 1858, November 18, 1871, and (Maggie) May 23, 1875.

Said Lewis P. Rarden enlisted in said company on February 17, 1864, at Shelbyville, Ind.; was mustered in at Indianapolis on April 6, 1864; was wounded accidentally and without his fault on May 20, 1864, at the battle of Bermuda Hundred, for which he was treated in the army hospital. The evidence further shows that he contracted sore eyes during his service and without his fault, and that he was discharged for disability November 23, 1864. As a result of his wound his middle finger on his left hand was amputated.

When he was discharged his left hand was almost useless on account of his wound and his sight was greatly impaired, and he finally became almost blind, although sound of sight and limb when he enlisted. He was granted a pension November 10, 1870, for said wound, at $6 per month, which was increased July 31, 1871, to $8 per month for same disability, and on application by him on account of said disease of eyes his pension was increased to $14 per month on March 3, 1873.

The evidence of reputable witnesses, on file in the Pension Office, including the verdict of the coroner who held an inquest on the body of the decedent, shows that on March 23, 1879, while the decedent was upon the usually traveled road, on legitimate business, duly sober, in broad daylight, he accidentally fell into a pool of water by the said road, near Brookville, Ind., and near his home, and was drowned.

At the time of and long previous to his death he was almost blind as the result of his army service, and the presumption is that because of his blindness he missed the road and fell into the water and was drowned in a pool of water called the "Hydraulic."

Applicant's claim for pension was rejected January 12, 1883, on the ground "that soldier's death from drowning was not a result of his military service," a conclusion in which this committee does not concur.

Applicant is now fifty-six years of age, has been almost in want ever since and before her husband's death, has supported said minor daughter, Maggie, who will not be sixteen years of age until May 23, 1891, and is entitled, in the opinion of this committee, to be granted a pension, as asked in the bill, the passage of which we recommend.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ANGELINE GREENE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5099) for the relief of Mrs. Angeline Greene.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Angeline Greene, dependent mother of Edwin Spurgin, late of Company C, Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, Alexander Greene, of Company C, Seventy-third Indiana Volunteers, and Allen Greene, of Company D of the Sixty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, and William Greene, of Company C of the Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, and Alfred Greene, of Company M of Twenty-first Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5099) for the relief of Mrs. Angeline Greene, submit the following report:

The proposed beneficiary is the mother of six sons, five of whom served in the Union Army during the war.

Edwin served in Company I, Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteers; is now almost totally blind, and has a family dependent upon him. Alexander was a member of the Seventy-third Indiana Volunteers, and was wounded in action, and is poor, with a large family to maintain.

Allen Greene, while serving as private in Company D, Sixty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, died, leaving a widow, who drew a pension for a few years and remarried, and since died. William Greene served in Company C, Twenty-seventh Indiana, lost an arm, and also has a large family to provide for. Alfred Greene was a member of the Twenty-first Indiana Volunteers, is almost totally blind, and likewise the head of a family.

The other son is a cripple and has been so from childhood. Claimant's husband has been dead these many years. She has no property nor income from any source except that received from her own labor, taking in washing, which at the age of seventy years she should no longer be required to do.

Having given five sons to her country's service, and being now old and poor, her prayer for relief at the hands of Congress should, in the opinion of your committee, meet with prompt and favorable response, and the accompanying bill is therefore returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANN DOWNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8927) granting a pension to Ann Downey.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Downey, widow of Thomas Downey, late sergeant of Company I, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8927) granting a pension to Ann Downey, submit the following report:

Ann Downey is the widow of Thomas Downey, whom the records of the War Department show to have served in Company F, First United States Infantry, from May 24, 1849, to June 26, 1852; in Company C, Seventh United States Infantry, from January 9, 1853, to May 22, 1864, when transferred to Company D, Fifth Infantry, and discharged November 9, 1865.

The records again show that he re-enlisted July 7, 1866, in Company C, Seventh United States Infantry, was discharged July 7, 1869, and re-enlisted in Company I, Seventh United States Infantry, July 7, 1869, and was discharged November 21, 1872, on surgeon's certificate of disability, by reason of impairment of motion of right arm, resulting from fractured clavicle.

The records also show that he was treated in hospital in June, 1870, on account of cholera morbus; in August, 1870, on account of contusion, and in March, 1872, for chronic rheumatism.

Mr. Downey applied for and was granted a pension on account of fracture of clavicle and gunshot wound of left hand.

Four years after his discharge, namely, on October 8, 1876, the soldier died of cancer of the stomach.

On March 3, 1877, Mrs. Downey applied for pension, alleging that the soldier's death was due to the injuries for which he was pensioned, and in support of her claim filed medical and lay evidence showing that upon the soldier's return home from the Army he complained of pain in the stomach, continued to complain, and finally died, as above stated, of cancer of the stomach.

In August, 1877, the Pension Office rejected the claim of Mrs. Downey on the ground that "the evidence is not sufficient to show that the soldier's death caused originated in the service."

Considering the length of the soldier's service, sixteen years, the medical evidence filed as to his condition soon after discharge, and the fact of development and final death from cancerous disease of stomach, it seems more reasonable to your committee that the long service rather than the four years of civil life following thereupon should be accepted as the responsible agent of the fatal disease. Besides, the widow has no means of support except that derived from her daily labor, and being well advanced in years the income therefrom is insufficient to afford her a comfortable maintenance.

Your committee, believing that the facts in the case warrant favorable consideration of the accompanying bill, return the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALICE NICHOLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1282) granting a pension to Alice Nichols.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alice Nichols, mother of Hanson Nichols, late a corporal in Company B, Seventh Regiment United States Colored Troops.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1282) granting a pension to Alice Nichols, have had the same under consideration and recommend the passage of the bill, adopting the Senate report, No. 583, as our own, which is in the following words, to wit:

Original mother's pension claim, No. 246731, of Alice Nichols, as mother of Hanson Nichols, corporal in Company B, Seventh Regiment United States Colored Troops. (Enlisted September 23, 1863; died in hospital at Camp Stanton, Maryland, January 21, 1864.)

This claim was rejected September 25, 1882, on the ground that Henry Nichols, husband of Alice Nichols, was able to render her support at the time of the soldier's death, and that the soldier did not contribute to her support before or during the war.

About the 1st day of June, 1889, affidavits were filed by claimant, one made by Sydney C. Long, esq., and one by Emile S. Sprague, which showed that at the date of soldier's death (January 21, 1864), Henry Nichols was a slave, and thus, by the position taken by the Pension Bureau, was incapable of rendering support to the claimant, Alice Nichols.

As to the position assumed in the matter of the ability of Hanson Nichols to render such support and his willingness to do so, and as grounds upon which claimant has relied to a great extent for the granting of a pension, and most if not all of which have been proven and set forth in different affidavits during the progress of this case, the following facts are recited, which may be necessary in comprehending the case fully:

At the time of the birth of the soldier, Hanson Nichols (about 1843), Alice Nichols, his mother, seems to have been the slave of one Susan Ann Banning, who lived not far from the town of Easton, in Talbot County, Maryland. Upon the death of Susan Ann Banning, some years subsequently to this, by the will of Susan A. Banning Alice Nichols was manumitted, while the boy Hanson, by the same means, became the property of her (Susan's) sister, Maria Banning, who lived about 3 miles from Easton. Hanson seems to have remained the property of Maria Banning until his enlistment, though some years before the late war Maria Banning had removed to Baltimore, with her brother, Alexander Banning, and continued to reside in Baltimore.

After the removal of said Maria Banning to Baltimore, Hanson was hired out to different parties in the eastern part of Maryland, first to one Kirby, but at the time of his enlistment he is said to have been in the employ of Alexander Townsend. From this service Hanson seems to have run away, in the fall of 1863, and enlisted in the United States service.

During some years prior to his enlistment said Hanson was in the habit of cultivating a portion of the ground belonging to his grandfather, Jessie Gladden, a free colored man who owned a few acres of land near there, and from this cultivation, as well as from other sources, he was able to, and did, often send to his mother various quantities, and aggregating in all a very large quantity of vegetables, meats, oysters, etc., and which were used in the support of said Alice Nichols.

Some years prior to the late war, after she became free, Alice Nichols removed to Baltimore and continued to reside there, much of the time in the employ of Mr. Elisha R. Sprague (who afterward purchased and brought to Baltimore Henry Nichols, her husband). She has continued to reside in Baltimore since then.

While it seems to be a fact that Hanson did not after his enlistment contribute to the support of his mother, there are letters on file with the Commissioner of Pensions in this case which were written by Hanson while in the Army, to his mother, in which he expressed his willingness and obligation to render her support, and promising to send her money for her support so soon as he should have it to send; and other evidence has been filed—for instance in the affidavit of Laura Cowherd and Lina Taylor, filed in this case about the 1st of June, 1889—showing the affectionate nature of Hanson toward his mother and his evident anxiety to render her support whenever he was able to do so.

In this connection it should not be forgotten that Hanson lived but a short time after his enlistment and consequent ability to render her any considerable support—which the contributions from him while in slavery do not seem to be considered by the Pension Bureau. That at all times prior to his death he had always shown a great and earnest desire to assist her, and did assist her to the full extent of his ability.

As to the technicality upon which this case seems to have been rejected, i. e., the fact that the mother was not dependent upon him for support at the time of the soldier's death, from the fact that he could not render her support while a slave, and that he did not contribute to her support after he was, technically, in a position to do so—it would really seem that the fact is far outweighed by the evidence that has been submitted showing his recognition of her dependence upon him, and his evident anxiety to support her and promises to do so, and by the fact that while she was at that time enabled to keep body and soul together by her own exertions—that is, she was not permitted to starve by those who knew her—she had no one but Hanson to render her assistance (her husband having remained in slavery till November, 1864).

If she was dependent upon any one on the 21st day of January, 1864, she was dependent upon her son Hanson, and there seems to be nothing but the bare technicality of his having been a slave prior to his enlistment to urge against the allegation of her dependence upon him. Every circumstance, every scrap of evidence adduced, tends to show that he was her dependence and that he recognized that dependence and rendered her all the assistance in his power, with profuse promises of future support.

Had Hanson lived until November 1, 1864, when all slaves in Maryland were made free, it would seem that this technical objection would have been removed, he would not then have been a slave; and there is no reason to doubt that long ere that time had arrived he would have contributed largely toward her support had not his patriotism and self-sacrificing ardor induced him to throw away his life thus early; that is, some nine months earlier than he should have done to insure the future support of his mother, for had he survived a little more than nine months longer the objection or ground upon which the claim was rejected could not have been urged.

Most assuredly her "future support" was dependent upon him, even if her then present dependence upon him was not established. But has not her dependence at that time been established? Was Hanson a slave and thus unable to render his mother support, at least in part at that time? Even if he was a slave he was earning money, and he had promised to expend at least part of that money in contributing toward her support.

The statute upon which the Commissioner of Pensions must have relied for basing his decision must have been a clause contained in section 4707 of the Revised Statutes. The language there used is substantially this: If the soldier "has left or shall leave other relative or relatives who were dependent upon him for support in whole or in part at the date of his death, such relative or relatives shall be entitled, in the following order of precedence, to receive the same pension as such person would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled," etc.

Whether the claimant was dependent in whole or in part upon this soldier, at the date of his death, seems to be the point at issue. He certainly had been her partial support for some years prior to his death, and all our information tends to show that his contributions toward her support were gauged solely by his ability to render support; also, that his contributions would not only have continued, had he lived, but that his contributions would have been much larger in future. He had contributed all in his power, and that Hanson promised her money, in one or more letters which he wrote her during his service in the Army, was positively stated in a communication by the claimant, filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions in this case, about June 1, 1889.

This statement was not sworn to—partly for the reason that it contained very little matter that had not already been filed in this case; for instance, when referring to these letters, it referred to them as having been filed in this case some years since—and partly because the claimant was not able to leave her bed, and being in destitute circumstances it was not deemed advisable to go to the expense of bringing an officer to the house to take her affidavit. No objection has been urged to this statement because it was not made under oath, so far as we are informed.

While Alice Nichols seems to be the beneficiary named in this application, her husband, Henry Nichols, is utterly helpless, and thus, in a manner, one of the beneficiaries intended to be benefited by this claim. He is now nearly, if not quite, eighty years of age. Had not his support, which would have been vouchsafed him by his former owners had he still remained in slavery, been taken away from him, he would not have been in his present utterly destitute condition. That support having been taken away by the same fortune that deprived this old couple of the support of their son, does it not seem reasonable that their present condition of utter destitution should be relieved by the author of that deprivation?

The passage of the bill is recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BARTON P. SPENCER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5102) for the relief of Barton P. Spencer.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Barton P. Spencer, late of Company —, Seventh California Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5102) for the relief of Barton P. Spencer, submit the following report:

From the records of the War Department it appears that Mr. Spencer enlisted in Company G, First California Volunteers, on August 19, 1861, and was mustered out at Fort Craig, New Mexico, August 31, 1864; also that he was treated in January, 1863, on account of "hemorrhoids and rheumatism;" in March, 1863, for five days on account of constipation; in August, 1863, at post hospital, Las Cruces, N. Mex., on account of punctured wound, and in September, 1864, for tonsillitis.

On October 23, 1884, he filed a claim for pension on account of wounds of head, received at La Mesilla, N. Mex., about July 8, 1863, while arresting a Mexican; also on account of rheumatism and nervous prostration, contracted near Fort Craig, N. Mex., about July, 1863.

He informed the Pension Bureau that he must rely upon the records of the War Department for proof of origin of his disabilities, being unable to find any comrades, as his company, which was raised in California, represented men from nineteen States.

He was examined January 21, 1885, by the Mitchell (Ind.) board of surgeons, who found three cicatrices on right side of back of neck and on top of head, and also disease of heart, for which disabilities he is rated at $6 per month.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on March 12, 1888, on the ground of failure after a reasonable time to furnish the necessary evidence to establish his claim.

He has since filed the testimony of two neighbors stating that he is physically disabled one-half of the time from causes unknown to them.

The records of the War Department, as before mentioned, bear out Mr. Spencer's allegations as to the "wound and rheumatism," and had he proved continuance of rheumatism since discharge his claim would have to be admitted by the Pension Office, as the heart disease found is usually accepted by that office as a pathological sequel of rheumatism.

Your committee believe that the claim is a just and meritorious one, and recommend that the bill be passed, amending the same, however, by inserting, in the sixth line, after the word Company, the letter "G," and by striking out, in the same line, the word "Seventh" and inserting instead the word "First."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Barton P. Spencer."

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PERKINS having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar, under the rule, had instructed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

HOUSE BILLS ENGROSSED AND READ THE THIRD TIME.

Bills of the House of the following titles, severally reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time:

A bill (H. R. 4427) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary E. Borke;

A bill (H. R. 8604) granting a pension to Maria Brooks;

A bill (H. R. 7473) for the relief of George P. Hartman;

A bill (H. R. 8167) granting a pension to Martha Hindman;

A bill (H. R. 7002) granting a pension to William Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 8226) granting a pension to James H. Fleming;

A bill (H. R. 8170) granting a pension to Elizabeth Keely;

A bill (H. R. 4513) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burnett;

A bill (H. R. 7915) granting a pension to Nancy Rarden;

A bill (H. R. 5099) for the relief Mrs. Angeline Greene; and

A bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to Ann Downey.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask that these bills be made the special order for Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, with the right to thirty minutes' debate, and amendment on each bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that these bills be made the special order for Monday morning, that the previous question be considered as ordered upon the passage of the bills, and that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday morning they be brought up for consideration with the right to thirty minutes' debate upon each bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question is on the passage of the bills. Without objection the bills will be considered as passed. [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, have these bills been submitted to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They were, and were passed.

Mr. ENLOE. They were not submitted to the House. You did not submit them to a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair said that without objection the bills would be passed, and there was no objection made.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late now.

Mr. ENLOE. It is not too late. I say the Chair did not submit the bills to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The RECORD will show what the Chair said, and the Chair attempted to speak very distinctly, so that there could be no misunderstanding. The Chair said that the bills would be engrossed and read a third time, and that without objection the bills would be considered as passed. The Chair waited, and there was no objection, and then the Chair stated as there was no objection it would be so ordered.

Mr. ENLOE. The Chair said it so quickly that it did not give me an opportunity to make an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not attempt or desire to do so.

Mr. ENLOE. Very well; that is all right, Mr. Speaker; I will be in time for the balance of them.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were taken up, the amendments concurred in, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time:

A bill (H. R. 8060) for the relief of William Karger;

A bill (H. R. 8595) for the relief of William Bishop;

A bill (H. R. 5348) to place the name of Sarah A. Smail upon the pension-roll and grant her a pension of $25 per month; and

A bill (H. R. 5102) for the relief of Boston P. Spencer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments recommended by the committee to these bills. Without objection, the bills will be considered as agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bills. Without objection, the bills will be considered as engrossed and read the third time. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The question is on the passage of the bills.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to have a vote on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee the previous question may be considered as ordered upon the passage of the bills, and the bills laid aside temporarily.

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir; I do not consent to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman consent that the bills may be laid aside temporarily?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills will be laid aside temporarily, and the Clerk will report the Senate bills.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were ordered to a third reading, and were accordingly read the third time:

A bill (S. 255) granting a pension to Louisa V. Kilpatrick, widow of Maj. Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, United States Volunteers;

A bill (S. 1813) granting an increase of pension to Florida G. Casey;

A bill (S. 1269) granting a pension to James M. McKinney;

A bill (S. 168) granting a pension to William Gardner; and

A bill (S. 1282) granting a pension to Alice Nichols.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bills. Without objection, the bills will be considered read the third time. On the first two bills it was agreed that the previous question might be considered as ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, and with the understanding, which I have reduced to writing—if I am in error the gentleman from Indiana will correct me—

That by unanimous consent the previous question be considered as ordered on the passage of the bills, and that when the bills shall be considered in the House there shall be the right to offer amendments, and with the right to one and one-half hours' debate; the time to be equally divided for and against the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does that pertain to the two bills?

Mr. PAYSON. The two bills; the Casey bill and the Kilpatrick bill.

Mr. ENLOE. What day are they to be brought up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any time that they can be brought up.

Mr. CHEADLE. Is that with reference to one bill or the two bills?

Mr. PAYSON. Both bills.

Mr. ENLOE. I shall insist upon the gentleman naming a day.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. The point the gentleman desires to make can be made against some of these other bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. ENLOE. I insist that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] shall name a day.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, because in case a day should be named there seems to be a dispute among the parliamentarians with reference to the effect of it.

It is claimed that if a day should be especially named, and then in case the day should be occupied with other business, that the order exhausts itself and nobody knows when the bills might be considered. I do not express an opinion at this time, because it is not the time to discuss a parliamentary point like that.

Mr. ENLOE. Then make an exception of Friday.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope that will not be insisted upon.

Mr. ENLOE. I insist upon it.

Mr. PAYSON. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that the bills shall not be called up on Friday, if he so desires.

Mr. ENLOE. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], as well as the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER], request unanimous consent that the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Illinois be agreed upon as to these bills. Without objection it will be so ordered, with the understanding that these bills are not to be brought up for consideration on Friday.

Mr. PAYSON. I will agree to that. The gentleman will take my statement, of course.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. The hour and a half debate is on the Kilpatrick bill, is it not?

Mr. CHEADLE. We should have the right to debate upon both.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the gentleman desire that arrangement with reference to both bills?

Mr. PAYSON. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is as to the passage of the other bills. Without objection the other bills reported by the Clerk will be passed.

Mr. ENLOE. Is not there an hour and a half on each of those bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the two that were named, the Kilpatrick bill and the Casey bill.

Mr. ENLOE. Let the others be laid aside.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two other Senate bills which have been reported.

Mr. ENLOE. Let them be laid aside.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bills. Is there objection to that?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bills may be temporarily laid aside.

The Clerk informs the Chair that there are two other Senate bills to which there are amendments: The bill (S. 1546) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Michler, widow of the late Bvt. Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Michler, United States Army, and the bill (S. 2245) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Adelaide H. Woodall. The question is on the amendments recommended. Without objection the amendments will be considered as agreed to, and the question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bills as amended. Without objection the bills will be considered as read a third time, and the bills will then be temporarily laid aside.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, what has been done with the bills that were laid aside at the last Monday evening session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They are pending as unfinished business.

Mr. BOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOWDEN. I would like to know whether it is not competent by unanimous consent to take these bills up and act upon them tonight.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOWDEN. Then I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOWDEN] asks unanimous consent that the bills which were brought over from last Monday evening session be put on their passage.

Mr. ENLOE. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker of the House holds that these bills have lost their status now, and that without a special order from the Committee on Rules they can not be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I can not speak for the Speaker; I do not know what the gentleman's understanding may have been, but I think there has been no such decision or ruling made by the Speaker.

Mr. ENLOE. I think we had better have a ruling of the Speaker, and let parliamentary law be applied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object?

Mr. ENLOE. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill of Capt. A. D. Denny. It is a Senate bill that was passed last Monday evening and went over under the rule. There was no objection made to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to bring up for consideration a bill passed last Monday evening.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. The bill was favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole on last Monday evening, and was engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOWDEN] has asked unanimous consent to bring up all these bills, and it was objected to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE].

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I know; but I am asking unanimous consent for the passage of this one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? The Clerk will read the title of the bill. [After a pause.] The Clerk informs the Chair that he is not able to find the bill. The matter will be passed and the gentleman can call it up afterwards.

JOSEPH M. WILSON.

Mr. CRAIG. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9565) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph N. Wilson, late a private in Company B, Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. CRAIG) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9565) granting an increase of pension to Joseph M. Wilson, submit the following report:

That claimant enlisted August 29, 1864, and was discharged July 10, 1865. He was wounded in front of Petersburg April 2, 1865, severely in the left hand, for which he was pensioned. The character of the wound necessitated amputation of middle finger, ball having passed through third and fourth metacarpal bones. The fingers left were drawn shut. The hand was swindled and nearly powerless and the arm was affected to the shoulder. The hand being entirely useless it was much in the way in working, and involuntarily he would bring it forward to aid his right hand.

In trying to earn a living in a saw-mill it was hurt several times because of its condition, rendering him less able to act quickly, and finally it was caught in the machinery and injured so that it had to be amputated. This was about 1874. He has applied several times for increase and rerating, but as he has no wounded hand or arm to show for examination, the Pension Office can not increase his claim, although his disability has increased; and under the system of liberal rerating since in vogue in the Pension Office he feels he should have an increase independent of the fact that his arm was lost because of condition of wound.

Your committee think it a proper case for relief, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Amend by changing initial "N." to "M.," so that name will read "Joseph M. Wilson."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and laid aside.

JOHN R. BROWN.

Mr. YODER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5065) for the relief of John R. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to vacate the order of the War Department made July 24, 1863, dismissing from the military service of the United States John R. Brown, late assistant surgeon of the Eighty-second Illinois Infantry, and is required to muster out said John R. Brown, to date from August 10, 1863.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether we have the right to act upon a bill of that kind at this evening session. It certainly is not embraced under the rule for Friday evening sessions, and there may be some question whether our action would be legal if we passed the bill.

Mr. YODER. The rule applies only to cases of desertion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas make the point of order against the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. I do make the point of order against its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order.

WILLIAM R. BOAG.

Mr. ANDREW. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6625) for the relief of William R. Boag.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William R. Boag, late a private in Company K, First Regiment of Massachusetts Infantry Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from service.

The report (by Mr. CAREY) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. 6625) for the relief of William R. Boag, respectfully reports:

That William R. Boag was enrolled as a private in Company K, First Massachusetts Infantry Volunteers, on May 23, 1861, to serve three years, and stands charged with deserting from the Chester general hospital on the 31st day of October, 1862. The evidence produced establishes the fact that the soldier left the hospital believing that he had been discharged from the military service of the United States.

At the time the soldier left the hospital he was sick and unable to perform military duty, and, owing to a wound received and sickness contracted while in the military service, this man will go through life broken down in health. He is now on the pension-rolls. The report of the War Department and a sworn statement of the said Boag are herewith printed and made a part of this report. The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Case of William R. Boag, Company K, First Massachusetts Infantry Volunteers.
RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION, March 12, 1890.
William R. Boag, private Company K, First Massachusetts Infantry Volunteers, was enrolled on May 23, 1861, to serve three years. Charges of desertion of August 17, 1861, and August 29, 1862, appearing against him on company and regimental records, were removed as erroneous on August 26, 1889, after due investigation by the War Department.

On June 30, 1862, he was captured by the enemy at James River, Virginia; was confined in prison at Richmond, Va., July 13, 1862; paroled at City Point, Va., July 25, 1862; was admitted on July 29, 1862 (as paroled prisoner of war), to general hospital at Chester, Pa., with chronic diarrhea. The records of that hospital show that he was present on August 31, 1862, but report him as "deserted, October 31, 1862." The company muster-roll of October 31, 1862, reports him, "absent, sick;" but the roll of December 31, 1862, shows him, "deserted," indicating that the regimental officers were notified by the surgeon in charge of the Chester General Hospital, that the man deserted there on October 31, 1862, as borne on said hospital records.

He never returned to military control after October 31, 1862. On his own request of October 6, 1877, he was dishonorably discharged by the War Department on October 23, 1877, to date October 31, 1862, by reason of desertion.

With a view to the removal of the charge of desertion of October 31, 1862, and an honorable discharge, William R. Boag, in several affidavits executed by him between 1876 and 1887, states: Not long after entering Chester General Hospital he requested his discharge of the surgeon, who several days afterward gave him his discharge certificate dated August 2, 1862. He was then still very sick. Next day he started to go to Boston, and while at New York (he being in a miserable plight), he was offered a passage to his home St. John's, Newfoundland, by Captain Monkton, on the brig Jessie.

This brig sailed from New York on August 23, and arrived at St. John's on September 4, 1862, where he was immediately confined to his bed with a relapse of the fever, which turned into typhoid; was then attended by his mother's physician, Dr. Adam McKen (now deceased), and was confined to his bed until November, 1862. From the effect of the fever he became nearly deaf, his eyesight was affected, etc. While he was thus prostrated with typhoid fever, his clothes (containing his discharge) were burned by order of the doctor.

John J. Rowe, of Cambridge, Mass., on August 15, 1889, swears: He was born at St. John's, Newfoundland; has known William R. Boag from boyhood; knows that Boag arrived from the States in 1862 very sick with fever, but affiant did not see Boag till about November, 1862, when he appeared completely broken down, suffering with rheumatism; but after awhile Boag gained a little in health and was able to go about. No other pertinent testimony in the case is before the War Department.

On August 26, 1889, the application for removal of the charge of desertion of October 31, 1862, and for an honorable discharge in this case was denied by the War Department on the following grounds:

As the muster-roll of the General Hospital, Chester, Pa., of August 31, 1862, shows this man present there on that date, therefore his uncorroborated and positive statements to the effect that he was discharged there on August 2, 1862, can not be accepted to controvert the explicit and authentic official record in the case.

As it is not established by any competent testimony submitted to this Department that he was prevented by disease, etc., incurred in line of duty from returning to the United States and to proper military control prior to May 25, 1864 (date of muster-out of his command), the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, affords no relief in this case.

Reports in the case were furnished on February 12, 1886, and February 1, 1888, by the Adjutant-General, United States Army, to the Secretary of War, for the use of House Committee on Military Affairs, in connection with the consideration of H. R. 1131, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, and H. R. 403, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

Respectfully submitted,

F. C. AINSWORTH.

Captain and Assistant Surgeon, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Sworn statement of William R. Boag, of Boston.

BOSTON, MASS., April 14, 1890.

My name is William R. Boag. I was born in St. John's, Newfoundland, 12th April, 1835. I came to Boston, Mass., 1860, and was employed as a dry goods salesman with Beebe & Co. about a year previous to 12th April, 1861, at which date I left my position and volunteered to go to the war, and enlisted said 12th April, 1861, in Company K, First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. At the election of officers I was elected as third lieutenant of said Company K, and on the 19th of April, 1861, received my commission from Governor John A. Andrew. On about the 24th May, 1861, the regiment was sworn in at Faneuil Hall, Boston, and in preference to taking a second lieutenant's position in another regiment I went in Company K as a private.

On July 18, 1861, I was wounded in the left leg, for which I draw a pension under certificate No. 155140 since 1878. A few days after being wounded I was sent to Alexandria, Va., and was sent from Alexandria hospital to Boston on the steamer Ben De Ford. I arrived in Boston about the 7th August, 1861. I was admitted to the Massachusetts General Hospital about the 9th August, and there remained till about 20th September, when my leg getting better and about the 20th October, 1861, I again reported to my regiment, then at Budd's Ferry, Va. I was at the siege of Yorktown, Va., and at the battle of Williamsburgh, Va., on the 5th May, 1862. On the 6th of May I was detailed in picking up the dead, and it was here I felt the first symptoms of typhoid fever; was in the hospital tent at "Fair Oaks" very low, indeed; and latter part of June, 1862, I was sent to Savage Station, Va., by ambulance by order of Dr. Salter, then our regimental surgeon, about the last of June, 1862. (I am giving dates to the best of my knowledge.)

About 1st July, 1862, the whole hospital at Savage Station was captured, and we were all, about 2,500 in number, brought to Richmond in a cattle train, and I, with others, was put in Libby prison, where I was treated most barbarously all the time there, having the fever, and received no medical treatment whatever. The latter part of July, 1862, we were exchanged. I was carried on the backs of some of my comrades to the train, which proceeded to City Point, Va., where we embarked on board some steamers there waiting for us, and went then immediately to Chester (Pa.) hospital. We arrived in Chester, Pa., sometime beginning of August, 1862. I was still very sick and weak.

I asked the doctor of the hospital at Chester, Pa., if he could get my discharge, and he stated two or three times that he would, and on a date between 12th and 22d of August, 1862, he called me and handed me this paper. I then went from the hospital firmly under the impression that I was discharged; so I intended coming to Boston. I got as far as New York and the fever got worse, and an opportunity offered, in Captain Monkton, brig Jessie. Seeing the state I was in, and having no relations living in Boston, he offered to bring me to my home, and he did not expect I would survive the passage.

I arrived in St. John's, Newfoundland, about 20th September, 1862, and from the day of my arrival till about the last of November, 1862, I laid on my bed with a relapse of the fever. I was tended all the time by Dr. Adam McKen, since dead. Through the fever I lost the hearing of my left ear totally and the right ear partially. It also affected my eyesight so that I could not read without the use of glasses, and in fact, it left me a complete wreck. I was a strong, healthy man up to my twenty-sixth birthday, with good health and good prospects before me, but sacrificed all and volunteered and enlisted on the 12th

April, 1861. The news came to Boston that our flag was first fired on. I swear here that I never had any reason to desert, and I swear that I left Chester hospital with the idea that I was a discharged man.

When I was sick on arriving at St. John's, Newfoundland, my poor mother, since dead, burnt all my clothes on account of their filthy state, and being afraid the fever was infectious, and the papers and diaries I kept through the war were lost to me.

I never knew that there was any charge of desertion against me till I first made an application for pension for my wound in my leg, which I think was in 1875 or 1876, and I was not fit to again return to the service after the sickness I endured, having suffered with a complication of diseases.

The above statement to the best of my knowledge is true.

W. R. BOAG,
Late private of Company E, First Regiment Volunteer Infantry.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Suffolk, ss:

Personally appeared before me, this 15th day of April, A. D. 1890, the above-named William R. Boag, and made oath to the above statement by him subscribed.

THOMAS MAIR, Justice of the Peace.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ANDREW. I ask that this bill be passed at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it will be considered as passed.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly passed.

ANNIE D. RUNDLETT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 640) granting a pension to Annie D. Rundlett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie D. Rundlett, widow of Howard M. Rundlett, passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy, and pay her $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. GOODNIGHT) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 640) granting a pension to Annie D. Rundlett, submit the following report:

Your committee adopt the report of the Senate committee with amendments: "The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 640) granting a pension to Annie D. Rundlett, have examined the same and report:

"The claimant is the widow of Howard M. Rundlett, passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy, who died on the 25th day of May, 1873, on board the United States ship Terror, at sea. He was appointed acting assistant surgeon United States Navy, March 9, 1864, and his record to the time of his death is one of active and honorable service, and Surgeon-General Beale certifies that it is good as to his general conduct and efficiency.

"As to the cause of his death there are conflicting reports, one of which refers the result to intemperance. On this point passed Assistant Paymaster Machette says:

"The day preceding Dr. Rundlett's death he was for several hours exposed to the sun's rays, which on that day were unusually hot."

"He had waited on the pier for a boat to take him off to the ship, and was overcome by the heat.

"Paymaster Machette continues:

"I always believed, and so stated at the time in a letter to his widow, that the doctor's death resulted chiefly from his long exposure. During his sickness we were at sea on a monitor, exposed to bad weather, which doubtless contributed greatly to rendering his illness fatal."

The committee are of the opinion that a pension may be properly allowed to his widow, and the bill is reported with an amendment, striking out "thirty," in the eighth line, and inserting instead thereof the words "twenty-five," this being the pension allowed to widows of officers of this grade.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the bill be passed at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the bill be passed at this time?

Mr. ENLOE. Let it be laid aside.

The bill was laid aside.

LYDIA F. FRYER.

Mr. YODER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9627) granting a pension to Lydia F. Fryer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Lydia F. Fryer, dependent and helpless daughter of Park H. Fryer, late a member of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $18 per month.

The report (by Mr. YODER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9627) granting a pension to Lydia F. Fryer, submit the following report:

Claimant is the crippled daughter of Park H. Fryer, late a private in Company F, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who died in July, 1863, while in the service and line of duty. His widow drew a pension until she remarried, and claimant drew a pension until she became sixteen years of age, when her pension ceased under the general law. All the other children are now over sixteen years of age, and no one is drawing a pension on account of soldier's death.

Lydia F. Fryer was a cripple from infancy, and is mentally, as well as physically, utterly helpless; thirty-two years of age. Her mother is poor and she is an inmate of the county poor-house of Mercer County, Ohio. These facts are substantiated by the affidavits of creditable witnesses, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: In line 7 insert the following "to her legal guardian for her use."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and laid aside.

PARKER ADAMS.

Mr. HAUGEN. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8262) for the relief of Parker Adams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed and authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Parker Adams, late a private, under Colonel Thomas, of Illinois, in the First Regiment of Volunteers, in the Black Hawk war.

The report (by Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8262) granting a pension to Parker Adams, have considered the same and report as follows: The claimant was (as shown by the official certificate of the adjutant-general of the State of Illinois) a sergeant in Capt. John Thomas's and Capt. Gideon Simpson's company, First Regiment Illinois Mounted Volunteer Militia, and served from April 18, 1832, to May 19, 1832, in the Black Hawk war.

The proof filed in support of the bill shows that the soldier is between seventy-five and eighty years old, feeble and sickly, and unable to perform any work. It is further shown that the case is one of necessity, he having no property nor any one upon whom to rely for support.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended, amended so as to allow a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee is as follows: In line 8, after the word "war," insert "and allow him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and laid aside.

CHARLES BARKER.

Mr. SKINNER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9945) to increase the pension of Charles Barker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Charles Barker, late of Company I, First Regiment North Carolina Volunteers, Mexican war, from $8 per month, as now received under act of January 29, 1867, to $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9945) granting an increase of pension to Charles Barker, have considered the same and report:

The claimant was a private in Company I, First North Carolina Volunteers, and served from February 9, 1847, to August 7, 1848, in the war with Mexico.

He is now a pensioner at $8 per month on account of said service.

The evidence submitted in support of the bill to increase his pension shows that the claimant is seventy years old, and so much disabled by rheumatism, neuralgia, and general infirmity, consequent upon his age, that he can do no manual labor whatever.

It is further shown that he is a poor man with no income from any source except his said pension, and were it not for the small sum so received he would be dependent upon the public charity for support. He has no one living with him except his oldest daughter, who is herself a cripple.

In the opinion of your committee the facts as stated are sufficient to warrant the increase prayed for, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and laid aside.

E. PATTON.

Mr. GIFFORD. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7875) granting a pension to E. Patton, of Benedict, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of E. Patton, late a private in Company E, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7875) granting a pension to E. Patton, of Benedict, Kans., submit the following report:

That the claimant, E. Patton, enlisted in Company E, Sixteenth Illinois Infantry, on the 24th day of May, 1861; was discharged therefrom on the 8th of July, 1865, having served over four years. The soldier made application for pension April 6, 1886, alleging rheumatism of the heart, which first made its appearance in 1866, and chronic diarrhea and resulting indigestion was first incurred at Bird's Point, Mo., about March, 1862. Claim was rejected at the Pension Office November 26, 1888, on the grounds of claimant's failure to establish continuous disability since discharge to 1883.

George W. Dawson and Christopher D. Allen, comrades belonging to the same company and regiment, make affidavit that the soldier had chronic diarrhea in April, May, and June in the year 1862, whose presence with their command is verified by the records of the War Department. Sergeant Bates, of Company C, same regiment, testifies that claimant, to his knowledge, was treated for chronic diarrhea at various times during his service, and that he had lived in the same town with him a part of the time since the war, and knew of his receiving medical treatment for the same disease.

Dr. Saul Vandeventer, of Versailles, Ill., in his affidavit testifies that he has been a practicing physician for forty-four years; that he knew claimant before he enlisted; that he was physically sound; that he saw said soldier when he was at home on veteran furlough about January, 1864; that he treated him at that time for chronic diarrhea, and further testifies that in consequence of said diarrhea he brought on indigestion and heart disease. Affiant further states that he saw claimant after his return from the war; that he was still in poor health; that claimant then went West and he did not see him again until 1882, at which time he returned from the West and he again treated him for the same disease, and continued to treat him for two years, until claimant again went West.

The facts in this case show that claimant was not so much disabled as to prevent him from performing manual labor until about 1882. The development of his disability from chronic diarrhea and indigestion into heart disease had been so gradual that it had scarcely aroused his suspicions until he found himself almost totally disabled for manual labor.

It is the opinion of your committee that the soldier has established the facts of the incurrence of his disability and its continuation and sequence. Therefore, notwithstanding the lack of testimony immediately subsequent to his service, your committee is of the opinion that this is a meritorious claim and recommends its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and laid aside.

MARY E. GRAHAM.

Mr. BROOKSHIRE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8302) granting a pension to Mary E. Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Graham, invalid daughter of Barton W. Graham, deceased, late a sergeant in Company H, Sixty-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8302) granting a pension to Mary E. Graham, respectfully reports as follows:

That said Mary is the invalid daughter of Barton W. Graham, late a sergeant in Company H, Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, who enlisted in August, 1862, and was honorably discharged May 31, 1865; that at the time of his enlistment he was in a sound condition, and in good physical health, and that while he was with the Army and in the line of duty he sustained an injury at a place called Crooked Creek, in the State of Kentucky, in the month of January, 1863, while on picket and in line of duty, and at said time he was taken sick and remained so for a long time; in fact, continued to be in a sickly condition and in uncertain health up to the time of his death, which occurred November 8, 1886, and the sickness contracted in the service was the cause of his death; that his said daughter is now thirty-five years of age, unmarried, and has no means of support, has been sick all her life, and is a confirmed invalid; and that said soldier, though often declaring he would never did apply for a pension, and left no widow surviving him; that owing to bodily infirmities said daughter is unable to earn a living.

The above facts are testified to by G. W. Boyd, Schuyler Latourette, James Mannow, colonel of the Sixty-third Indiana, and Henry Latourette. In the light of the father's service, which seems to have been faithful, the fact that his health became impaired during the service, and was never restored, that he left no widow surviving him, and that his daughter is an object of charity, it would seem that this case calls for the candid and careful consideration of the committee.

Therefore your committee recommends the passage of the bill, amended, however, by striking out the word "twenty," in line 8 of the bill, and inserting the word "twelve," so as to grant her a pension of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee in the last paragraph of the report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ENLOE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the engrossment and third reading of the bill?

Mr. ENLOE. I do.

The question was taken upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ENLOE. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 1.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point of order that the gentleman's point is immaterial unless he makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ENLOE. I make it both ways.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point that that point is not made in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] makes the point that there is no quorum present, and I do not think it would be possible for the Chair to find a quorum present. [Laughter.]

Mr. TURNER, of New York. The right man is not in the chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 10 o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HEATING APPARATUS, ETC., FOR PUBLIC BUILDING, PITTSBURGH, PA.

SENATE RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be requested to cause correspondence, and negotiation to be had through the Department of State, or otherwise, with the authorities of the Kingdom of Great Britain for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced by said authorities which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States of America to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in said kingdom; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, the following resolution was introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHIVELY (by request):

Be it resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol is hereby directed to place in the House refectory ten electro-motor fans, the cost of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; to the Committee on Accounts.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported with amendment the bill of the Senate (S. 51) to authorize the President to appoint Richard H. Jackson an ensign in the United States Navy, accompanied by a report (No. 2428)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BELKNAP, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills, which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (H. R. 6356) for the relief of Margaret A. Foster. (Report No. 2429.)

A bill (S. 2238) granting a pension to Elizabeth Rumsey, army nurse. (Report No. 2430.)

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported with amendment the bill of the Senate (S. 3314) granting right of way to the Red Lake and Western Railway and Navigation Company across Red Lake reservation, in Minnesota, and granting said company the right to take lands for terminal railroad and warehouse purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2444)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, who were instructed by the following resolution of the House passed January 27, 1890:

Whereas it is openly and repeatedly charged by persons of responsibility and by prominent journals throughout the country that the law pertaining to the civil service is being extensively evaded by the Civil Service Commissioners; and

Whereas charges of partiality shown by said commissioners in making selections for appointments have caused uneasiness in the minds of many and to such an extent that new legislation as to the manner of making appointments is advocated; and

Whereas it is deemed expedient that the acts and doings and practical workings of the said Civil Service Commission and the results thereof, and also the practical workings and results generally of the present law relating to the civil service should be thoroughly investigated: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service is hereby authorized and directed to investigate said charges, and to examine and report the practical workings of the system, and to report the evidence and the conclusions thereon to the House, and that said committee is hereby authorized to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, and to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ a stenographer; the expenses of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, reported as their conclusions:

First. That Commissioners Roosevelt and Thompson have discharged their duties with entire fidelity and integrity.

Second. That the official conduct of Commissioner Lyman has been characterized by laxity of discipline in the administration of the affairs of the commission, and is therefore censurable; and submitting the following resolution:

Resolved, That a copy of the report and testimony taken before the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in the investigation of charges preferred against the United States Civil Service Commission be forwarded to the President; which, with the accompanying report (No. 2445), was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LEHLBACH also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported with amendment the following bills of the House; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3146) to insure preference in appointment, employment, and retention therein, in the public service of the United States, to veterans of the late war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on the Library, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 4087) to authorize the purchase of certain manuscript papers and correspondence of Thomas Jefferson; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I report back (it should have gone with the bill to be reported back formally) a petition in favor of preference of employment in the public service to veterans of the late war. The bill was reported back from the Judiciary Committee to be discharged and sent to the Committee on Civil Service, which was done, and I now report the petition, which should have accompanied the bill, and ask that it may be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7217) to amend "An act for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8342) for the removal of the United States court-house building at Baltimore, Md., reported it without amendment.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3863) to extend the time for the construction of its road by the Newport and Kings Valley Railroad Company through the Siletz Indian reservation, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 4088) for the relief of Frank Denham; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 4089) reinstating and placing on the retired list George W. Omensetter, late gunner United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 100) to authorize Carl Berlin to accept from the King of Sweden and Norway the decoration of the "Royal Order of the Sword," which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WILLIAM CLAWSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. The first Order of Business on the Calendar will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1971) for the relief of William Clawson.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to enter the name of William Clawson as a private of Company I, Fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, upon the rolls of said company, mustered into the service August 2, 1861, and honorably mustered out August 8, 1863, and to issue to him an honorable discharge accordingly; and said Clawson shall be paid all the pay, allowances, and bounties due to a soldier regularly serving in said company between the dates aforesaid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WALTHALL April 24, 1890:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1971) for relief of William Clawson, having considered the same, report as follows:

The facts of this case, as shown by the sworn petition of William Clawson, supported in all material respects by a number of affidavits of members of Company I, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, are these:

Clawson enlisted as a private in that company on the 2d day of August, 1861, and was sworn into service by its captain, but the mustering officer refused to muster him because he thought Clawson had consumption, which proved to be a mistake. Clawson, with the consent of the captain, remained with the company and did regular service and participated in every action in which his command was engaged, including the siege of Vicksburg, until the 8th of August, 1862, when his captain resigned and he left the company, having, in the mean time, contracted disease in the service. The fact of his service between the dates named is clearly established, and although his name is not borne on the rolls of the company on file in the War Department, the actual service he performed seems to entitle him to relief.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended as indicated below, and when so amended that it pass.

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to enter the name of William Clawson as a private of Company I, Fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, upon the rolls of said company, mustered into the service August 2, 1861, and honorably mustered out August 8, 1863, and to issue to him an honorable discharge accordingly; and the said Clawson shall be paid all the pay, allowances, and bounties due to a soldier regularly serving in said company between the dates aforesaid."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTION LAWS.

The bill (S. 3652) to amend and supplement the election laws of the United States, and to provide for the more efficient enforcement of such laws, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that go over, Mr. President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What can be the objection to that, I should like to know?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill go over under Rule IX, or without prejudice?

Mr. HARRIS. I do not care which, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

PROSPECT HILL CEMETERY.

The bill (S. 3636) to amend the charter of the Prospect Hill Cemetery was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator who reported this bill whether the act of incorporation—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend from West Virginia whether the act of incorporation provided or in any way authorized donations of land, so as to get at the point which my friend will perfectly understand in a moment, whether this bill will give the corporation the authority of law to dispose of land in respect of which the donors, if there were any, had made a dedication? If so, it might be open to some question.

Mr. FAULKNER. My attention having been called to another subject in conversation, I did not know that the bill had been reached on the Calendar. I ask that the bill be passed over, with the consent of the Senator from Vermont. I have learned facts since the reporting of this bill which seem to me to render it necessary either to amend it or to recommit it to the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It had better be recommitted.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state further to the Senator from Vermont why it is not perhaps necessary to recommit it, that this matter is now pending in the conference committee on the District appropriation bill, there having been an amendment covering this subject put on that bill in the Senate. I have called the attention of the conference committee to the facts that have come to my knowledge since that amendment was put on, which will require them, if they concur in my view, to change considerably the amendment put on the bill in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

DISTRICT HOTEL-KEEPERS, ETC.

The bill (S. 662) for the better protection of hotel-keepers, inn-keepers, lodging-house keepers, and boarding-house keepers of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 2, after the word "keeper," to insert "who," and in line 6, after the word "or," to insert "who;" so as to read:

That any hotel-keeper, inn-keeper, boarding-house or lodging-house keeper, who shall have a lien for unpaid fare, accommodations, or board upon any goods, baggage, or other chattel property, and after the same shall have been in his possession for three months at least after the departure of the guest or boarder leaving the same, or who for a period of six months shall have in custody any unclaimed trunk, box, valise, package, parcel, or other chattel property whatever, may proceed to sell the same at public auction, and out of the proceeds of such sale may, in case of lien, retain the amount thereof and the expenses of the advertisement and sale; and in case of unclaimed property, the expense of storage, advertisement, and sale thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 3, after the word "the," to insert "goods;" in line 4, after the word "published," to insert the words "in a newspaper of general circulation and published;" and in line 5, to strike out the words "in which such hotel, inn, or boarding-house is situated," and insert "and a copy of said notice in writing shall be sent to the collector of taxes of said District;" so as to make the clause read:

That fifteen days at least prior to the time of the sale a notice of the time and place of holding the sale, and containing a brief description of the goods, baggage, and articles to be sold, shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia, and a copy of said notice in writing shall be sent to the collector of taxes of said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add, as a new section:

Sec. 6. That in case such balance shall not be demanded and paid, as specified in the last section, within said ten days, then within five days thereafter said hotel keeper, inn-keeper, boarding-house keeper, or lodging-house keeper shall pay said balance to the collector of taxes, and shall, at the same time, file with said collector of taxes an affidavit made by him, in which shall be stated the name and place of residence, as far as they are known to him, of the guest, boarder, person whose goods, baggage, or chattel articles were sold, the articles sold, and the price at which they were sold, the name and residence of the auctioneer making the sale, and a copy of the notice published, and how served, whether by personal service or by mailing, and if not so served the reason thereof. And in case said hotel-keeper, inn-keeper, boarding-house keeper, or lodging-house keeper shall fail or make default in paying such balance to said collector of taxes, or in filing with said collector the affidavit required by this section, he shall pay to such collector interest upon said balance at the rate 2 per cent. per month during the period of such default.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add, as a new section:

Sec. 7. That said collector of taxes shall pay said surplus moneys to the Treasurer of the United States, who shall credit the same to the persons named in said affidavit as said guest, boarder, or person leaving the articles sold, and shall pay the same to said person, his or her executors or administrators, upon demand, and evidence satisfactory to said Treasurer furnished of their identity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION PROPERTY IN THE DAKOTAS.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 37) providing for the donation of certain personal property of the United States to South Dakota and North Dakota was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTOPHER C. ANDREWS.

The bill (H. R. 1452) for the relief of Christopher C. Andrews was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It confirms the homestead entry of Christopher C. Andrews, made at Crookston, Minn., May 11, 1882, for the southwest quarter of section numbered 30, in township numbered 158 north, of range 48 west, and provides that upon payment at the district land office at Crookston of $1.25 per acre he shall be entitled to final certificate and patent for the land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH April 28, 1890:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill 1452, for the relief of Christopher C. Andrews, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

This bill is to allow a patent to issue to said Andrews for the quarter-section of land therein described situated in the Crookston (Minn.) land district, on his paying therefor $1.25 per acre. He duly entered it as a homestead in 1882, and in good faith made improvements thereon of the value of about $1,000. He has by military service satisfied the requirement as to four years' residence, but as the land has proved so subject to overflow as to be uninhabitable he has consequently been, and still is, prevented from fully complying with the law in respect to residence.

The committee therefore unanimously recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 12 and 13, the words "existing at the time said homestead entry was made;" so as to save adverse claims arising at any time and keep ourselves from being involved in controversy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, after the word "land," strike out the words "existing at the time said homestead entry was made;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That this act shall not prejudice any adverse claim to any of said land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

UNITED STATES LAND COURT.

The bill (S. 1042) to establish a United States land court and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is probable that the bill might be fairly considered, it has been passed so many times under the five-minute rule, but there are some minute amendments that may be possibly necessary for the further protection of the rights of settlers, which have been presented to the committee since the bill was reported, and I therefore ask that it may be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY H. SIBLEY.

The bill (S. 468) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over under Rule IX.

LANDS FOR CEMETERY AND PARK PURPOSES.

The bill (H. R. 8247) to authorize the entry of public lands by incorporated cities and towns for cemetery and park purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That incorporated cities and towns shall have the right, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, to purchase for cemetery and park purposes not exceeding one-quarter section of public lands subject to entry, sale, or disposal under existing laws, such lands to be within 2 miles of such cities or towns: Provided, That when such cities or towns are situated on mineral lands, or within the mineral districts, the lands proposed to be taken under this act shall be considered as mineral lands, and patent to such land shall not authorize such cities or towns to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, and such reservation shall be entered upon such patent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to insert in line 6, after the word "lands," the words "not mineral." It is a mere clerical omission evidently. That will put it on the same footing as the town-site law.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that that is just what we do not want done. The purpose of this bill is to enable towns which are in the mountain regions of the country to take burial grounds and park grounds in case they want them. The main purpose, or the real purpose, is for burial grounds, and to say that there shall be no entry upon mineral land is to say the bill shall be of no account at all, because in the mining regions they are not suffering on this account. We have provided that they shall take no title to the minerals. That is all we thought we ought to do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see the force of what my friend from Colorado says, but still we ought to make a provision that when mineral lands are selected, although the town may not be a mineral town or on mineral lands, they shall be subject to the mineral rights. I will withdraw the amendment and let it go, for if they must have a cemetery at all I think it ought to be taken without regard to working minerals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont being withdrawn, the question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

CUSTOMS-REVENUE BONDS.

The bill (S. 1992) to amend chapter 136, act of June 20, 1876, relating to custom-house bonds, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That when any bond is required by law to be executed by any firm or partnership for the payment of duties upon goods, wares, or merchandise imported into the United States, or for any other custom-house purposes, by such firm or partnership, the execution of such bond by any member of such firm or partnership, in the name of said firm or partnership, shall bind the other members or partners thereof in like manner and to the same extent as if such other members or partners had personally executed the same. And any action or suit may be instituted on such bond against all the members or partners of such firm as if all of the members or partners had executed the same.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "custom-house," in line 6 of the amendment, and insert "revenue."

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt whether that ought to extend to the internal revenue, because in certain cases it may cause difficulty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Say "customs-revenue purposes."

Mr. SHERMAN. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the word "other," it is proposed to strike out the word "custom-house" and insert the words "customs revenue."

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be reported now as it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That when any bond is required by law to be executed by any firm or partnership for the payment of duties upon goods, wares, or merchandise imported into the United States, or for any other customs-revenue purposes, by such firm or partnership, the execution of such bond by any member of such firm or partnership, in the name of said firm or partnership, shall bind the other members or partners thereof in like manner and to the same extent as if such other members or partners had personally executed the same. And any action or suit may be instituted on such bond against all the members or partners of such firm as if all of the members or partners had executed the same.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the title, so as to make it read: "A bill relating to the execution of custom-house bonds."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would say "customs-revenue bonds," making it correspond with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be amended so as to read: "A bill relating to the execution of customs-revenue bonds."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the act (S. 680) for the relief of Alice E. Robertson.

MELBOURNE INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

The bill (S. 3562) authorizing additional compensation to the assistant commissioners to the industrial exhibition held at Melbourne, Australia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, in section 1, line 5, after the word "exhibition," to insert "in addition to the sum already allowed for compensation;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to allow as traveling expenses to and from said Melbourne Centennial Industrial Exhibition, in addition to the sum already allowed for compensation, the sum of $1,500, out of any moneys belonging to such appropriation not now expended, to each one of the four persons hereinafter named, to wit: Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, Brooke County, West Virginia, the sum of $1,500; Richard F. Miller, of Lynchburg, Va., for $1,500; Francis B. Wheeler, of New York City, for $1,500; and Thomas B. Merry, of Portland, Oregon, for $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROUND VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2782) to provide for the reduction of the Round Valley Indian reservation, in the State of California, and for other purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDERS AT PORTLAND, OREGON.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Senate bill 461, returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 461) making an appropriation for a new light-house tender for use in the thirteenth light-house district, with headquarters at Portland, Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

MISSION INDIANS IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 2783) for the relief of the Mission Indians in the State of California was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate with amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PITTSBURGH, COLUMBUS AND FORT SMITH RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 344) to grant the right of way to the Pittsburgh, Columbus and Fort Smith Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Secretary would read that clause about the Muscogee court again. It escaped my attention.

The Secretary read as follows:

Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nation. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award and be paid by said railway company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by the original petition to the United States district court at Muscogee, Indian Territory, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition according to the laws of the State of Kansas provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with construction of the railroad.

Mr. PLATT. If it is in order to amend at this time, I should like to strike out the words "district court." That is not the proper name of that court. It is not "the United States district court," but it is a United States court.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that if that amendment is made it will necessitate sending the bill back to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. It is suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts that this is a House bill, and perhaps the amendment is not essential.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator thinks the description is not sufficient, I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I will not insist upon the amendment if it is going to send the bill back to the House. The proper designation of the court, however, is not given in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment being withdrawn, the reading will proceed.

Mr. DAWES. There is no other court there, and the name used can hardly give rise to any trouble.

Mr. PLATT. There is no other court there.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In section 3, line 40, I move to strike out the word "district" before the word "court;" so that the clause will read:

To appeal by original petition to the United States court at Muscogee, Ind. T.

I might as well on this amendment explain within my five minutes, or whatever time may be necessary, why I make this motion. There is not any such thing as a district court of the United States in the Indian Territory at all, and therefore it is a misdescription. In a legislative sense we understand what it means and possibly any court would, but it is not a safe way to do. If that were the only thing I should not insist upon it, because probably a court would say what was meant was the thing there; but when I go over to section 8 I find it is again provided—

That the United States circuit and district courts for the western district of Arkansas, and the district of Kansas, and such other courts as may be—authorized by Congress shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies, etc.

I am not reading the very language of the bill, but making it as short as I can. Now, we have made in this section 3 a particular jurisdiction to hear and determine a particular class of these cases, which is chiefly on the right of way and damages, and then by a sweeping later section have apparently given the courts in two different States a great way apart a sweeping jurisdiction which would cover the other, and which in respect of these very controversies as applied to section 8 alone might bring the court in Arkansas into conflict with the court in Kansas, and vice versa.

Therefore, it appears to me, with great respect to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the wise thing to do is to give to the United States circuit court, either for Arkansas or for Kansas alone—not the district court, because the district courts of the United States have no civil jurisdiction inter partes and never had—give jurisdiction to the circuit court in one or the other of those States, subject to the special provisions you have made about land damages and whatever in the other case, in order that there will not be a continual see-saw between this railroad company and the people affected by this section.

Mr. DAWES. There will be no objection to that, if the Senator will suggest his amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will when we have passed the first one I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. This is the form adopted in the other House, and it still is the form, which has grown up for two or three years and is applicable to all the bills which have passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be, but it is time we should correct it, because I can foresee, having had some experience in law affairs, that we should get into a tangle at once if we continue to pass bills in this form.

Mr. DAWES. It will be as well probably to amend in the way the Senator suggests.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move in section 8 to strike out in line 1 the words "and district."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, line 1, before the word "courts," it is proposed to strike out the words "and district;" so as to read:

That the United States circuit courts for the western district of Arkansas and the district of Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move, in line 2 of the same section, to strike out the words "and the district of Kansas," and to drop the "and" in line 3, and change the word "courts" at the end of line 1 to "court;" so that the clause shall read:

That the United States circuit court for the western district of Arkansas, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move, in line 3 of the same section, to strike out the words "and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress," which are entirely unnecessary. We have the power to do that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, in order to make section 8 not to be in conflict with section 3 as to how land damages are to be determined by the United States court at Muscogee, I move to add, in line 3 of section 8, after the word "shall," the words "except as provided in section 3 of this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "shall," at the end of line 3 of section 8, it is proposed to insert "except as provided in section 3 of this act;" so as to read:

That the United States circuit court for the western district of Arkansas shall, except as provided in section 3 of this act, have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 12. That the time within which the Newport and Kings Valley Railroad Company, a corporation under the laws of Oregon, is authorized to construct its road across the Siletz Indian reservation, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act granting to the Newport and Kings Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the Siletz Indian reservation," received by the President July 14, 1888, and which became a law without his approval, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of two years from the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like to inquire of my friend from Oregon what relation a railroad in Oregon has to this question of right of way in the Indian Territory.

Mr. DOLPH. I think it has such a relation that there is no impropriety in making this amendment. Two years ago, in 1888, Congress passed an act granting to the Newport and Kings Valley Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of Oregon, the right to build a railroad over the Siletz Indian reservation. It was a narrow-gauge road intended to connect with the narrow-gauge system in Oregon, of which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] knew something. The road went into the hands of a receiver, the company operating the road was involved, and the circumstances were such that the company was not able to make its arrangements for connection and therefore to build its road. Its act will expire, according to the limitation in section 4, on the 14th of next month. I introduced a bill some time since, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, to extend the time two years. I furnished the committee with documents exhibiting all the facts and showing that the application was meritorious.

This bill has been amended so that it must go back to the House of Representatives and it is necessary for it to go into conference, but this proposition to extend the time for this road in Oregon is so eminently just and proper under the showing that I do not think anybody will have any objection to it, and it will not delay or embarrass the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know; but I appeal to my friend on the point of the impropriety of bringing together two entirely distinct questions in the same bill, geographically perhaps fifteen hundred miles apart I suppose, but certainly a thousand miles apart, and which have no cognate relation to each other. I would much rather have the Senator ask unanimous consent at this moment of time, pending this bill, to pass his than to have the Senate get into the habit of riding bills into an omnibus form.

Mr. DAWES. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that the subject-matter has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they approved of the bill extending the time. The propriety of putting it upon this bill is quite another question, but as to the propriety of passing the bill which is now formulated into an amendment to this bill, the Senator from Oregon ought to have the privilege of its being known that his measure has the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The propriety of putting it upon this bill, however, as an amendment, is very questionable.

Mr. DOLPH. If I supposed the amendment would jeopardize the passage of this bill at all, if a conference would not be required by the amendments already embraced in the bill, or if I supposed the conference appointed would hold this bill and postpone its final passage on account of this amendment, or if there was any reason why the friends of the bill should complain, I would not ask that the amendment be made. I do not think, however, the mere fact that Oregon is fifteen hundred miles from the Indian Territory is really any good reason why the amendment should not go upon this bill. I can not see that there could be any objection to putting two or more of these bills together in relation to Indian reservations. This is not new legislation. The provision of the amendment is not at all inconsistent with the bill. It is simply the question of extending the time for two years.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say that I have observed during all my service in the Senate that this method of amending bills has never been regarded as in any wise proper. Any one can readily see what a resource it would be to a person lacking in diligence about his bill, or for other reasons being a little belated, if he should catch some bill which some more diligent Senator had brought up and got in a condition to pass, and then put upon it a rider. If this is to be done and established as a rule of the Senate, then any one can catch up a bill which is certain to pass and put upon it the most doubtful proposition, and thus bring together widely separated propositions in such a way that the legislative mind will never be properly directed to them, and the consideration which they ought separately to receive never will be had.

I have observed always with great good-will that the Senate did not regard that as a proper thing to be done; and while I have not any objection to the proposition of the Senator from Oregon, and while I do not know that it in any wise would impede the passage of this bill, I certainly hope he will not make this bill, which is now on its passage and about which there is no controversy, the medium for putting through the Senate a measure which has not yet been considered by the Senate, and which, whatever its merits or demerits, or however obvious the necessity for its passage may be, is entitled to take its own chances in its own way as coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs and going on the Calendar or otherwise as the Senate may direct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. I withdraw the amendment; but I desire to say that this has been done a dozen times, and more too, on bills coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not recall any such instance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope it will never be done again.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think there has been any lack of diligence nor that the Senator from Kansas should accuse me of any lack of diligence in regard to any bill in my charge, either before the Committee on Indian Affairs or any other committee. I do not think there is a particle of objection on any ground to this amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the Senator knows me too well to think I would impute anything to him in the way of lack of diligence or any other quality in regard to the performance of his duties here; but I was stating a hypothetical case in regard to this and in regard to other cases if things of this kind are tolerated. No one knows better than I do how faithful and how diligent and able the Senator from Oregon is in pressing all matters in which he is interested, and I have no doubt on account of that ability he will be able to get his bill through. In fact, if I thought he was not diligent, I would consent that this might go on the bill as an amendment for the purpose of helping a man who could not otherwise help himself, but I know the Senator from Oregon does not need help in this or any other case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend section 12, in line 4, by striking out "prior to the construction and completion of the road," and after the Secretary has read the amendment I will explain what I mean.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 12, line 4, after the word "whatever" it is proposed to strike out "prior to the construction and completion of the road."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the very clause I am quite confident which was up in another railway bill within a month or two or three and was stricken out by the Senate. This reads:

That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act, and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever—

I leave out the words I propose to strike out—except as to mortgage or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The reading as it came from the House of Representatives would be that they should not sell out their franchise and consolidate with some other road until they had got their road built, and then they might. I do not want to give that authority, and I move to strike out those words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 3716) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section provides that hereafter promotion to every grade in the Army below the rank of brigadier-general, throughout each arm, corps, or department of the service, shall, subject to the examination hereinafter provided for, be made according to seniority in the next lower grade of that arm, corps, or department; but in the line of the Army all officers now above the grade of second lieutenant shall, subject to such examination, be entitled to promotion in accordance with existing laws and regulations.

Section 2 provides that officers of grades in each arm of the service shall be assigned to regiments, and transferred from one regiment to another, as the interests of the service may require, by orders from the War Department, and hereafter all appointments in the line of the Army shall be by commission in an arm of the service and not by commission in any particular regiment.

Section 3 authorizes the President to prescribe a system of examination of all officers of the Army below the rank of major to determine their fitness for promotion, such an examination to be conducted at such times anterior to the accruing of the right to promotion as may be best for the interests of the service. The President may waive the examination for promotion to any grade in the case of any officer who, in pursuance of existing law, has heretofore passed a satisfactory examination for such grade. If any officer fails to pass a satisfactory examination, and is reported unfit for promotion, the officer next below him in rank, having passed the examination, shall receive the promotion. Should the officer fail in his physical examination and be found incapacitated for service by reason of physical disability contracted in line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entitled him to be promoted; but if he should fail for any other reason he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when he shall be re-examined, and in case of failure on such re-examination he shall be honorably discharged with one year's pay from the Army. All officers that have served as officers or enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, during the war of the rebellion shall, in case of failure on such re-examination, be placed upon the retired-list of the Army; and no act now in force shall be so construed as to limit or restrict the retirement of officers as herein provided for.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCIENTIFIC AND INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3714.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Secretary will read the title of the bill which the Senator from Vermont desires to call up.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3714) to establish an educational fund and apply the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be considered as being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole unless objection is made. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be read at length.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, that is a very important bill, and under the rule by which we are proceeding I shall be compelled for the time to object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not object, for I think his State is as anxious as any State in the Union to have this bill passed; I do not think it will take much time. I want to submit some remarks which will occupy, perhaps, only fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator desires to submit some remarks, of course I withdraw my objection, reserving the right after he concludes to renew it. I was not aware of the Senator's desire to address the Senate upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland withdraws his objection for the present. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Education and Labor will be stated.

Mr. MORRILL. I will offer a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause, which will embrace every amendment that has been made by the Committee on Education and Labor, and will save the labor of taking the question on the numerous amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont offers a substitute for the bill reported by the committee. The Chair inquires of the Senator if he desires the substitute to be read at this time.

Mr. MORRILL. No, not now. I wish to submit some remarks at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the measure now under consideration, introduced by me and favorably reported by the Committee on Education and Labor, proposes an annual appropriation to every State and Territory for the support of colleges established, or which may be established, under the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and the appropriation is to be made from the funds—and only a small part of such funds will be required—arising from any sales of the public lands or from the receipts on the large debts due from the land-grant railroads. It does not interfere with free homesteads, nor with the rights of pre-emption, nor with the experiment stations, nor with the payment to States of their per centum upon sales of lands within their respective limits, nor does it forbid or restrict any legislation whatsoever that Congress now or hereafter may choose to enact in regard to public lands or railroads.

It may be truthfully claimed that the funds to be appropriated will have been wholly derived from the public lands, as they were the fertile source from whence the land-grant railroads obtained their present large capital, to which the original stockholders have not been supposed to have made any visible contributions.

For many years our public lands have not been held or considered as a fixed source of revenue, but have often been devoted to noble national purposes, to large gifts to new States for schools and universities, to colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, to free homesteads for the landless, to the union by railroads of the Atlantic and Pacific boundaries of the Republic, and to agricultural-experiment stations, and the constitutional power of Congress to dispose of the public lands, or of their proceeds, for the common benefit of all the States has seldom been challenged and never successfully disputed. Nor was it very confidently expected that the land-grant railroads would soon, if ever, be able to wholly reimburse the Government for their munificent endowment.

No matter what party may be in power, in any adjustment of revenue measures, these undetermined rivulets, whether continuing to flow or not to flow, will not be relied upon, as they never have been relied upon, for the ordinary support of the Government, and the national objects here embraced would seem to be worthy of even the best and last dollar in the Treasury. If the Government was about to make its last will and testament it could hardly find more worthy and deserving legatees.

A bill embracing both the colleges and common schools, appropriating the proceeds of the sales of public lands, was introduced by me in 1880 and passed by the Senate with only 6 votes against it. A similar bill has also been introduced by me at almost every succeeding Congress, and sometimes, when referred to the very able Committee on Education and Labor, has been reported favorably, but unfortunately for the bill and the land-grant colleges, I regret to say, the committee were very naturally more in favor of giving the right of way to the bill of my distinguished friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, of which I do not now complain.

It is due to the courage and ability of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to say that he has linked his name forever with a great educational measure, and the future historian of our country in search of statistics relating to the common schools of the several States for the present era will not need to look further if he is so fortunate as to possess the March speech of the Senator from New Hampshire, which, like the soul of John Brown, will be marching on and rendering good service everywhere to common schools for years to come.

If, however, the bill referred to of 1880 had become a law, there would have accrued from the sales of public lands alone, from that date to the present time, an educational fund amounting to $57,538,369, and of this $11,202,017 would have been received in 1888. No large amount, however, can be hereafter anticipated from this source.

The principal of the Pacific railroad debts now due to the Government is $64,623,512, to which must be added $60,830,344 of interest already paid by the United States, making $125,453,856. From this deduct the sinking fund of $11,678,351, and the whole amount due January 1, 1890, appears to have been $113,775,504. The sum to be annually received from this source, or whatever may be received from the sales of the public lands, will in either case be largely in excess of any requirements under the present bill. The $1,100,000 receipts of the present year from the Union Pacific road alone much more than cover the expenditures contemplated for the coming year.

It is to be expected that the larger part of the railroad indebtedness will ultimately be honorably paid, and paid perhaps with more punctuality if sacredly devoted in part to the high object here proposed, although payment of the entire debt may not be looked for at the moment of its maturity. For the purposes of the colleges the annual payments will be sufficient and are not likely to suffer any annual diminution from lapse of time in the payment of the principal. The devotion of some small share of these large railroad debts and receipts from public lands for the greatly needed additional support of the land-grant colleges will give them new vigor and far greater practical usefulness, and when the last acre of our magnificent public domain shall finally have been disposed of there will be something to show for it, besides railroads, of priceless value to the people of every State.

The elementary education derived from the common schools, if no more than reading, writing, and ciphering, is a marvelous addition to the self-supporting and self-instructing power of each individual in the battle of life, and ought to be made universal, though the direct advantage to the government of the country may not be equally conspicuous. The citizens of a free government founded upon universal suffrage, who are to elect and be elected to high official positions, have need of a broader general culture. Primary schools are vastly important, but not enough. The problems which concern human rights and political liberty, the encouragement of all the virtues and the prevention of crime should be studied in the light of all history, of all philosophy. A popular government of the people pre-eminently requires the support of sound learning in all departments, in jurisprudence, finance, foreign relations, as well as in its home affairs and in its executive and legislative administration.

Under such a government industrial activities are to be augmented by all the resources of science and art, in order to maintain in peace or war both political and material independence; and above all, also, the intellectual and moral character of a free people should be elevated and established, not only by common schools, but by the highest institutions of sound learning. I wish we could multiply them tenfold and especially multiply such as grapple with practical affairs of everyday life and are * * * not too * * * good

For human nature's daily food.

No American will long dwell where there are no village schools, nor be quite contented in a State that does not liberally support collegiate education.

Our Government presents the solitary example among great nations of having too much revenue, and too much would be regarded by any other people with infinite complacency. If it be an affliction, certainly it is one not likely to last long and one easily remedied. While it is being used to pay the national debt it would seem neither to be misapplied nor lost. The excess to a large extent has accrued from the increase of revenue upon importations of foreign merchandise, of which an increase of the consumption must be expected to follow our large annual increase of wealth and population. But Government expenditures are likely to keep pace hereafter with the annual growth of revenue, and the present excess will only mark an epoch in our financial history, soon to disappear and not soon to return.

It can not be doubted that at the present session of Congress comprehensive measures will be consummated by which, without pinching national requirements of high necessity, the overlap of fixed receipts beyond ordinary expenditures will be judiciously and faithfully adjusted. With this accomplished, a more stubborn and difficult task will hereafter devolve upon Congress than an abridgment of Treasury receipts, namely, the adjustment of our revenue to our annual expenditures, limited by wise economy and constitutional boundaries. Uncertain receipts from miscellaneous and fluctuating sources interfere with all regular estimates of revenue, and the permanent disposal of whatever amount may hereafter be received from some of these irregular sources would prove a wholesome measure, provided the objects promoted or to which they may be assigned are found to be wholesome and of sufficient national importance.

A surplus can not always be applied advantageously to the reduction of the unmatured public debt, and idle funds in the Treasury, it will be conceded, beget danger of heedless and possibly wild projects for massive expenditures. The hunger for special appropriations becomes chronic and contagious. When our revenue shall be properly adjusted, any expenditures of questionable utility, or having earmarks of prodigality, will be exposed to pitiless criticism. The rigid inquiry will be, Is it absolutely necessary or expedient? or From what source is the appropriation to be derived? If not of obvious propriety or of paramount importance, it will be scrutinized and restrained. Should the amount be suggestive of fresh taxes or of greater burdens upon the people, it will be promptly rejected.

It is believed, however, that the proposition here presented for the land-grant colleges will meet with universal approval of the American people and is free from all serious objections. The objects embraced are of large and enduring importance and touch every State.

The most valuable direct favor the Government has ever bestowed upon agriculture and the mechanic arts was unquestionably the endowment of the so-called agricultural colleges, where the leading object provided was "to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes." That they have done and are doing educational work most highly appreciated and of the widest national value, and a kind of work never more urgently needed by our country than at the present time, there is no doubt.

To meet the competition of the vast fields around the globe, which have within the last decade shown in their increase of cattle, sheep, and grain their marvelous productive power, our agriculturists require all the aid of science, all the light of the widest human experience to not only cheapen the processes of production, but to tempt industry to supply all the markets with the best, or such superior products as will command the highest prices. The prodigious increase in our own country of the acreage actually cultivated in staple crops is exhibited by comparing the 113,412,764 acres of 1874 so devoted with the 211,000,000 of 1889—about doubling in fifteen years.

The land-grant colleges are institutions that do not lift the cost of their instruction out of the reach of the many, nor generate habits of profuse expenditure, and are healthy homes for students, especially for those destitute of hereditary resources, who look only to a life of honorable effort and labor.

The most advanced studies were not, it will be remembered, to be excluded from these colleges, and whenever provided with sufficient resources they should be ready to offer all the learning demanded by any portion of our American people, and yet they must not fall short in the branches related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, but must lead in the highest instruction asked for by the industrial classes, which have made and must keep our country foremost in character, wealth, and power among nations.

The vast mining wealth of iron, copper, lead, tin, nickel, silver, and gold, developed and undeveloped and abounding in many of our States and Territories, requires much scientific research and practical work, for which thoroughly equipped skilled men are indispensable, and these colleges are furnishing and will furnish trained young men for this great work.

Military tactics also were included among the subjects to be taught in the land-grant colleges, and such instruction is given by the most competent teachers our country affords. As we have only a very small standing Army and a rather small organized militia or national guard, the thousands of trained young men who annually graduate from these colleges, should our country ever need their services, will not forget how "to set a squadron in the field," and will be found, as a reserve force, of immense value—a value hardly less than that confidently relied upon from our renowned national institution at West Point.

In 1887 agricultural-experiment stations, in connection with the colleges established by Congress under the act of 1862, were provided for by an appropriation to each State, and forty-three of such stations have been attached to these colleges as a separate and independent work, and they expend and account for the money in strict accordance with the provisions of this very important act of Congress. The Commissioner of Education in his last report speaks of the effect of this act as follows:

The appropriation to each State by the Government for the maintenance of experiment stations has had a very stimulating influence upon the agricultural departments of the colleges here considered.

This bill does not interfere with the proceeds of land sales set apart for the support of these experiment stations.

The bill now under consideration, as will be seen, proposes to appropriate only a very inconsiderable part of the funds which may accrue whether from the sales of the last fragments of our public lands or from what may be received on debts due to the Government from the land-grant railroads, which have been enriched by millions upon millions of acres, and which have served to build up the great continental transportation enterprises, now harmoniously binding together all the national and patriotic interests of our common country with veritable "hooks of steel."

If some share of these magnificent land grants can now be recouped and permanently devoted to the beneficent educational purposes here proposed, they will have been utilized for national objects of even more transcendent urgency than those to which they were originally so grandly applied.

If the measure were wholly an experiment or an ill-born crotchet in the cradle of some local nurse, its summary rejection might be endured without the grief of many mourners, but it has been already widely tested, and for years sustained by the practical work of colleges now established. Nearly every State offers earnest testimony as to their positive success and steadily increasing merits. In a recent report from the Bureau of Education upon The History of Federal and State Aid to Higher Education, it is stated, under the head of "The land grant for colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts," that "Next to the Ordinance of 1787 the Congressional grant of 1862 is the most important educational enactment in America." That is the opinion of educators. The students of these colleges are frequently sought after and given remunerative employment before they have completed their course of studies. I know of one five-year-old graduate who now receives a salary as a professor larger than that of the president of the college where he graduated.

Forty-eight of these institutions now are annually sending forth a large number of vigorous young men to scientific, agricultural, mechanical, educational, and other industrial careers, and they are all loudly asking further favors for their respective State institutions. The funds derived from the national grant of 1862, generously supplemented by the gifts from the several States, have borne healthy and excellent fruit, but it is everywhere manifest that funds larger in amount could be used with more advantage and with much greater results, and it is certain that larger funds are absolutely required to fully and efficiently equip these colleges in nearly every State. Something more than a blackboard and a piece of chalk is wanted. A laboratory, with an extensive stock of chemicals, scientific instruments and apparatus, libraries, museums, mineralogical cabinets, military halls, and gymnasiums can not be had without some expense, but they are also prime necessities. Sharp competition is met with in securing and retaining professors of advanced scientific acquirements from the eager demand of older institutions which have been richly endowed by their friends and by their alumni during many generations. Able instructors, or the stars of growing magnitude, now command far higher salaries than formerly, and when discovered or created they soon learn their own current value. The branches of scientific learning have been greatly multiplied and expanded in modern days, and there is a public and progressive demand for them which these colleges must supply at whatever cost.

The great power over the modern history of the world, as exhibited by England through the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries, "a power," as Webster said, "which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts," is not to be attributed to her hereditary rulers so much as to her universities and great high schools, to Oxford and Cambridge, and especially to Eton, Harrow, and Rugby, where her rulers have been chiefly educated. Heredity, it is true, formerly monopolized the government, and it also largely monopolized the highest obtainable culture. Her leaders have been and still are mainly well-trained men, and only recently has much serious attention been directed there to the education of the industrial classes. Americans, however, stake their destiny on universal education.

Dr. G. Brown Goode, in his recent work on the Origin of the National Scientific and Educational Institutions of the United States, says that recently "there has been a great increase in the number of persons whose time is chiefly devoted to original scientific work," and that "nothing has contributed so materially to this state of affairs as the passage by Congress in 1862 of the bill to establish scientific and industrial educational institutions in every State." And he further says:

The movement was at first unpopular among American educators, but after a quarter of a century of trial the land-grant college system has not only demonstrated its right to exist, but is by many regarded as forming one of the chief strongholds of our national prosperity.

I will give a single extract from Washington's Farewell Address, showing his profound sympathy with measures like the one under consideration:

Promote, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the increase and diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

Finally, let me urge that the land-grant colleges are American institutions, established by Congress, and, if a small pittance is needed to perfect and complete their organization or to equip them for educational work that is designed to elevate the condition of the greater part of the American people, I shall confidently hope that it will be granted without reluctance and with full faith in the national benefits that can not fail to accrue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question or two, if it will not disturb him, as to these funds that are to be drawn from the payments of the subsidized railroads. For instance, I should like to know whether under the provisions of this bill—I have had no opportunity to examine into it—in taking these funds in the manner provided in the bill there will be any interference with the sinking-fund arrangement now existing for crediting and investing for the benefit of these companies on interest moneys paid in by them and applicable to the payment of their record indebtedness.

Mr. MORRILL. Not in the least. If the Senator from Nebraska had listened to me he would have seen that there will be no interference.

Mr. PADDOCK. I heard most of the remarks of the Senator, but nothing upon this particular point. I will take the assurance of the Senator from Vermont on the point. There is another question that I should like to propound to him, as to whether there is any authority in the bill for granting lands directly upon which commercial or floating certificates may issue, to be purchased and used by speculators in locating lands for speculative purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all. In order to avoid the numerous amendments which were made in the bill as reported, I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute containing all the amendments, which will save reading the bill for action upon the respective amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. Is the proposed substitute House bill 10515?

Mr. MORRILL. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire if the substitute comes from the committee or does the Senator offer it as his own amendment?

Mr. MORRILL. I offer it on my own behalf. I will say, however, that I submitted it to all the members of the Committee on Education and Labor who were present. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] was not present.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what changes the substitute makes in the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Is the substitute in print?

Mr. MORRILL. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? If not, the substitute will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read subject to objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute will be read. The Secretary proceeded to read the substitute amendment offered by Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. MORRILL. The chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor a little prefers that we should take up the original bill and make the amendments proposed by the committee. I think I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator then withdraws the substitute, by leave?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. It is just like the reported bill except one slight amendment, but there is likely to be confusion if we take it up.

Mr. GEORGE. What does the Senator say?

Mr. BLAIR. The substitute is just the report of the Senate committee with a slight amendment, and I thought if we adhered to the report of the committee we should be less likely to get into confusion and it would save the trouble of reading a long document here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks leave to withdraw his amendment in the nature of the substitute. The Chair hears no objection; and the first amendment reported to the original bill by the Committee on Education and Labor will be stated.

The Secretary read the first amendment, which was, in section 1, line 25, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and in line 27, at the end of the section, to insert "so long as such receipts and credits shall be sufficient therefor;" so as to read:

He shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of said receipts for public lands after deducting such expenditures. The Secretary of the Treasury shall in like manner, at the close of each fiscal year, beginning as of June 30, 1890, ascertain and add to the sum so certified to him by the Secretary of the Interior all moneys paid, or receipts, into the Treasury, or credits allowed by the United States, to any railroads therein during the then last fiscal year by all railroad companies, or their assigns or successors, named in the act of Congress approved May 7, 1878, and the appropriations which are to be made to the several States and Territories under this act for the benefit of colleges shall be made from funds in the Treasury arising from receipts and credits therein on account of the public lands and railroads aforesaid, so long as such receipts and credits shall be sufficient therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "out," to strike out the words "from the college fund arising;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 9, after the word "shall," to insert the words "upon the order of the trustees of the college;" so as to read:

That the sums hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of colleges shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State or Territorial treasurer, or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State or Territory to receive the same, who shall, upon the order of the trustees of the college, immediately pay over said sums to the treasurers of the respective colleges entitled to receive the same, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 16, after the word "disbursement," to insert:

Showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction. The grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purpose of said grants: Provided, That payments of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of Legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting in line 18, after the word "instruction:"

Including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and in a thorough training in the English language.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where will that come in?

Mr. BLAIR. It is an amendment to the amendment which comes in after the word "instruction" in the eighteenth line.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read, beginning with the first words of the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts, and the facilities for such instruction, including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life, and in a thorough training in the English language. The grants of moneys authorized, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I am in hopes that that amendment will not be adopted. There can be but one main purpose in it, and that is to give the Federal Government supervision of education in the States. If the desire is to aid the agricultural colleges of the States I have no objection to the appropriation proposed, but if the object is to make a pretext for taking the control and supervision of that education away from the States, then I think it is very seriously objectionable. Besides the amendment which was read, section 3 provides:

That the sums hereby appropriated to the States and Territories for the further endowment and support of colleges shall be annually paid on or before the 31st day of July of each year, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the State or Territorial treasurer, or to such officer as shall be designated by the laws of such State or Territory to receive the same—

Now, it seems to me it might stop there very well; but I shall not object to its going further—and such treasurers shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Commissioner of Education, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received and of its disbursement—

That would advise the Government fully of the application of the money; but it proceeds—showing specifically its application to instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts and the facilities for such instruction.

That would still advise the Government that the money had been applied according to its design. Then follow the words of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which I trust will not be adopted:

Including the various branches of mathematical, physical, natural, and economic science, with special reference to their applications in the industries of life and in a thorough training in the English language.

Down to the word "language" is the part that I propose to strike out.

Now, that you may see the force of this, Mr. President, the fourth section, commencing at line 14, requires that—

An annual report by the president of each of said colleges shall be made to the Secretary of Agriculture, as well as to the Secretary of the Interior, regarding the condition and progress of each college, including statistical information in relation to its receipts and expenditures, its library, the number of its students and professors, and also as to any improvements and experiments made under the direction of any experiment stations attached to said colleges, with their costs and results, and such other industrial and economical statistics as may be regarded as useful, one copy of which shall be transmitted by mail free to all other colleges further endowed under this act.

Then, to still further show what the purpose of this measure is, in section 6, beginning at line 16, is this paragraph:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the proper administration of this law, through the Commissioner of Education—

To that I have no special objection, but I object to what follows—and they are authorized and directed, under the approval of the President, to make all needful rules and regulations not inconsistent with its provisions to carry this law into effect.

These three provisions are in the bill, as it seems to me, needlessly to put the systems of education, the control of the details of these institutions, under the Government of the United States. Surely that can not be necessary, and surely it does not recognize the fact that the systems of education of the different States belong to the States. It ignores the fact that in the face of the Constitution we by this bill propose to usurp the detailed regulation of schools in the States.

Mr. President, I shall insist on these provisions going out of the bill. With them out, with the appropriation made, with the schools left under the general provisions appropriating the money and specifying the purpose for which it is appropriated, and requiring the necessary reports to be made to the Government to show how it has been expended, and that it has been expended for the purpose for which it was appropriated, I am content; but when we go beyond that and take up these three several provisions which contemplate the idea that it is to put these colleges in their detailed regulations, and as to the subject-matter to be taught, and what is to be done in them, under the regulation of the Federal Government, I trust we are not prepared to go that far.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will allow me.

Mr. GORMAN. I beg pardon.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the bill is to be considered the Chair will regard the Senate as being under the five-minute rule hereafter in debate.

Mr. GORMAN. I will give way to the Senator from Vermont for a moment, with pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am a little surprised that the Senator from Texas should object to the additional amendment here proposed. It all relates to the same topic. Under the bill without that amendment it would be a little doubtful whether one of these colleges might have the power to employ a professor in veterinary science, or whether they could teach even the English language, or whether they could teach ordinary mathematics. I trust the Senator from Texas will see that this merely re-enforces the general object of the bill. It is one which a large number of the presidents of the colleges seem to regard as indispensable, because they would not wish—

Mr. BLAIR. It was suggested by them, was it not?

Mr. MORRILL. It has been suggested by them, and as I understand has been approved by Farmers' Alliances and by all sorts of bodies.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, it was the great importance of this bill which induced me to object to its consideration to-day. Under the rule we are to take up unobjected cases on the Calendar. The Senator from Vermont has stated clearly the provisions of the bill, and I shall object to its further consideration and ask that the bill may be printed in form with the amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. It is already printed.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to make one observation? I wish to suggest an amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I think the bill requires consideration in regard to one point which I wish to bring to the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Vermont.

In the first place, the bill uses the term "colleges" in its definition of the institutions which are to receive this aid. There is a good deal of question in my mind what would be the precise legal meaning of the word "college."

If I can have the attention of my friend from Vermont I will say that the bill confines its benefit to what it describes as "colleges." There is a good deal of doubt in my mind as to what meaning might be given to the term "college" in the execution of the provision of such a statute. There is the Miller Institute, in Virginia, for instance, which is an institution largely endowed and which does not have the name of college, but which is intended expressly for instruction in the mechanic arts. There is a similar one in Georgia, I understand, recently endowed, a very valuable one, the name of which I do not remember. There is one in my own city of Worcester called the Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

These institutions do not call themselves colleges, but they are institutions of as high a grade and as useful, and they are specifically devoted to instruction in the mechanic arts.

That doubt ought to be removed in this bill, it seems to me.

Then another thing; it is very questionable whether the benefit of the bill can be extended even at the will of the Legislature of any State to any institution, unless it is one hereafter incorporated, which did not receive the benefit of the original benefaction. It says in the proposed amendment, and also, I think, in the original bill, that the money shall be given by the assent of the Legislature of the State. It does not say that the Legislature of the State is to determine which one of the institutions which are within the scope of the bill shall receive it.

Now, there are institutions in some of the States where they have agricultural colleges like the very three that I have suggested, which ought, in my judgment, to receive a portion of this endowment. It ought not to be confined to those who happened to be in existence when the act of 1862 was passed or to those which happened to be first incorporated thereafter.

I desired before the bill passed from the consideration of the Senate to call the attention of the Senate and of the two Senators to that suggestion in order that an amendment may be prepared.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I think the bill meets both the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts as it now is. I have certainly always so understood it. Section 2 provides:

That there shall be, and hereby is, annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid as hereinafter provided, to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts now established, or which may be hereafter established, in accordance with an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862.

It applies to the colleges already established or which may be hereafter established in accordance with that act. The provisions of that act were quite specific, appropriating a certain amount of the public lands and the land scrip which was issued upon them for the benefit of agricultural colleges to be located in and established by the several States.

This bill carries to each State the amount of $15,000 to be applied to those colleges for agriculture and the mechanic arts established under that act. There is in nearly all the States just one college, and that one college would take the entire $15,000 unless the States should see fit from those funds to establish others, and in that case they can divide, if they see fit, the amount which they receive from the country, to wit, this $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from New Hampshire that objection has been made to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The Chair will, I hope, pardon me in making a suggestion in reply to an objection to the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts makes, and which I think the bill is quite distinctly clear from as it now is. I hope the Senator will examine the second section with a view to see whether his objections are not fully met.

Mr. HOAR. I have examined it very carefully, and it does not seem to me that they are. The word "college" is used, and it is applied to the colleges established in accordance with the provisions of the act of 1862.

Mr. BLAIR. It applies to colleges for agriculture and the mechanic arts.

Mr. HOAR. I understand.

Mr. BLAIR. It was not the understanding of the committee that we were recommending an annual appropriation for an indefinite number of colleges which might hereafter come to be established. Meritorious colleges undoubtedly will be established including the same subject-matter; but it was thought that the States where these colleges are should receive a certain specific amount, $15,000 a year, and let them appropriate that money, as they necessarily must now, to the single agricultural college that exists in each State.

If there should be subsequently from those same funds—and I do not see how it can be done, for the whole amount that was realized from the lands under that act is already invested in every State—but if it is conceivable that they should be subdivided and those institutions multiplied with the funds already in the possession of the State, then let them divide this annual appropriation for the support of several if they see fit, but otherwise let it be concentrated upon a single one of the institutions. However, they must be institutions which derive their vitality from the original act of Congress making appropriations of the public lands. The nation itself certainly ought not to be dragged beyond what originates in that specific act of Congress in the way of support of the agricultural colleges and those of the mechanic arts which the States may see fit to multiply among themselves hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL. If objection is made I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the bill be now considered notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, from the debate which has already occurred it is very evident that we ought to have an opportunity to look more carefully at this bill and the amendments offered by the Senator from Vermont. I make the suggestion not in opposition to the bill, for I may be very heartily in favor of it when it comes up at the proper time for discussion; but I submit to the Chair that the unanimous understanding had some time since was that this day should be devoted to unobjected cases upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that was the unanimous agreement of the Senate; but as the present occupant of the chair understands the ruling of the permanent occupant of the chair, a Senator has a right to make that motion, notwithstanding the agreement was unanimously made.

Mr. MORRILL. I would not make the motion, Mr. President, but I am obliged to be absent in committee most of the time, and it is the understanding that the silver bill will be up on Monday. I had given notice that I would try to call this bill up on Monday; but thereafter I learn that the appropriation bills will be ready, so that the time of the Senate is likely to be occupied, and unless this bill can be speedily passed and go to the other House it is no use for the Senate to consider it at all, as late in the session as it is at the present time. I therefore hope that the Senate will proceed with the consideration of the bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will feel compelled under the ruling heretofore to put the question on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not insist upon that. The bill will not be finished to-day, I assure him, if it is taken up now. It is doubtful whether there is a quorum here, and with the misunderstanding that there is in regard to the bill it will lead to discussion which will last all day, and nothing will be done. That is simply the result of it now; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I also make a suggestion with the others on this motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the bill will be taken up and acted on and passed. I regard it as one of the most meritorious bills ever introduced into this body. It has been very carefully considered, and I do not know that the Senate will at any other time be in a better condition to amend it, if amendment is necessary, than now.

These agricultural colleges, in my opinion, have done more good and are likely to do more good in the near future for the advancement of the great farming interests of this country and the great mass of the people than all the rest of the colleges and universities put together. I hope the bill will be considered to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. GORMAN. I desire only to say that if this motion prevails as a matter of course it breaks up the understanding that we have had and under which we have been acting for the past month, and will result, I have no doubt, as the Senator from Missouri has said, in the destruction of all other business for to-day, and break up the rule for the Calendar hereafter.

It is perfectly well known that a great many Senators look to other public business on Saturday, when they know that the rule has been that we would proceed only with unobjected cases on the Calendar. I think it is manifestly unfair to them to take up a bill of this kind. I do not refer to the merits of the bill, as the Senator from Mississippi has done. It is to observe the rule that I have made this suggestion.

I withdrew the objection, as we all do under such circumstances, and I was glad to hear from the Senator from Vermont, who presented this matter very ably, as he always does. Otherwise I should have interposed the objection, and insisted upon it at the moment, but out of compliment to him, as being due to him as the father of the Senate, I withdrew the objection.

I shall therefore be compelled to call for the yeas and nays on this vote, and I shall not regard it as a test vote upon the merits of the bill, but a vote in the negative being simply to adhere to the rule which has prevailed for the past six weeks or two months in this body.

I trust the Senator from Vermont will not insist upon his motion and compel us to resort to the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, if there is any desire on the part of Senators to have this bill considered, and if they will give unanimous consent, so that it shall be considered next Thursday, after the morning business, I will consent to have it go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody will object to that, I suppose. I suggest that the bill be printed with the amendments already adopted and the amendments pending. Then every Senator can see it and have it before him, and know exactly what to do.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection, and asks that it be considered as the order of business on next Thursday—at 2 o'clock?

Mr. MORRILL. No, after the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I am not inclined to object, but no such consent understanding will displace the unfinished business, and I do not know exactly what it amounts to. However, I shall not interfere with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the order be made to print the bill with the amendments already adopted and the amendment pending, and then we can see exactly what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. MORRILL. By unanimous consent, I understand that the bill is to be taken up immediately after the morning business on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is to be taken up immediately after the morning business on Thursday next.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the report of the Committee on Education and Labor be printed in connection with the proceedings on this bill, so that the whole matter may appear in the RECORD to those who may wish to investigate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the committee will be printed in the RECORD unless objection is made. The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

The Senate Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred Senate bill 3714, entitled "An act to establish an educational fund and apply the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of science and industrial education," have examined the same, and report the bill back with sundry amendments, and as amended recommend its passage.

OBJECT OF THIS BILL.

The object of the bill is to place the system of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the law of July 2, 1862, upon a basis of assured support for all time.

These institutions are now thoroughly established and have already demonstrated that they must be accepted as among the chief agencies through and by which the new and practical industrial education of the people is to be accomplished. Although in the popular mind they are intimately associated with the advancement of the fundamental pursuit of agriculture, yet they are equally devoted to the diffusion of scientific education as applied to the mechanic arts, and thus they embrace within their jurisdiction the whole field of the practical application of science to the wants and welfare of man.

The long period of struggle through which they have passed during which it has sometimes been doubtful whether as a system they would be able so to commend themselves to the confidence of the nation as well as of the States as to secure from the national Treasury such permanent contributions as shall insure their perpetuity has now passed away, and on the 2d of March, 1887, an act was passed appropriating $15,000 yearly for the establishment of experiment stations in connection with these colleges in the several States. Of great importance as was this measure careful examination shows that substantial and permanent annual provision for the regular and general expenses of these institutions is indispensable for their proper support.

The statements of the able representatives of these colleges made before your committee are in part embodied in this report and they fully show the necessity of the passage of the bill.

Perhaps contrary to the general impression, the proper equipment of one of these colleges is far more expensive, being at least ten times greater than that of an ordinary classical institution. A college of agriculture and of the mechanic arts is not a cheap affair, and the sooner we awake to the idea that it will and ought to cost something to spread that knowledge of facts and principles which will change the drudgery of common toil to the dignity and delight of intellectual and ennobling occupations the better.

To accomplish this is the work of the great system of institutions in whose support we urge the passage of this bill.

Just in proportion as their mission is accomplished shall we find the people seeking the pleasure, profit, and honor of life in the prosecution of those pursuits which produce for the general good, and which must always embrace the mass of the population.

The passage of this measure, which is introduced by the distinguished father of this system of colleges, will place them upon a sure foundation so long as we are a nation and link his name with theirs in one common immortality.

So far as respect and recognition of great public services may properly influence us we would urge the enactment of this bill into law, antedated as we are that the continued usefulness and development of the colleges is dependent upon permanent national aid in their support.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES ABROAD.

We call special attention to the accompanying data, showing the extent and influence of like institutions in several of the countries of Europe, which demonstrate the astonishing benefits which we may expect ultimately to derive from our own.

France supports the Institut Nat. Agronomique, at Paris, representing the highest form of agricultural education; 3 regional schools or colleges, 9 practical schools for those able to pay a moderate sum, 20 farm schools, 40 evening schools, 1 forestry, 3 veterinary, 3 horticulture, and a great number of minor ones on special subjects; 50 departmental professors of agriculture, whose duties consist in traveling through their district and giving instruction in agriculture, the whole at an annual expense of over $1,000,000.

Results: Half her population engaged in agriculture. Her exports in food and cereals in 1884 footed up to $165,000,000. Next to the United States and Russia she has become the greatest wheat-producing country in the world. Her forests, carefully superintended by pupils from her great school at Nancy, yield her an annual revenue of $50,000,000. By judicious selection of seed, made at her agricultural colleges, the wheat yield has been increased three and four fold. The cultivation of the sugar-beet, carried to the highest perfection, has twice saved the country from national bankruptcy.

Germany supports 21 agricultural institutes or colleges for the highest instruction in agriculture, 26 agricultural schools for the sons of the more wealthy farmers, 40 farming schools for the sons of small farmers, 300 supplemental schools covering two winter courses, 9 technical high schools, 964 industrial and trade schools, 18 dairy schools, 6 royal academies of forestry and many of lower grade, 3 veterinary schools and 3 shoeing schools, 2 drainage and irrigation, a number on bee-keeping, sugar-making, fish-culture, brewing and distilling, etc.

Results: The universal testimony has been to the beneficial effects of these schools. Better rotations have been put in practice; hand labor has given place to improved machinery; the number of acres under cultivation has been multiplied; the product per acre has increased twofold; a great variety has been added to the list of products; the adaptation of crops to soil has been more carefully studied, and in twenty years it is claimed that the value of the agricultural products has been increased 100 per cent., while, with a population of 45,200,000, she supports 213 to the square mile.

Württemberg, a little kingdom of 7,675 square miles and a population of 1,971,118, supports the agricultural institute at Hohenheim, with 21 teachers; a veterinary school at Stuttgart, with 13 teachers; 3 farm schools, with 8 students each; a viticultural school at Weinsberg, with 15 students; 5 higher agricultural schools, with 89 students; 882 evening and winter schools, with 20,100 students.

STATEMENTS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE.

The general committee of the presidents of the colleges of agriculture and of the mechanic arts have ably urged the passage of this bill.

Colonel Brigham, representing the national organization of the Patrons of Industry, and Colonel Polk, on behalf of the National Farmers' Alliance, also strongly advocated this bill, and several amendments have been made in accordance with their recommendations.

The whole case is well stated in these memorials and addresses to the committee from the representatives of these colleges, which are made a part of this report:

To the Committee on Education and Labor, United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: Colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established in every State of the Union under the United States law (of July 2, 1862), are now educating nearly ten thousand students. They are devoted to the thorough equipment of American citizens for the practical work of life. They train young men in those branches of learning and science especially which give success and especial prominence in the industrial pursuits, in thorough scientific farming, in farm management and economy, and in all the industries where physical science is so applied as to render labor profitable to the man who labors. Large numbers of the graduates of these colleges are found in all the States engaged in useful vocations as farmers, land surveyors, civil engineers, architects, draughtsmen, chemists, and chemical manufacturers, metallurgists, mining and mechanical engineers, electricians, etc. As a rule, all who finish a course of study at these institutions are at once in demand for remunerative positions, many of them as teachers of natural science in other institutions, where the good effects of these colleges are thus multiplied.

The scientific work required to be done in the courses of instruction and experiment at the colleges which we represent demands an expensive equipment by way of laboratories, machine-shops, apparatus, experimental farming, etc. Institutions for teaching natural science, it is well understood by all, require a much larger outlay for the "plant" and for their annual work than do purely literary institutions. And the people of our country have come to demand of the colleges organized under the land-grant act a thoroughness of work in natural science and its applications which shall not suffer when compared with that given at the oldest and most richly endowed colleges and universities of the land. The farmers manifest a growing interest in the work of these colleges. When the official heads of the two great farmers' organizations of our country yesterday appeared before your committee you will recall such expression as this, the words of one of them: "Our farmers have learned that they must be lifted to a higher plane by education, and by education of the head."

The especial and immediate need of these colleges for more generous support from the Government which created them arises from these two facts: The cost of a proper equipment for scientific work, and the great increase in the number of students within the last few years, demanding a proportionately increased expenditure.

Except in a few cases where the circumstances were especially favorable, the proceeds of the original land grant were not sufficient suitably to endow and equip a college such as is now demanded. But for the first fifteen or twenty years the colleges earliest established were able to exist, for they had, as a rule, but few students. They were not fully appreciated. They were somewhat in a "vacuum" of the popular demand of the time. Within the last five or six years these colleges have entered upon a second era in their history, an era marked by a great increase in the public confidence felt in them, and a very great increase in the number of students attending them. The experiment stations by their work have stimulated this interest, and have been of the greatest practical value to farmers; but these stations, while they have increased the responsibility and the usefulness of the colleges, have not given the colleges any added resources for their own proper work.

These colleges have now reached a point in their development where their future growth and usefulness is conditioned upon their securing increased facilities for doing a larger work; that is, upon increased endowment or annual income. The next five years are the critical years. We ask you to provide now for the additional support which is needed to do the most efficient work for the increasing number of students. If such needed support is promptly given the work already so well begun will become permanent and will be productive of the best results for the agricultural and industrial interests of our whole country.

In accordance with suggestions made by this committee, we have considered carefully what is needed at once to make this work most effective. We favor the same amount for each State. And while we know that in some States a larger sum would be most opportune and would be wisely used, we favor and urge at least $15,000 a year, to be provided for at once for each State; and that this sum should be from year to year increased until a limit of not less than $25,000 per annum is reached. And we respectfully request that this committee, either by the bill now before it or in some other way, make permanent provision to meet this pressing need.

OFFICE OF THE DEAN, Hanover, N. H., April 22, 1890.

"Resolved, That the board of trustees of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts believe that the bill introduced into the Senate of the United States by Senator JUSTIN S. MORRILL, of Vermont, to establish an educational fund in aid of public education and the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education, is a wise and beneficial measure, and they earnestly desire its passage by Congress, and they hereby instruct Professor C. H. PETTEE, dean of the college, to furnish each member of Congress from New Hampshire with a copy of this resolution."

In accordance with the above vote, I herewith transmit a copy of resolutions passed by the trustees of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts, and urge your careful consideration and attention.

C. H. PETTEE, Dean.

Senator H. W. BLAIR,
Washington, D. C.

Trustees of the New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts.

[Maine State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, executive department, M. C. Fernald, president.]

ORONO, ME., April 4, 1890.

DEAR SIR: A few days ago I received a copy of bill S. 3256, introduced by Senator MORRILL and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Should it receive the sanction of Congress and the approval of the President, it would go far toward equalizing the very great inequalities arising from the unequal amounts of land-scrip assigned by the act of 1862 to the land-grant colleges in the several States, and the still greater inequalities resulting from the variable management of the scrip by the different States.

When the act of 1862 was approved by President Lincoln the possibilities of liberal endowment to the institutions designed to be benefited by it were not comprehended, and hence we find resulting from it endowments ranging from $50,000 to between $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, the principal ranges being between $100,000 and $500,000.

In the State of Maine the amount realized from the sale of the land-scrip was $118,300, yielding an annual revenue of $5,915. From accumulated interest added to the original endowment, and the munificence of one of the earlier governors of the State, the present endowment of the college is $231,300, yielding an annual revenue of $10,465. The State appropriations for buildings and other purposes have amounted to $277,218.

While the State has been fairly generous toward the college, it (the college) sadly needs the additional annual revenue for current expenses which Mr. MORRILL's bill would give. What is true of this institution in this regard is equally true of nearly all the land-grant colleges.

I sincerely trust your committee will favorably report the bill, and so follow up its report as to secure its passage.

I have the honor to be yours, very respectfully,

M. C. FERNALD, President, etc.
The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE EDUCATION AND LABOR,
Washington, D. C.

STATE COLLEGE OF KENTUCKY, Lexington, Ky., April 29, 1890.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request I send you by this mail, and through you to the committee of which you are chairman, the inclosed statement, setting forth our immediate necessities, how we could advantageously employ $25,000 the first year in internal expansion, and how we could advantageously and economically expend an equal amount each year thereafter. This addition to our income would vitalize our existing resources and more than quadruple the value and effectiveness of our work.

Thanking you for your courtesy while before your committee,
I have the honor to be, with much regard, your obedient servant,
JAMES K. PATTERSON.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR,
Chairman Committee on Education,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The following expenditures can be made with great profit to the State College of Kentucky the first year. These expenditures would of course be in addition to those now made out of the already existing funds:

Chemical apparatus.....	$1,500
Zoological cabinet.....	2,000
Biological apparatus.....	1,000
Library:
Botanical.....	1,000
Zoological.....	1,000
Agricultural.....	1,000
Biological.....	1,000
Geological.....	1,000
Engineering plant.....	1,500
Mechanical.....	2,900

The professorship of agriculture, horticulture, and veterinary science should be subdivided into three. This would require two more professors.

The professorship of natural science, comprising biology, zoology, botany, anatomy and physiology, and geology, should be subdivided into five. This would require the addition of four professors.

The professorship of chemistry should be subdivided into two. It now comprises general, agricultural, and organic chemistry.

The immediate appointment of a professor of mechanical engineering, a professor of physics, and an assistant professor of civil engineering is necessary. The additional professorships would then be as follows:

Horticulture.....	$1,500
Botany.....	1,500
Anatomy and physiology.....	1,500
Veterinary science.....	1,500
Geology and mineralogy.....	1,500
Organic and agricultural chemistry.....	1,500
Physics.....	1,500
Mechanical engineering.....	1,500
Civil engineering.....	1,000

After the first year the necessary expenditures in addition to those already existing would be as follows:

Chemical apparatus (annually).....	$1,000
Zoological cabinet.....	1,000
Biological apparatus.....	500
Library:
Botanical.....	500
Zoological.....	500
Agricultural.....	500
Biological.....	500
Geological.....	500
Engineering plant.....	1,000
Mechanical.....	1,000
Physical laboratory.....	1,000
Professorship of agriculture.....	1,500
Professorship of horticulture.....	1,500
Professorship of veterinary science.....	1,500
Professorship of botany.....	1,500
Professorship of anatomy and physiology.....	1,500
Professorship of geology and mineralogy.....	1,500
Professorship of organic and agricultural chemistry.....	1,500
Professorship of mechanical engineering.....	1,500
Professorship of physics.....	1,500
Assistant professor of civil engineering.....	1,000
Miscellaneous expenditures.....	2,500
Total.....	25,000

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES K. PATTERSON.

The bill provides for the payment of $15,000 to each college the first year, increasing annually the appropriation to each $1,000 until the amount is $25,000, at which sum it shall remain permanent unless changed by future legislation. It is also provided that the appropriation shall be made from proceeds of the sale of public lands and from funds derived from payments by the railroads subsidized with money or lands by the Government so long as funds derived from those sources shall be sufficient.

The amounts to be derived annually from the railroads will probably not be less than $1,200,000. The net income from the sale of public lands has averaged nearly seven and one-half millions for the last ten years, but the supply from this source is not likely to continue for many years. Even when all the States have colleges in full operation at $25,000 annually to each college, the income from the railroads is likely to be sufficient for the next half century at least, so that there is no danger that the general moneys in the Treasury will be called upon for contribution to the support of these institutions.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 6, 1890.

SIR: I have received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office a letter dated the 5th instant, with inclosures, stating that he has received from you a letter dated the 2d instant, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, and requesting a statement showing the receipts from sales of public lands, including fees and commissions, for the ten years ended June 30, 1889.

I have the honor to inclose herewith, in reply to your request, a copy of the Commissioner's letter with the desired statement.

Very respectfully,

GEO. CHANDLER,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND LABOR, Senate.

* The professorship of agriculture should be omitted in this estimate. It is already provided for.—J. K. P.

LEWIS A. GROFF, Commissioner.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 5, 1890.

All which is respectfully submitted by

HENRY W. BLAIR,
For the Committee.

Mr. HOAR subsequently submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF MEAT PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3717) to amend "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust that will go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

LIGHT-STATION IN YORK RIVER.

The bill (S. 3494) to establish a light-station at or near Page's Rock, in York River, Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 to establish a light-station at or near Page's Rock, in York River, Virginia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. DENNIS.

The bill (S. 3078) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James H. Dennis was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-nine thousand six hundred and thirty-eight" and insert "twenty-five thousand six hundred and thirty-eight;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to James H. Dennis the sum of $25,638, being the sum found by the Court of Claims to be due to him by reason of certain contracts for the improvement of the Tennessee River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURETIES OF DENNIS MURPHY.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill (S. 1244) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy was passed over without prejudice in my absence. I ask that it may be now taken up.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve the sureties of Dennis Murphy, who was formerly paymaster and military storekeeper at the national armory at Harper's Ferry, Va., upon his official bond to the United States as such paymaster and military storekeeper, executed on the 28th of April, 1858, from any and all liabilities by reason of such suretyship.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DWIGHT HALL.

The bill (S. 1418) for the relief of Dwight Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claim made against the United States by Dwight Hall, of Wallingford, Conn., for the amount paid by him to the collector of internal revenue for the second district of Connecticut as taxes and penalties upon thirty thousand cigars manufactured by him and, previous to the payment of said tax or penalty, claimed to have been destroyed by an accidental fire; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Dwight Hall or his personal representatives, or the person or persons who may be lawfully entitled thereto, any sum of money found, on such investigation, to be equitably due on account of payment of said tax and penalty, or either of them, and the said sum, when paid, to be in full satisfaction and discharge of all claim as tax or penalties on said cigars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

The bill (S. 2660) to provide for opening alleys and constructing sewers in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are some provisions in that bill which I do not favor just now, and I think it had better be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the present consideration of the bill, it will go over.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, GA.

The bill (H. R. 188) for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Columbus and State of Georgia, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses; Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

No money shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Georgia shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The building herein provided for shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a public building thereon, at Columbus, in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes."

Mr. PASCO. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. PASCO were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill, asked for a further conference thereon, with instructions that the House conferees recede from the original amendment of the House, and had appointed Mr. E. B. TAYLOR, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. CULBERSON of Texas the managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

EASTERN BRANCH BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 2589) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the Benning Road, in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The bill will go over without prejudice.

MERCHANT MARINE AND OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

The bill (S. 3738) to place the American merchant marine, engaged in the foreign trade, upon an equality with that of other nations was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. That bill and the one succeeding can not be considered to-day under Rule VIII, and I give notice that some time during the following week I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the two bills, one being supplementary to the other and the same discussion practically applying to both bills. But I will ask that they retain their place and be passed over informally.

Mr. REAGAN. What two bills are they?

Mr. FRYE. Senate bill 3738 now reached and the bill (S. 3739) to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills will be passed over as requested by the Senator from Maine.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4296) granting a pension to John De Witt Clark;

A bill (H. R. 4427) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary E. Borke;

A bill (H. R. 4514) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burnett;

A bill (H. R. 5099) for the relief of Mrs. Angeline Green;

A bill (H. R. 7002) granting a pension to William Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 7473) for the relief of George P. Hartman;

A bill (H. R. 7915) granting a pension to Nancy Rarden;

A bill (H. R. 8167) granting a pension to Martha Hindman;

A bill (H. R. 8170) granting a pension to Elizabeth Keely;

A bill (H. R. 8226) granting a pension to James H. Fleming;

A bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to Ann Downey; and

A bill (H. R. 8604) granting a pension to Maria Brooks.

The bill (H. R. 6625) for the relief of William R. Boag was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to indulge me in a request for the consideration of the little bill which made so much commotion, which is simply to extend the time—

Mr. REAGAN. I think we had better go on with the Calendar. If we undertake to take up special cases I have one a little ahead that I should be very glad to call up; but I have not been willing to ask the Senate to leave the order of business to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the next bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

MICHIGAN MILITARY ACADEMY.

The bill (S. 3052) for the relief of the Michigan Military Academy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to relieve the Michigan Military Academy, at Orchard Lake, Mich., from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to that college under its bonds dated November 26, 1877, March 13, 1878, February 1, 1886, and December 15, 1888, as was destroyed by fire on April 21, 1889.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 3740) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Pierre, in Hughes County, and Fort Pierre, in Stanley County, in the State of South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. AUGUSTINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2865) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, after the words "right of way," to strike out "hereby granted," and in line 12, after the word "width," to strike out:

Except where side-tracks are constructed or to be constructed, and at such point or points the right of way shall not exceed 200 feet on each side of the main track or tracks of said company;

And insert:

And shall be subject to such change, revocation, or removal as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the railway company;

So as to make the section read:

That the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Florida, be, and is hereby, granted a right of way across the prolongation of "the lines" or ditch on the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., for the construction, maintenance, and use thereon of one or more tracks and sidings, as may be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the said right of way shall not exceed 100 feet in width, and shall be subject to such change, relocation, or removal as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, at the expense of the railway company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the said company shall provide and keep clear a sufficient channel at the proper grade for the flow into and out of the ditch in "the lines," and shall, upon request by the Secretary of War, provide a grade-crossing for teams and tram-cars across its trucks in the prolongation of "the lines."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section:

SEC. 3. That the work hereby authorized and directed shall be done to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT PEMBINA RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 7856) granting the right of way to the Duluth and Manitoba Railroad Company across the Fort Pembina reservation, in North Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President, I was about to ask unanimous consent to take up the pension bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will allow us to continue on the Calendar a little longer, say half an hour.

Mr. HOAR. Until half past 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will allow the Calendar to go on for half an hour longer. The pension cases are sure of consideration.

Mr. SAWYER. If Senators will consent at half past 3 to take up the pension bills, I shall not interfere now. I withdraw the request until that time.

ALMON R. TOBEY.

The bill (S. 2750) to remove the charge of desertion against Almon R. Tobey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the words "volunteers and," to strike out "that he give to the said Almon R. Tobey an honorable discharge from said organization" and insert "discharged on February 1, 1862, from military service by civil process on account of being under the age of eighteen years."

Mr. COCKRELL. In the print of that bill a part of the amendment has been left out. After the word "and," in line 7, the words "and substitute therefor" ought to be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill so as to make it read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove from the records of the War Department the charge of desertion standing against Almon R. Tobey, late a private in Company I, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Infantry Volunteers, and substitute therefor, "discharged on February 1, 1862, from military service by civil process on account of being under the age of eighteen years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

The bill (H. R. 75) to fix the regular terms of the circuit and district courts for the southern district of Alabama was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY C. BARNEY.

The bill (S. 3134) to perfect the military record of Henry C. Barney, of Pella, Tex., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Secretary of War to enter on the rolls of Company A, Seventh Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, the name of Henry C. Barney as duly mustered into the service of the United States on the 12th of June, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURETIES OF JAMES D. REYMERT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2310) for the relief of M. A. Fulton, Silas Staples, and the other sureties upon the official bond of James D. Reymert, executed to the United States on the 7th of February, 1860, as receiver of public moneys.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMANDER DENNIS W. MULLAN.

The joint resolution (J. R. 66) authorizing Commander Dennis W. Mullan, United States Navy, to accept a medal presented to him by the Chilean Government was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I would like to have some explanation from the Committee on Foreign Relations whether we are to pass a special act of Congress as a memento to accompany every officer who may visit the headquarters of any foreign army and stay there a few days for the purpose of making observations and then return. This is all that is stated here; this resolution says:

That Commander Dennis W. Mullan, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a medal presented to him by the Government of Chili, through the State Department of the United States, as a memento of his presence with the headquarters of the Chilean army at the battles of Chorrillos and Miraflores, in Peru, by virtue of an official order issued November 20, 1880, by Capt. J. A. Howell, United States Navy, then commanding the United States war-ship Adams, off Callao, Peru, to Commander Dennis W. Mullan to accompany General Baquedano, chief of the Chilean military forces, for the purpose of observing, as a representative of the American Navy, the military and naval operations then going on between the Governments of Chili and Peru, and making a report thereon to the proper authorities of the Government of the United States.

That is very distinguished service, very gallant, very meritorious, but I have never found that the Government of the United States has authorized a man to accept a medal for such stuff as that.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Senator will permit me to make a single word of explanation, I think he will withdraw his objection. The Committee on Foreign Relations has not been inclined to recommend the acceptance of these decorations except under special circumstances. There is, of course, no very large merit in this man's services while observing these battles, but the committee were influenced mainly by the merit of this man. He is one of the most gallant officers in our Navy, and he was at Samoa in command of one of our vessels there, and at the risk of his life led a company of marines on board of the American vessel to protect the natives against the assaults made on them there, and also aided in rescuing men during the terrific storm there which wrecked so many vessels. He exhibited most heroic conduct; so much so that the Legislature of Maryland unanimously passed a resolution commending him and praising him for his services on that occasion, and they have desired that this medal of honor shall be permitted to be conferred upon him.

The Secretary of State has also highly recommended that he be permitted to accept this medal. The services which were rendered at the battles referred to in the joint resolution were not very important, to be sure, nor very valuable, but as an indication of the recognition of merit on the part of the Government of this man this is recommended, and I think therefore it is not worth while to defeat the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, Mr. Mullan is undoubtedly a very gallant officer and he deserves every commendation from the people of the United States, so far as I know; but the precise thing for which this decoration is to be given was not on account of what he did at Samoa, which happened some years after his being in Chili, but on account of the fact that through grace or favor he, like every other officer in the Navy and the Army, wanted to see something of foreign countries and affairs, which is perfectly praiseworthy.

Mr. PAYNE. The Senator is mistaken, if he will allow me. It was not at his own request. He was designated by the commander of our navy in that part of the world. An English vessel tendered conveyance to the scene of the battle to all foreigners desiring to visit it, and he went with the rest of the party. He made a report which was said to be very creditable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly so, Mr. President; but anybody who knows the gallantry and the enterprise of the officers of the Army and the Navy knows very well that there is not an opportunity offered within reach or within sight for these officers to do that sort of thing that there is not a struggle among every one in the ward-room to get that opportunity to distinguish and decorate himself. It is all perfectly right. Let them try it, as they have year in and year out. Here one goes to Europe, another goes to South America, another goes to China, and so on and so on.

Some go to the Paris exposition, not a very dangerous thing, except to the pocket of the officer—it may be to that—but not to his life or health, and then comes a medal.

The policy of the United States, settled by the fathers, of whom I am sorry or glad, as the case may be, to say we are the grandsons or whatever, thought it unfit for the equality and the pride of the officers of the United States that any of them should receive any title or decoration from any foreign government, except by the authority of Congress, which implies that there might be an exceptional instance of extraordinary condition and circumstance that made that man, not by his self-seeking (which I do not say Mr. Mullan was guilty of any more than any of the rest), but made that man a conspicuous object that all nations ought to admire for the thing for which the medal was given, and then Congress was authorized to grant it.

The Committee on Foreign Relations—as I see my honorable friend, the distinguished chairman [Mr. SHERMAN], is not here, I must speak for him—has thought it fit for some years past, against the vote of a not very considerable minority, I am sorry to say—and in that small minority I have stood as one all the time—to recommend every decoration, with one or two exceptions, and those were gotten over the next year, for anybody who in the Army or Navy of the United States could through his friends find the opportunity to display himself in a foreign country on some ceremonious occasion, that he should come back and forever after walk among his fellow officers at dress parades with the star of an empire on him. It is all very fine for personal ambition, but I do not think it fine for our republican notions of republican institutions; and therefore, in committee, if I was present, I certainly voted against this joint resolution, not because this gentleman is not a gentleman of the highest character and of the most gallant composition and all that, but because I believe it is not the fit thing for a republican government to authorize any foreign decoration, which, in the ranks of the officers either of the Army or the Navy, makes a distinction that they all feel should not be given except in the extraordinary cases I have named.

Now, I think I have fairly stated the case of the committee, and I have stated my own, too.

Mr. PAYNE. The Senator from Vermont has stated his side of the case pretty well, but I believe the Senator from Vermont never does give his approval to anything of this kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes, I do. I have approved, so far as my humble vote in committee would go, where a man in our Navy or Army, at the risk of his life and in cases of utmost despair, distinguished himself in saving a foreign vessel or ship, and the king or potentate of that country proposed to recognize it; in such cases I have said "amen" gladly.

Mr. PAYNE. That may be, but in all the cases I have known in our committee (and I have been intrusted with reporting five or six of them) we have always encountered the opposition of the Senator from Vermont.

Now, if there is real danger to our republican government in permitting this gallant officer to accept this decoration from the Chilean Government, of course it should not be done. We were apprehensive, in our present diplomatic relations with the South American states Chili and Peru, that there might some delicacy appear about permitting this officer to accept this medal; and therefore it was thought better to communicate with the Secretary of State about that, and Mr. Blaine replied that there was no objection whatever; that it would not in the least embarrass our relations with Chili or Peru to permit this officer to accept this medal. I do not know what this medal is worth, but there is a sort of pride, professional perhaps, in these officers which the Senator from Vermont and myself may not thoroughly appreciate, but they do attach a great deal of importance to it, and I think that, in view of the gallant conduct of this officer at Samoa, it would be ungracious and that it would be rather a disparagement to him for us to refuse to do something when the Secretary of State has asked it, when the Secretary of the Navy has asked it, and when the Legislature of Maryland also has highly indorsed it.

I have no personal interest whatever in the matter. I regret that the Senator from Maryland is not here. If he were here he would state much better than I can the reasons for passing the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. If this joint resolution can be amended so as to express the reasons which the Senator from Ohio has assigned for recognizing this officer in the way proposed, I am willing for it to pass; and that is, that we pass this resolution authorizing Commander Mullan to accept this decoration in consideration of his distinguished and valuable services in Samoa. Now, if the committee will put an amendment of that kind in the resolution, I shall have no objection to it; but simply to pass an act of Congress authorizing him to receive a medal because he happened to be around headquarters looking on I think is not proper. We might just as well pass an act of Congress authorizing every officer who has been to the Paris exposition or the Vienna exposition, or to our own exposition for that matter, if somebody with the style of a lord or a duke, or something of the kind, shall hand him a pocket-knife or a handkerchief or a walking-cane, to accept it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The real trouble is—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken once on the joint resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. SPOONER. As this is a matter of great importance, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Vermont may be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not wish to violate any rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is given that the Senator may proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The real trouble, to speak seriously about this business, is not about this particular case, but it is the whole range of them. It is that the officer who gets the particular medal or decoration feels it and parades it—I am not complaining of him that he does it if we choose to give it to him—always afterwards in his corps and rank in the Army or Navy as a distinction that puts him above his brothers. So, in eight cases in ten, my belief is, not making the least reference to this case, which I know nothing about the details of as regards how this gentleman came to go there, the officer has got that opportunity to get a decoration and see something in a foreign country by the urgent solicitation of the Senator from Vermont to the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, as the case may be. I say the Senator from Vermont, in order not to make any invidious distinctions. Therefore it is that the fountain of the business is that, through friendship and favor, some particular gentleman in the ward-room or in the Quartermaster's Office or Adjutant-General's Office, through influence—and we all know what that means—gets the opportunity, that they are all hungry for, to go and see a battle or do whatever, and then, coming back, he is evermore to be distinguished among his comrades as having got a foreign decoration. I do not believe in that sort of thing, without the slightest reference to this particular gentleman.

Mr. FRYE. Is not the Senator from Vermont mistaken about one thing? He suggests that these gentlemen are permitted to wear around or march around with these decorations, and all that sort of thing. My recollection is that there is a law which, after decorations are accepted, prevents officers wearing them at all, and I do not think they are allowed to wear under the law any decorations from any foreign government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see that law. I shall have to ask for a division if the resolution is pressed to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution has not been read. It will be read at length.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] demanded a division. Am I correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has not yet been read in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. If he did, that operates as an objection to the case in the present condition of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator suggest the want of a quorum?

Mr. HOAR. No; but I say a division will disclose probably whether there be a quorum or not, and I will object to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection. We ought to do some business to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I want to vote for the joint resolution, but I understood the Senator from Vermont to ask for a division.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator must bear in mind if he wants to vote for the resolution that if he objects to it he can not vote for it. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection, so that he can vote for the resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to explain—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has spoken once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that unanimous consent be given him to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio may be allowed to proceed. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I will not occupy time. I have sent for the letter of the Secretary of State, and also for the resolution of the Maryland Legislature, approved by the executive of that State, but I have not yet received them. If I had them here to read to the Senate there is not a member of this body who would not be ashamed to object to the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution can pass over, and when you get those documents you can read them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

MAJ. JOSEPH W. WHAM.

The bill (S. 1759) for the relief of Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers, in settling and adjusting the accounts of Maj. Joseph W. Wham, paymaster, United States Army, to credit him with the sum of $28,345.10, Government funds, of which he was robbed in Graham County, Arizona Territory, on the 11th day of May, 1889, without his fault.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. SPOONER. The report is quite a lengthy one. I can state the case in a word, and perhaps it will not be necessary to read the report. Major Wham, for whose relief this bill was introduced, had for many years been a paymaster in the Army. He served during the war, and was not only an efficient paymaster, but on several occasions a gallant fighting soldier. He was ordered on May 11, 1889, or a day or two before that, to proceed to Cedar Springs, Ariz., and from one point to another, to pay troops. He had an escort, I think, of eleven colored soldiers, and while proceeding along the highway in a desolate region he was attacked by a large number of men who were scattered in different points.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Were there more than seven?

Mr. SPOONER. There were over seven, and he fought them with his troops. The escort was composed of colored soldiers. The colored troops fought nobly, and they were all wounded, I believe, with the exception of one. I think there were eleven in all. The paymaster was not wounded, but he was there fighting with the soldiers and among those who were wounded. The robbers had them at a great disadvantage; they were firing upon them from different directions, and, after Major Wham and his escort had defended the wagon and defended themselves until all the escort, with possibly the exception of one, were wounded and disabled, the safe was taken.

The Secretary of War has, I believe, under the direction of the President and after a thorough investigation of the case, issued a medal to each of the escort for gallantry upon that occasion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the bill recommended by the Department?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I believe it is recommended by the War Department and the Paymaster-General and everybody else who could possibly have any connection with it. It is a clear case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar unobjected to.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President—

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he will allow me to call up Order of Business 1199? If it gives rise to debate I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to allow me to call up the order of business about an additional judge in New Mexico, which is a very pressing thing.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, before disposing of the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, I wish to state that I have received two telegrams about a bill on the Calendar that we have nearly reached, and I think if the bill is taken up there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SAWYER. If the Senate has no objection to taking up the bill of the Senator, I shall not object to yielding the floor after the pension cases are disposed of.

Mr. BATE. If I can have the floor, I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin. But there is no contest in the world about the bill I desire to have taken up, and I think it will only occupy two or three minutes.

Mr. SAWYER. Let us get up the pension bills and then I will give way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SAWYER. I will yield after we get the pension bills up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of private pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported. Is there objection?

Mr. BATE. That is with the understanding that the Senator will give way to the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. SAWYER. I will give way if the Senate is willing.

Mr. BATE. Under that consideration I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be no qualified or conditional objection. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none and the Secretary will report the first private pension bill on the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. 4967) granting a pension to Catharine Reed was announced as first in order.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I now ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he will allow Order of Business 1199 to be taken up. It is the bill (S. 3039) authorizing the construction of a public building for a post-office in the city of Palestine, Tex.

Mr. SAWYER. Let us go on a little while with the pension bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Texas will not insist against these private pension bills.

Mr. SAWYER. I think I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well. I shall not press the request now.

CATHARINE REED.

The bill (H. R. 4967) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Reed was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Catharine Reed, widow of Eben P. S. Reed, late of Company D, One hundred and second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMANDA J. DELAP.

The bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Amanda J. Delap was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Amanda J. Delap, mother of William A. Delap, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTOPHER C. FUNK.

The bill (H. R. 7958) granting a pension to Christopher C. Funk was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Christopher C. Funk, late of Company D, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS B. SHAW.

The bill (S. 3723) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Shaw was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas B. Shaw, of Port Huron, Mich., at $20 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. F. HILLIKER.

The bill (H. R. 9359) to increase the pension of B. F. Hilliker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of B. F. Hilliker, late Company A, Eighth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry, to $72 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLINTON SPENCER.

The bill (H. R. 8910) granting an increase of pension to Clinton Spencer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $60 per month, the name of Clinton Spencer, late captain Company I, First Michigan Infantry Volunteers, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAURA L. WALLEN.

The bill (H. R. 4461) granting an increase of pension to Laura L. Wallen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension to Laura L. Wallen, widow of Henry D. Wallen, late colonel of the Second Infantry, United States Army, to the sum of $100 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 28, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4461) granting an increase of pension to Laura L. Wallen, have examined the same and report:

The report on which this bill was passed by the House is concurred in. It is appended hereto.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

[House Report No. 652, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The claimant's late husband, Col. Henry D. Wallen, of the Second United States Infantry, was appointed brevet second lieutenant in the United States Army immediately upon his graduation from the Military Academy, July 1, 1840, and from that time until placed on the retired-list as colonel, United States Army, February 18, 1874, he was actively engaged in the military service of the country and received promotion to all the grades from brevet second lieutenant to that of colonel.

Colonel Wallen died December 2, 1886, in New York City, of disease contracted in the service and line of duty. His service, as shown by the records of the War Department, was of a high order and (notwithstanding the long period of time covered by it) is without a blemish. He served in the war with Mexico, and for long periods of time was stationed on the extreme Western and Southwestern frontiers of the United States. He also saw service on the Atlantic coast, and for a time after the war of the rebellion was stationed with his command in the Southern States.

The claimant, in her application for increase of pension, calls attention to her husband's honorable and meritorious military record, and declares that he was unjustly discriminated against during the late war, and thereby deprived of the opportunity to gain rank and distinction in that war. That Colonel Wallen was intensely loyal to the Union during the late war is clearly shown by copies of letters written by him just before the war, and correspondence on file in the War Department (copies of which are on file with the case) shows that repeated applications were made by him and by others of high military and civil station for him to be allowed to assume his proper command and participate as a true and loyal soldier of the Union in the war of the rebellion; but for some unaccountable reason his application was persistently denied, and he was placed on duty with but a few companies of his regiment at a New Mexican post, while the greater part of his command was serving in the East under command of an officer his junior in rank.

That Colonel Wallen was harshly and unjustly dealt with in this matter is shown by no less an authority than General U. S. Grant himself (with whom Colonel Wallen was on terms of intimacy and friendship), in a letter written by him in February, 1865, to Hon. E. M. Stanton, then Secretary of War, which letter reads as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,

City Point, Va., February, 1865.

SIR: Whilst in Washington on my late visit I took occasion to examine copies of all the official correspondence between Maj. H. D. Wallen, Seventh United States Infantry, and army of General Thomas, on the occasion of the major being ordered to New Mexico. The correspondence on the part of Wallen is creditable to him.

It shows a desire to get into the field, where he might have an opportunity to earn promotion. It would seem that he was pushed off to New Mexico, where but a handful of his men were serving, while the greater part of his regiment was serving in the East, most if not all the time commanded by his junior. It really seems to me, from a fair examination of these papers, that Major Wallen has been harshly dealt with. I would most earnestly recommend, as a partial reward for past disappointment which Major Wallen has suffered and for services rendered by him in New Mexico, as testified to by General Carlton, that he be brevetted lieutenant-colonel and colonel in the regular Army.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

Under date of January 18, 1862, President Lincoln sent the following communication to the Adjutant-General United States Army:

"To-day Governor Crittenden, Senators Hale, Lane, and Nesmith call and beg that Major Wallen may not be sent to New Mexico for duty, but that he may be retained for duty on this side. I sincerely desire this may be done, if it can be without too much derangement of the public service."

It seems, however, that even with this Major Wallen's honorable ambition was not gratified, and he was sent to New Mexico as above stated, where, in obedience to orders most distasteful to an officer anxious for military distinction and rank, he performed faithful and most notable service.

The following is quoted from a report made in the case of Mrs. Wallen by your committee in the Fiftieth Congress:

"His (Colonel Wallen's) knowledge of the Indian tribes and his great tact and judgment in dealing with them pointed to him as a man suited to the arduous and delicate task of dealing with the warlike tribes of Apaches and Navajos on the frontier of New Mexico. Though averse to this service in the condition of the country, as his letters to the War Department, to President Lincoln, and to the Military Committee of the Senate show, he complied with the orders of the Secretary of War with such zeal and energy that, though commanding but three companies of his regiment, composed of fresh volunteers, he kept the frontier, that for a century had been exposed to the violence of savage tribes, in a condition of peace that it had rarely known."

"About 9,000 Indians were brought into a reservation, disarmed, and induced to labor; land was reclaimed by irrigation; crops planted and harvested in peace, while all the energies of the Government were engaged in the prodigious work of war. The value of this frontier service can scarcely be overrated; but for the discretion and executive ability of Colonel Wallen the whole frontier of New Mexico would have blazed with the fires of savage warfare and the Government embarrassed at a time when it had no forces to spare."

The high character, military capacity, and executive ability of Colonel Wallen were vouched for in glowing terms in later years by Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and other distinguished men.

The claimant, Mrs. Wallen, is now advanced in years and has no property from which to derive a support for herself and young daughter, and her pension of $50 per month constitutes her sole income.

In view of Colonel Wallen's distinguished and valuable services your committee are of the opinion that his widow should be granted such a pension as will afford her an adequate and independent support during her declining years, and the passage of the bill is therefore respectfully recommended.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to this bill in principle, and I desire to record my vote against it. I shall not interpose any objection to its consideration, but I call the attention of the Committee on Pensions very respectfully to the fact that this, in my judgment, is in violation of the rule which they have established in many other cases. It is not treating equally and fairly other widows who have equal claims and who have been refused an increase of pension to $100.

Mr. HALE. How much pension does this give?

Mr. COCKRELL. One hundred dollars per month.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator from Missouri does not object, I shall object to the passage of the bill, because it certainly is a violation of all principles of reasonable justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

SARAH L. KNIGHT.

The bill (S. 2184) granting a pension to Sarah L. Knight was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah L. Knight, dependent invalid sister of Albert E. Knight, formerly of Company E, First Regiment Maine Cavalry Volunteers, at $12 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JONATHAN DEAN, SR.

The bill (H. R. 2418) granting a pension to Jonathan Dean, sr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll at $25 per month the name of Jonathan Dean, sr., a soldier in the war of 1812.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the difficulty about that gentleman getting his pension under the regular law? Let the report be read. That will probably explain it.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 29, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2418) granting a pension to Jonathan Dean, sr., have examined the same, and report:

The report on which this bill was passed by the House is concurred in and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2418) granting a pension to Jonathan Dean, sr., have considered the same, and beg leave to submit the following report:

"The claimant prays that he be granted a pension at $5 per month as a soldier of the war of 1812, and in his petition declares that he was born March 1, 1796, in Orange County, N. Y.; that at the age of fourteen years he was apprenticed to one Joseph Hulbert, of Buffalo, N. Y., and while serving as said apprentice the war of 1812 broke out and said Hulbert enlisted therein as a minute-man, but that whenever a call was made for minute-men Hulbert sent him (the petitioner) as a substitute, and he answered to the name of 'Joseph Hulbert.' He first reported for duty at Black Rock, Erie County, New York, in September, 1812, and he was in the service as a minute-man from that time until September, 1814, when he was honorably discharged at Canandaigua, N. Y., on account of an ax wound of right foot, received in the service."

"His officers were General Peter B. Porter, Colonel Chapman, Capt. William Sample, Lieut. Caleb Rogers, Orderly Sergeant Rozelle, and while in said service he was frequently on guard and performed all duties required of him as a soldier. He says further that he participated in the battle of Buffalo, in December, 1813, and was also engaged in several skirmishes, and in September, 1813, he was wounded in the left thigh by a musket-ball while foraging on the Canadian side."

"The claimant states further that his brothers Gabriel, William, and David were also soldiers of said war, but that they, as well as the officers and men with whom he served, are all dead, and that in the fall of 1842, while he was away from home, his certificate of discharge from said service, together with some promissory notes amounting to $200, were destroyed and lost by a grandchild."

"He further declares that he has always been a loyal citizen and has never received any pension or bounty land for services in said war."

"On June 26, 1871, the claimant filed an application for pension under the war of 1812 service act of February 14, 1871, but a record of the alleged service could not be found, and the claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on that ground. The claimant, however, continued in apparent good faith to press his claim by furnishing all the data at his command by which a record of his service could be traced, but without avail, as the said record could not be found after an additional search of the archives of the Government; and he now petitions Congress to grant him relief by special act."

"Hon. E. S. Lacey, Comptroller of the Currency, United States Treasury, states in a communication addressed to Congress that he has read the claimant's petition and while he has no personal knowledge of the facts therein stated as to the service of the petitioner, he has known him for forty-six years, and has always regarded him as honest, trustworthy, truthful, and intelligent, and he gives full faith and credit to the statements made in said petition; also that the claim therein made has long been familiar to most of his (claimant's) neighbors and regarded as well founded."

"Mr. Lacey adds that the claimant is now over ninety-three years old and has always been a loyal man and a law-abiding citizen of good character and pure life."

"Hon. D. B. Ainger, adjutant-general of Michigan, and Philip T. Vanzile testify to an acquaintance with the claimant of over ten years, and that he has always borne the reputation of being a truthful and honorable citizen. These gentlemen add that they have no reason whatever to doubt the facts set forth in the claimant's said petition."

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This case stands on the statement of the claimant alone. There is nothing else whatever. His name does not appear on the rolls.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the bill will not be passed to-day, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MARY ANN LANG.

The bill (H. R. 1404) granting a pension to Mary Ann Lang was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Mary Ann Lang, widow of Peter Lang, late private Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE F. WHITE.

The bill (H. R. 1884) granting a pension to George F. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name George F. White, late of Company I, Third Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIAN KUNZIE.

The bill (H. R. 4036) for the relief of Christian Kunzie was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Christian Kunzie, dependent father of Henry Kunzie, of Company G, First Regiment Michigan Sharpshooters, killed in battle.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SALLIE H. WILSON.

The bill (H. R. 8560) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson, widow of Isaac H. Wilson, late sergeant in Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment New York State Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean? Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 29, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8560) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson, have examined the same and report: The report on which this bill was passed by the House is concurred in and is as follows:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8560) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson, submit the following report: "Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson is the widow of Isaac H. Wilson, who enlisted in Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, September 23, 1861, and served until December 13, 1864, when discharged by reason of amputation of left arm from gunshot wound received in action at Winchester, Va., September 19, 1864. At date of his death, December 16, 1890, he was a pensioner at the rate of $45 per month, under the act of August 4, 1886."

"In addition to the amputated arm he also suffered from gunshot wound of right arm, received in the battle of the Wilderness, which wound greatly impaired the use of said arm. At time of his death Mr. Wilson was the general superintendent of the Ohio, Indiana and Western Railway. He, in company with five others, was traveling in the pay-car of said railroad, when, near Covington, Ind., a wheel on said car broke, turning the same over on its side, when he was thrown into a window of the car and killed.

"It appears that all other persons in the car who were similarly situated were able to save themselves, but could do so only by the use of their two hands, holding to their seats to prevent their being thrown into the windows. It was the general opinion of Wilson's companions that had he had two arms he could have saved himself also.

"Mrs. Wilson was left in needy circumstances, with a child of five years of age to support and educate.

"The circumstances surrounding the untimely death of this brave defender of the Union are such as to leave but little, if any, doubt upon the minds of your committee that the injuries incurred in service must be held as contributory thereto, and that the case, although not admissible under the general law, should receive favorable consideration at the hands of Congress."

The bill is reported favorably with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETSY E. COLE.

The bill (H. R. 1405) granting a pension to Betsy Cole was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 6, before the word "Cole," to insert the letter "E." so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate prescribed by existing provisions of law, the name of Betsy E. Cole, widow of James A. Cole, late private in Company E, First Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Betsy E. Cole."

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of May 2, 1890, a report from the Chief of Engineers relative to the tunnel in process of construction between the two reservoirs in the District of Columbia, etc.; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution to which this communication is a response was submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] not now in the Chamber. The communication, with the accompanying papers, will lie on the table, and be printed.

MARY W. SMALLEY.

The bill (H. R. 2424) granting a pension to Mary W. Smalley was considered in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary W. Smalley, step-mother of Jonas Smalley, late a private in Company K, Twenty-first Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY L. POTTER.

The bill (H. R. 7263) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter was considered in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter, late colonel of the Seventy-first Regiment of New York State Volunteers, to $72 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLODGETT May 29, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Potter, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives heretofore appended is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7263) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter, submit the following report:

Henry L. Potter entered the service as lieutenant-colonel of the Seventy-first New York Volunteers July 18, 1861; he was granted thirty days' leave of absence November 23, 1861, on the ground of disability, resulting from a severe contusion of chest and injury to the spine, caused by his horse falling with and upon him; wounded in action August 27, 1862, in battle at Bristoe Station, Va. Register of commissioned officers shows him severely wounded in the left hand at date and place aforesaid. Under date of October 29, 1862, he was granted thirty days' sick leave on account of this wound. The surgeon's certificate shows that the wound of hand had not yet healed, and there remained a fistulous opening, through which purulent matter discharged. Mustered in as colonel May 1, 1863. On August 20, 1863, he was granted sick leave for twenty days upon the following surgeon's certificate:

"I have carefully examined this officer, and find that he is suffering with gastroenteritis, nephritis, dysentery, causing general debility, besides contusion of left leg above the ankle, caused by a piece of shell striking the part at the battle of Gettysburgh."

He was finally discharged, to date December 31, 1864.

A pension at the rate of $30 per month was granted him by the Pension Office October 9, 1869, for gunshot wound of left hand and wrist, wound of left leg, chronic diarrhea, and injury to chest.

The wound of hand alone entitles this officer to total in grade, or $30 per month, because of the ankylosed condition of the wrist. The wound of knee, according to the report of the examining surgeons, is 7 inches from knee, and has the appearance of having been severe in character. The disability is of a muscular character. The other injury of the leg is confined to its inner side. The cordicle is highly discolored. The muscles of the leg are flabby, and the measurements around are decidedly less than those of the right. The contusion incident to the injury serves to explain the numbness, muscular inability, and swollen condition of ankle. Disability from wounds of leg one-half total. In addition to the wounds above described, Colonel Potter is now and has been suffering for many years with lung affection as well as its usual sequela, disease of heart.

Colonel Potter filed a claim for increase in 1876, alleging that by reason of his disabilities he has become so helpless as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person. This claim was rejected, however, because the evidence was not deemed sufficient to show that he required that regular aid and attendance as described in the act of June 18, 1874, and Congress came to his relief by granting him an increase to $50 per month under an act approved June 20, 1888.

Since that date he has become totally helpless, as appears from the evidence filed with your committee, but, inasmuch as Congress has fixed the rate of his pension by special act, the Pension Office is debarred from a further and favorable consideration of his claim for increase.

Dr. W. Updyke Selover, of Rahway, N. J., testifies under date of March 15, 1890, as follows: "I have attended, examined, and prescribed for Colonel Potter quite recently; that his chronic bronchitis, asthma, and heart disease are increasing upon him and are of more aggravated and permanent character and render him more helpless; that he is so advanced in years and so broken in constitution and health that there is no probability of his recovery from his present state of helplessness, and that during all of the time that deponent has known Colonel Potter, for more than twenty years last past, he has been of good moral character and of temperate habits, and that his diseases, disabilities, and utter helplessness are not the result in any way of intemperance or immorality, but are undoubtedly a sequence of his wounds and injuries received and hardship endured in his army service." "Colonel Potter is so permanently and totally disabled as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person."

Your committee is clearly of opinion that the case is one entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "seventy-two dollars per month," and inserting, as we did a day or two ago, "according to his increased disability." It appears from the report that in 1888 Congress passed an act carrying his pension up to $50 a month, and the committee report that the only difficulty now is that Congress has limited it. I think that he ought, like all the other soldiers, to have the examination of the Pension Office as to the amount of the increase of his disabilities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "volunteers," in line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "to seventy-two dollars per month," and insert "according to his increased disabilities;" so as to read:

To increase the pension of Henry L. Potter, late colonel of the Seventy-first Regiment of New York State Volunteers, according to his increased disabilities.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JANE M. MCCRABB.

The bill (H. R. 7369) to restore the pension to Jane M. McCrabb was considered in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the act entitled "An act to restore pensions in certain cases," approved June 9, 1880, shall be construed so as to include within its provisions Jane M. McCrabb, widow of Capt. John W. McCrabb, deceased, late a captain in the United States Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER May 29, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill to restore the pension of Jane M. McCrabb, have examined the same and report:

We adopt the report submitted in this case by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The House report is as follows:

"Mrs. Jane M. McCrabb, as the widow of Capt. John W. McCrabb, deceased, late a captain in the United States Army, received a pension of $25 per month until the passage by Congress of a law in 1868, the provisions of which were construed by the Secretary of the Interior to require him to reduce said pension to $20 per month, which has been the amount received by Mrs. McCrabb since that time.

"The widows of officers of the Navy were included within the provisions of the aforesaid law, but Congress restored their pensions by the act of June 9, 1880, entitled 'An act to restore pensions in certain cases,' and the object of this bill is to include Mrs. McCrabb within the provisions of said act.

"Capt. John W. McCrabb was appointed to West Point from Tennessee in 1829, graduated in 1833, and reported for duty as brevet second lieutenant of Fourth Infantry, United States Army, then in Louisiana. From there he was detailed for topographical duty, on which he served until the early fall of 1835, when he joined his regiment and participated in active service against the hostile Creeks on the Georgia and Alabama line, where he rendered gallant service.

"In winter of 1837 he was appointed captain in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, and reported for duty to General Jessup, then commanding troops in Florida in the war against the Seminole Indians, and subsequently to General Zachary Taylor, who succeeded General Jessup.

"Here Captain McCrabb discharged the responsible duties of his position with zeal and fidelity until November 6, 1839, when he died in St. Augustine, Fla., of the yellow fever, then prevailing in Florida.

"The widow of Captain McCrabb, Mrs. Jane M. McCrabb, has now attained a ripe old age, and seriously needs the assistance asked for by this legislation.

"After a review of the facts the committee report the bill back and recommend its passage."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator who reported this bill or some member of the committee why this lady does not now come within the act of Congress referred to that restored the pensions, as it is said, of other people in that class? I am not able to understand from the report what the difficulty is.

Mr. PADDOCK. The member of the committee who reported the bill not being present, I think it had better go over without prejudice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

MARY F. COCHRAN.

The bill (H. R. 7824) granting a pension to Mary F. Cochran was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mary F. Cochran, widow of William N. Cochran, deceased, late private in Company E, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWRENCE DOUGHERTY.

The bill (H. R. 6280) granting a pension to Lawrence Dougherty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lawrence Dougherty, late a private Company B, Thirty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARCHIBALD F. COON.

The bill (H. R. 6601) granting a pension to Archibald F. Coon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Archibald F. Coon, late captain Company E, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Secretary read whether this is subject to the limitations of the pension laws or whether it is for the payment of a certain sum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

The bill (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of William J. Bryan, late a member of Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers, upon the pension-roll of the United States at $12 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER May 29, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1110) granting a pension to William J. Bryan, have examined the same and report:

Your committee adopt the following report, submitted by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

"This claimant enlisted April 19, 1861, in Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and was discharged August 12, 1861. The evidence of prior soundness at enlistment, filed in the Pension Office, is ample and undisputed. That claimant was afflicted with measles and chronic diarrhea while in service, and which arose by reason of the service in line of duty, is also proven beyond question.

"That he was discharged in a broken-down condition and suffering from effects of measles, which affected his eyes, and from chronic diarrhea, stands proven by the affidavits of his captain, second lieutenant, two privates of his company, the colonel of his regiment, and Lieutenant Brewster, of Company K of his regiment, who also testify to the origin of the same in line of duty.

"Continuance of these troubles now and from discharge and since 1863, aggravated by piles sequelae of the chronic diarrhea, also stands proven by the affidavits of some eighteen witnesses who have known claimant since his discharge; also by the testimony of local physicians of undoubted credit and good standing; and further by the report of each medical board who have examined him since 1879, the last of said boards rating the disability at total, and this report bears date March 9, 1887, the claim for pension being filed in 1879.

"The only evidence against the claim is the testimony of two witnesses, namely, John B. Brown and Caroline Brown, his wife, who first swore that claimant chopped for said Brown in the winter of either 1861 or 1862, and there was nothing the matter with him then. Subsequently to giving this first evidence the Browns swore more positively that this work was done in the winter of 1862, after the claimant was discharged.

"But that the Browns are mistaken as to the date when the chopping was done is shown by the evidence of the claimant, who swears that it was in February, 1861, before he went into the service. He is supported in this statement by Sarah N. Bryant, his sister, who boarded in the same house with him; by N. H. Newcomer, who swears it was the winter before he, Newcomer, enlisted, and that his enlistment was in August, 1861, and by H. E. Witmore, the man who worked with claimant when the chopping was done, all of whom fix the dates in the winter of 1861 before claimant enlisted. Their evidence is also supported by the other testimony in the case, which, out of the mouths of some eighteen witnesses, declares that at discharge he was badly broken down by reason of the diseases which the undisputed testimony shows he did suffer from while in the service.

"Your committee, therefore, think that the weight of the evidence is in favor of the claimant, and recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill so as to read "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and allow the Pension Office to rate his disability, the act of Congress finding that he is disabled, but I think the Pension Office ought to be allowed to rate the pension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. PLATT. After "United States" say "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After "United States," in line 6, it is proposed to insert:

Subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So as to read how?

The SECRETARY. So as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of William J. Bryan, late a member of Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers, upon the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and from and after the passage and approval of this act pay to him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to strike out all after "United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

And from and after the passage and approval of this act pay to him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NORMAN CLEVELAND.

The bill (H. R. 6331) for the relief of Norman Cleveland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Norman Cleveland, late of Company G, First Ohio Light Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER G. DAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 6913) granting a pension to Alexander G. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-rolls the name of Alexander G. Davis, of Mount Airy, Md., late scout and guide with Generals Howard and Augur, at $25 per month.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. FAULKNER May 29, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6913) granting a pension to Alexander G. Davis, have examined the same and report:

Your committee adopt the following report, submitted by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The report is as follows:

"Alexander G. Davis, at the breaking out of the late war, was a citizen of Virginia. He was a man of means and good health and strength, and much devoted to the cause of the Union. Early in 1862, furnishing his own arms and equipments, he entered the service of the United States as a guide and scout, and continued in that service until the close of the war. He participated in the principal battles of the Army of the Potomac, and rendered valuable services for Generals Geary, Schimmelfennig, Stohl, Heintzelman, Schurz, Howard, Augur, and Meade, as shown by the testimonials on file.

"While watching the movements of the enemy immediately after the battle of Gettysburg, by reason of the sudden fright of his horse over a large cloud of dust, caused by the firing of a solid shot, he became ruptured. About the time of the fighting in the Wilderness, being under orders to proceed in the direction of the Rappahannock River, he met some of Mosby's men and received a severe wound in the head.

"General Augur, under date of February 4, 1890, says:

"* * * He was a most useful and reliable man. * * * He was wounded in line of his duty, and is, it seems to me, deserving of great consideration from the Government for his loyalty and devotion to its interest at that time. * * *

"General O. O. Howard, in letter to the Secretary of War, dated May 10, 1889, says:

"* * * Perhaps no man suffered more in person and property and lived than Mr. Davis. * * * I know him personally, and I commend to you his two requests for such consideration as can be given him:

"1. That he may be commended to Congress in some proper way, so that he can legally receive a pension for the few remaining years of his life, for he is now an old man.

"2. That his application in behalf of his son's appointment to West Point or into the Army receive a kind consideration."

"It would seem but proper, following a long line of precedents, that the relief asked for should be granted. Therefore your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask, Mr. President, this man being a scout, why, under the laws, which I understand provide for the payment of pensions to that class of persons, he does not get his pension under the general law.

Mr. SAWYER. There is no general law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No general law for scouts?

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Although they were enlisted men?

Mr. COCKRELL. They were not enlisted men. They were civilians receiving from $60 to $100 or $125 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ALICE A. CUNNINGHAM.

The bill (H. R. 1783) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll, at $12 per month, the name of Mrs. Alice A. Cunningham, widow of James Cunningham, late a private of Company D, Fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out "at $12 per month" and insert "subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws;" so that if she remarries she will stand like all others in like condition. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BELLE MORRISON.

The bill (H. R. 7529) granting a pension to Belle Morrison, of Dillsborough, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Belle Morrison, dependent sister of Thomas W. Morrison, late a private in Company I, Eighty-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll at $18 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE June 3, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7529) granting a pension to Belle Morrison, dependent sister of Thomas W. Morrison, a private in Company I, Eighty-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, have examined the same and report:

That from the facts stated in the House report, which is attached and made a part hereof, we believe this to be a meritorious bill, and accordingly recommend its passage.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7529) granting a pension to Belle Morrison, submit the following report:

Your committee have had said bill under consideration, and from the evidence accompanying the bill and also from the papers in the pension granted Thomas W. Morrison, hereinafter mentioned, do find as follows: Applicant's three brothers enlisted in the Union Army in the war of 1861, of whom one, John, was killed at the battle of Springfield, Mo., on October 29, 1861; another, George, was killed at the battle of Stone River, Tennessee; and the third, Thomas W., a private in Company I, Eighty-third Indiana Volunteers, was wounded in his right leg July 28, 1864, in line of duty, which resulted in amputation thereof the next day, from the effects of which he died in February, 1876, being a pensioner by certificate No. 40032.

Said Thomas W. left no widow nor children, and his father was dead, and he and his mother and applicant lived together as one family, having no means of subsistence except the proceeds of said pension, and also a pension which his mother was drawing, under certificate No. 13892, on account of the death of her sons. We further find that applicant has been a helpless cripple, dependent on her mother and brothers for support, and having no means of her own, ever since her infancy with a disease (deformity and curvature of the spine) which renders her a permanent cripple, wholly unable to work, and dependent on the charity of strangers. We further find that her mother died February 26, 1873, thus leaving applicant without parents, brothers, or others to support her, and leaving her without any means whatever; and we recommend that the bill be passed and she granted a pension at the rate of — dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LORENZO D. WHITEFORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order of Business 1530, being the bill (H. R. 4167) granting a pension to Lorenzo D. Whiteford, is missing from the files of the Secretary, but is on the files on the desk of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the clerks have not got the bill, I have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appears by the minutes on the docket that there has been a supplemental report, part 2. The bill has been sent for. If there be no objection, the next Order of Business will be proceeded with.

MRS. CATHARINE SONNE.

The bill (H. R. 7719) restoring the pension of Mrs. Catharine Sonne was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Catharine Sonne, dependent mother of William H. Sonne, late a private of Company H, Fifth Kentucky Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE June 3, 1890:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7719) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Sonne, dependent mother of William H. Sonne, late a private of Company H, Fifth Kentucky Volunteers, have examined the same and report:

That from the facts stated in the House report, which is herewith attached and made a part hereof, we believe this to be a meritorious measure, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 1832, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7719) restoring the pension of Mrs. Catharine Sonne, submit the following report:

Mrs. Catharine Sonne is the mother of William A. Sonne, who served in Company H, Fifth Kentucky Volunteers, in which he enlisted July 3, 1861, and died in Andersonville Prison on October 2, 1864.

She applied to the Pension Office for a pension as the dependent mother of the soldier on April 24, 1869, and in August, 1869, she was allowed a pension as such dependent mother upon proof that the soldier aided in her support, and was in receipt of the same until March 4, 1877, when her name was dropped from the rolls on the ground of non-dependence upon the soldier at the time of his death, it appearing from a report made by a special agent of the Pension Office that at time of soldier's death, in 1864, the husband of Mrs. Sonne was alive carrying on a grocery store, with a bar-room attached to it, owning real estate assessed at $1,000, and that the estimated income from all sources amounted to about $600 per year, with which a large family of children had to be supported, and that the management of the business was principally done by Mrs. Sonne, her husband, who died in 1866, being given to the intemperate use of liquors.

From the report of the special agent of the Pension Office it appears further that subsequent to the death of her husband she continued to carry on the business formerly managed by her; that the children improved some of the property owned by their father during his lifetime; that Mrs. Sonne only had a dower interest in same, and that later on the property was apportioned to the children, since which time Mrs. Sonne has only enjoyed a small income, entirely inadequate for a comfortable maintenance.

Your committee are of the opinion that in view of the large family of Mrs. Sonne at time of soldier's death the amount of income as estimated to have been received by her at that time and for some years thereafter, derived in a great measure by her own manual labor, was not sufficient to place her, under the law, into a status of non-dependence, and recommend that the bill restoring her name to the rolls be passed, amended, however, by adding, after the word "volunteers," in lines 6 and 7, the words "to take effect from the passage of this act."

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no statement in the report of the committee of any proof that at the time of the soldier's death, and before, she had been dependent upon him during his service in the Army, which is the rule; and, without wishing to do any unkindness to this widow, but to treat all widows and dependent people alike, I must ask that the bill go over. I do not think it is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

LORENZO B. WHITEFORD.

Mr. TURPIE. I inquire if Order of Business 1530, House bill 4167, has been received yet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has just been received.

The bill (H. R. 4167) granting a pension to Lorenzo D. Whiteford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, before the word "son," to strike out "Whiteford" and insert "Whitford;" in the same line, after the words "son of," to strike out "John Whiteford" and insert "William J. Whitford;" and in line 8, after the words "pension of," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Lorenzo D. Whitford, son of William J. Whitford, late a private in Company K, Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $18 per month from and after the day on which the pension now granted to him shall expire by limitation of law.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was that word "eighteen" put in there? My print of the bill shows that it was reported June 3, 1890, by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] without amendment, and there was a report (No. 1244) accompanying it. Now, has there been another report upon it? Has it been recommitted to the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. TURPIE. It was not formally recommitted to the committee, but the subcommittee having charge of the bill found there was a mistake in the name, which they corrected, and increased the amount from twelve to eighteen dollars per month. The applicant in this case is a helpless cripple.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the report show that?

Mr. TURPIE. It shows that he is a helpless cripple, suffering from paralysis of the spine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that bill had better go over without prejudice until we can look into it a little more. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BATE. Before that is done I wish to dispose of the little case to which I referred. It is merely to grant the right of way across a little angle of public ground near Chattanooga, Tenn., where they have been compelled to suspend work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not able to hear the Senator.

UNION RAILWAY OF CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. BATE. I ask that the Senator will suspend his motion until we can dispose of Order of Business 1273, House bill 4635. It is the one which I rose about awhile ago when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] insisted upon proceeding with the pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4635) granting certain privileges to the Union Railway Company of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a military reservation?

Mr. BATE. No, sir. It is a piece of ground that was purchased by the Government of the United States immediately after the war for a Federal cemetery. Where the road from Missionary Ridge goes by there there is a little depot established by permission of the Government, but the angle is so acute that the railroad has to run across a sharp curve.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report from the Secretary of War?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir; and the House passed the bill without exception in both committees.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mind so much about the House as I do about the Secretary of War.

Mr. BATE. I state that as a fact connected with it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4635) granting certain privileges to the Union Railway, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BATE. There is no report here from the Secretary of War, but that is spoken of in the report of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the report of the Secretary of War?

Mr. BATE. I think it is in the House. I think Mr. EVANS has it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With great respect to my friend from Tennessee—and I shall not object on Monday, when we can get the report—I do not wish to be a party to allowing a railroad run through a soldiers' cemetery until I know, by hearing read, exactly what the Secretary of War and his officers say about its effect.

Mr. BATE. I suppose that can be obtained, but I do not see the necessity for it. There is a plat already submitted which will convey a clear idea of what is proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know that, but I want to know what the responsible executive authorities say about running this railroad over the soldiers' graves.

Mr. BATE. I have not a copy of the report of the Secretary of War here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my friend from Tennessee, without the least hostility to his bill if it turns out to be right, to let it wait until Monday, until we can see what the people who are in charge of that cemetery and the Secretary of War say about what this is going to do. I shall not object, on Monday or any other time when we can get that paper, to the bill being considered, but I hope my friend will not persist in his request now.

Mr. BATE. Has not the Secretary that bundle of papers there? My understanding is from the author of the bill that the Secretary of War and all the authorities agreed to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I dare say it may be so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing is kept at the desk except bills and reports of committees. The other papers are kept in the files of the Secretary's office.

Mr. BATE. The Secretary of War in his report shows that he has granted heretofore a right to establish a depot there, and this coupled with an obligation that they shall keep it up. It occupies less than a half acre. It is simply for safety and facility.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be perfectly right, but the road can live until Monday, I am sure.

Mr. BATE. I think it can, and I think the bill will pass then if it is understood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the exact information.

Mr. BATE. The Senator is entitled to it, and I think the company will survive the objection of the Senator from Vermont when the facts are known.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suppose the Senator can procure the papers in a few moments. I understand there is urgency in the case, as the Senator from Tennessee has received some telegrams to-day, as I understood, asking for prompt action.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we have the letter, very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont insist on his motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we have the letter of the Secretary of War, I do not.

Mr. BATE. I think the Senator from Vermont is exactly correct. If there has been no report I think it should be obtained. Believing that there was a report, I asked that the bill should be passed at once. It is proper to say, however, that the bill does not vest title. It must be recollected that it only grants the right of way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the subject, I think, perfectly, as it now stands. I notice that there is no power of repeal left in the act, either, but no matter for that now.

Mr. BATE. I will agree that the bill be passed over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will join with the Senator with pleasure on Monday, when we can get the report, to take up his bill.

Mr. BATE. I will try to hear from the Secretary of War by that time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But, as a person having a little sensitiveness on the subject of running railroads over soldiers' graves, I should like to know exactly about it.

I insist upon my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 16, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK, of Wisconsin, indefinitely, from June 16, on account of important business.

To Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, for two days.

To Mr. REILLY, indefinitely.

To Mr. RAY, for ten days.

TRUST BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, Mr. STEWART of Vermont, and Mr. BLAND as the House conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1) to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the House has instructed the conferees to recede from the House amendment, I take no further interest in the conference and would prefer that the Chair should appoint some one else.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] asks to be excused from serving as one of the House conferees on Senate bill 1, the trust bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. CULBERSON of Texas instead of Mr. BLAND.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BURROWS in the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 5, line 4.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at that point after line 4.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For post-office at St. Joseph, Mo.: For completion of building and to furnish and put in place a clock in the tower of said building, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. In connection with this amendment I send to the desk and ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by your reference of letter of the 5th instant from Mr. Charles F. Ernst, custodian of the post-office, etc., at St. Joseph, Mo., in regard to the early occupation of the building and the completion of certain items of work necessary to permit its occupancy, and to advise you that to provide for the completion of such items and to furnish and put in place a suitable clock in the tower of the building a further appropriation of $3,600 should be made, and I recommend that this amount be included in the sundry civil bill making appropriations for public buildings.

Respectfully yours,

W. WINDOM, Secretary.

Hon. R. P. C. WILSON,

House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] to an error on page 60, line 10, where the text reads "two thousand six hundred and dollars."

Mr. CANNON. Let the word "and" be struck out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of the sum of $2,000 appropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 2, 1889, for repairing and draining roadway to the national cemetery at Hampton, Va., shall be expended until the title to and jurisdiction over said roadway shall be vested in the United States.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the paragraph just read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 60, after line 23, insert: "For the purchase of additional land for interments in Crown Hill Cemetery, near Indianapolis, Ind., $30,000: Provided, That not less than 59,000 square feet shall be purchased for said sum."

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, Crown Hill National Cemetery, at Indianapolis, is a lot of ground donated by the Crown Hill Cemetery organization to the National Government. I do not know the exact amount of ground in the Crown Hill National Cemetery, but it is not a very large plot and is all occupied. From seven hundred to one thousand interments have been made in it, and there is no room for any more. The Grand Army post of Indianapolis have selected a plot of ground adjoining the national cemetery to be added to it. The amount of ground in the plot selected is between 59,000 and 60,000 square feet. The trustees of the cemetery have agreed to dispose of this plot to the National Government for $30,000, about 50 cents a square foot. I can say to the House that there is no speculation whatever in this proposed sale. Under the charter of the Crown Hill Cemetery Corporation not one dollar of the money can be used for any purpose except for making improvements or for the establishment of a perpetual fund to take care of and preserve the cemetery after the lots are all disposed of. The cemetery proper is composed of about 400 acres of land. Those who have seen Crown Hill Cemetery and who know its plan and location unite in saying that there is not a finer location, a more beautifully designed cemetery anywhere in the United States.

Now, it is necessary that we have some additional ground at Indianapolis for this purpose. Land must be purchased, either outside or this proposed plat adjoining the present national cemetery within the Crown Hill Cemetery, because there are a large number of soldiers in that vicinity who are entitled to the honor of a burial in the most favored places, but who are not able to provide the same. Lots in this cemetery are quite expensive. The proposed plot adjoins the present national cemetery; and in order to form some idea of its favorable location I will state to the committee that the present site adjoins, or is in close proximity to, that portion of the cemetery in which are interred the remains of the late Senator Morton and Vice-President Hendricks. It is very valuable, and can not be purchased at the price agreed upon by individual purchasers. Now, the question is, shall the Government purchase this ground, or go outside and purchase, as it will be compelled to do, four or five additional acres, which in the end will probably cost the Government a great deal more than this, or allow the old veterans, who are unable to provide themselves with a proper place, to be buried in some obscure and neglected spot? I think it better for the Government to purchase the additional ground necessary in Crown Hill Cemetery, because then we know exactly what we are getting; we know that the cost of maintenance and care will be nothing in the future; whereas if we go outside and purchase it will probably cost a great deal more, and the care of the cemetery will be a perpetual charge and expense. This addition will furnish all the ground that is needed for the national cemetery there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYNUM. For the purpose of adding a few words to what I have just said, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

If we purchase outside—and it is estimated, I will say, by the officers of the Grand Army that we will need sufficient ground for 2,000 or 2,500 additional interments—if we should go outside of the cemetery and purchase it we would be under the necessity, after the purchase is made, of improving the lands, putting them in order for receiving the bodies of those to be interred, and also the expense of the continued care and supervision of it. So that in every way it is better that the Government should pay this sum for this 60,000 additional feet of property, with the knowledge that when it is purchased the cemetery will be properly taken care of without additional expense.

General Coburn, who is one of the trustees of the cemetery, and the members of the organization, as well as the officers of the Grand Army there, are satisfied with the terms proposed and that the proposition is a fair and reasonable one and ought to be accepted. The only opposition to this comes, I believe, from the Quartermaster-General, Mr. Holabird; and I am informed that he thinks the price is too high. But those acquainted with the value of cemetery property connected with large cities, such as Spring Grove, Cincinnati, and Crown Hill Cemetery, in Indianapolis, and other large cemeteries throughout the country, know that such ground is very valuable. This is being offered to the National Government for about half what it could be sold for to private persons. So that there is not only no speculation in the matter, but a sacrifice by the trustees from patriotic and generous motives.

It should be remembered, Mr. Chairman, in this connection, that none of the incorporators of the cemetery get one cent of profit from this corporation. Every dollar that is derived from it is spent in repairs and improvements and care of the cemetery.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will be accepted. It has been submitted in the estimates, and it is necessary to have additional ground for the interment of the indigent soldiers who are passing off every day. The nation can do nothing more deserving than to provide for the interment of her patriotic defenders in an honored spot, where neither time, neglect, nor the hand of spoliation shall ever desecrate or obliterate their final resting places.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee for a few moments I will explain this estimate. There are at Indianapolis, as in every city, village, and community throughout the country, a number of soldiers who have served the United States in the late war and in prior wars, not now connected with the Army. This is an estimate to purchase a little over an acre of land in the Indianapolis cemetery, at an expenditure of $60,000.

Mr. BYNUM. No; $30,000.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; $30,000. The $60,000 was for the Cincinnati purchase. There is, I will say, an estimate to purchase some more ground, a small amount, in the cemetery at Cincinnati for that sum.

Now, it is a little ungracious, I admit, to oppose a proposition of this kind, yet if such appropriations are to be made, query: Should not they be made everywhere? The gentleman from the Buffalo district, New York, says they have gone on at their own expense and provided cemetery accommodations there for the soldiers. There is not a cemetery, scarcely, throughout the length and breadth of the country in which a place is not provided for the burial of the soldiers of the late war and of other wars at the expense of the communities. It is so in my own town; the people of that community have provided for their burial—by the Soldiers' Circle—and when that gave out another was provided, and so on.

Now, we asked the Quartermaster-General about this proposed appropriation; he did not approve of it. The question was asked by the chairman:

There is an estimate for ground for a national cemetery in Indianapolis, etc. It seems to me that we do not want to do that unless you are satisfied about it.

General HOLABIRD. I meant I was opposed to it.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. BYNUM would like to be heard on that subject.

General HOLABIRD. I think we had better establish another cemetery. I will say the same thing for Spring Grove, Cincinnati, etc.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if this is to be made an exception, if at Indianapolis and Cincinnati, two places in this country, we are to make appropriation for the purpose of providing, at the national expense, places of interment for the soldiers, while they are not made anywhere else in the United States, that we ought, as the Quartermaster-General suggests, if it be done at all, to go outside and buy the land where it would not cost at the rate of $30,000 an acre. For that reason we do not recommend the appropriation, and for that reason I oppose the amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of answering the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois.

I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the committee, but the question simply resolves itself into this: Whether we shall go outside and purchase ground or purchase within the cemetery proper.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BYNUM. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any good reason why the people of Indianapolis can not do like the good people of Danville, and nearly every other place in the country, that is, furnish places where the people who die there—the soldiers—may be interred?

Mr. BYNUM. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that we have furnished ground at Indianapolis for the interment of the soldiers without cost to the Government, and we have taken care of it. The directors of Crown Hill Cemetery have already furnished ground there and have spent many thousands of dollars a year keeping it in order. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, there is no national cemetery in the United States that is kept in a finer condition than that at Indianapolis. The incorporators of Crown Hill Cemetery have been doing this all the time, and they propose to continue it when this additional purchase is made for the extension of the national cemetery. It should be remembered that this property is worth a dollar a foot and sells for that readily. A lot of 20 feet square will bring $400, and the property is offered to the Government for about one-half its price. Where property is so valuable the Government ought not to ask more.

It is much better that all interments be together than that they be separated and an additional cemetery established outside. I think it is a measure of economy, too, because we all know that you can not keep up a national cemetery of one or two acres in the way that it ought to be kept up for less than two or three thousand dollars a year, and that will be a perpetual expense, while all that is required in this case will be the first expenditure.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is the aggregate cost?

Mr. BYNUM. Thirty thousand dollars for 59,500 feet, and it would bring $60,000 if sold out in lots to private parties. It is the very choicest ground in the cemetery. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The question being put on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], pending the announcement of the vote Mr. BYNUM called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 58.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BYNUM and Mr. CANNON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 65.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Cemetery at Hampton, Va.: For the purchase of 8 acres of land other than land belonging to the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute adjoining or as near as practical to the National Cemetery at Hampton, Va., required for enlargement of the same, $17,000.

That no part of the sum of $2,000 appropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 2, 1889, for repairing and draining roadway to the National Cemetery at Hampton, Va., shall be expended until the title to and jurisdiction over said roadway shall be vested in the United States.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia. I wish to offer the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR FREDERICKSBURG, VA.

For macadamizing and permanently improving the public road leading from the railroad depot in the city of Fredericksburgh, Va., to the national cemetery near said city, $8,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended unless the entire improvement can be made and completed for the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think that is not authorized, is it? I make the inquiry with the view to ascertaining what the facts are. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia. The facts are that there are 16,000 dead soldiers buried at this point. The amount asked for is only $8,000, and it seems to me that no point of order should be made.

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order. I wish the gentleman would tell me what the necessity for it is.

Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia. The necessity is just as stated in the report upon the bill, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill to provide for macadamizing the road from railroad depot in Fredericksburgh, Va., to the national cemetery, submit the following report:

There are buried in the national cemetery near the city of Fredericksburgh, Va., over 16,000 Federal soldiers. This cemetery is situated beyond the corporate limits of the town, upon the famous Marye's Heights, overlooking the Rappahannock River and the heights of Stafford. The grounds are beautifully terraced, set in well selected shrubbery, and inclosed with a substantial fence. There is no access to it except along the country roads, the condition of which makes travel over them often difficult and very disagreeable.

The fact that the dead of five general engagements lie buried here, and the surrounding country made historic by the great battles there fought, has made this sacred spot a place of general interest for large numbers of visitors from all sections of the country, as well as the citizens of the city.

The engineer reports that the road can be constructed for the small sum of $8,000, and your committee is of the opinion that this road should be at once constructed, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendment offered by Mr. BROWNE, of Virginia, was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, was that amendment adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It was adopted.

The Clerk read to line 18, page 75, of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

COPIES OF REPORT OF CIVIL-SERVICE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am instructed by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the report and evidence taken in the investigation of the United States Civil Service Commission be printed for the use of the House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. REED, of Iowa, for this day, on account of important business.

THE LATE SAMUEL JACKSON RANDALL.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Clerk will report the special order for the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, June 14, beginning at 1 o'clock p. m., be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of the Hon. Samuel Jackson Randall, late a member of the House of Representatives from the Third district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, April 13, I was awakened by a messenger at my rooms in this city, informing me that my colleague, Samuel Jackson Randall, had died but an hour before at his residence, No. 120 C street, southeast, but a few minutes distant from the Capitol. For days and hours I had expected this announcement, but when it came there was a suddenness in it that shocked me, losing in his death a companion almost from his earliest youth and an associate in the House of Representatives for more than a quarter of a century.

It seemed to me that in those dying days of his there was no rest to my mind except by frequent going or sending to his house to learn, at times almost hourly, the condition of my attached personal friend, I still having a hope that his life might be prolonged to his family and his country. But death came, and in peaceful resignation, and without pain or suffering, his lingering illness borne so patiently for many months, ended. In the presence of his wife and family, who had carefully nursed him and watched over him in his sickness, whose fatality could not be overcome, he breathed his last.

He was born in Philadelphia October 10, 1828, where had been born his father and mother, and where his grandparents had passed their lives, highly esteemed by its citizens. I knew his father and mother and his mother's father, Mr. Joseph Worrell, personally and well. I do not recollect ever having seen his grandfather, Mr. Matthew Randall, who was a prominent citizen.

He inherited from both sides of his parentage the temperament which brought him to so conspicuous a position in public life. His mother's father was a man long to be remembered for his service in the councils of the city and his devotion to duty in many positions of honor. So firm of purpose, so persistent in the right, so adhering to his own judgment that he was often thought to be self-willed and obstinate. But the people believed in him. So, also, was the reputation of his father's father, many a time called to duty by his fellow-citizens. These men were men of vigorous minds and their influence in their day was felt long after their deaths. Their names may be found in the annals of Philadelphia in the forefront of the list of distinguished persons true to themselves and to their city.

Josiah Randall, father of my colleague, stood abreast with the leaders of the bar of Philadelphia, and met in his professional life before judges or juries, never knowing failure in a cause until the final decision of the highest tribunal, taught his sons how great an element in life is persistence in the right. He was a man of courage, determination, and strong family affection, and literally lived with his children as their companion. He drew them to him in their youth, and as long as he lived they were held by him in just such associations and confidence as produce in children manliness and self-reliance, and stamp upon their lives the attributes of a devoted parent.

My colleague in all these characteristics was like his distinguished father, and with the same make-up of father and grandfathers, as was known to all Philadelphia, could it be possible that Samuel Jackson Randall could be otherwise than as they were and not possess just such points in character and action as you, my fellow-members, have witnessed in him? Under an apparent sternness, oh! how tender in feeling and sympathy he was. What a delight to be with him when surrounded by his family. His wife loved and cherished all the days of their married life, lovers to the last, his children adoring him, glad to be near him, never pushed back when affection brought them to his side, never too busy to greet them. I do not know of a more admirable domestic life. Oh! how he appreciated his children's love, and ever taught them to approach him with their cares and anxieties, their sorrows and their joys. This, in my estimation, is to be a true father.

Before he became a voter he felt interested in political affairs, and longed for the day when he could vote. We lived in the same neighborhood, in adjoining wards, and in what was called the "city proper," before its consolidation with the entire county of Philadelphia. To be a councilman from a ward of the old city was a great distinction and was conferred generally upon men of mature age. At twenty-three years of age, though, he was elected as a Whig to the common council, and was elected for another term after consolidation. His father was a prominent leader in the Whig party. He and this son remained Whigs until a year or two before the election of President Buchanan, for whom they both voted.

Always active in politics, my colleague had been a member of the conventions of the Whig party from the year he became of age, and in three of those conventions I was nominated for the Legislature. He was in the convention of the same party in September, 1852, which nominated me for the State senate. That convention nominated him for the common council, and he and I in October of that year were elected by the Whigs to those respective positions.

His teachings, like mine, were in the school of protection to American industry. We had learned our early lessons in the tariff from the teachings of Henry Clay and the protectionists of that day. Is it amazing that my colleague should have become a protectionist leader as a Democrat? He had not forgotten the principles taught him in that grand old Whig party. If he ever wavered in his views, his assignment by Mr. Speaker Keifer in the Forty-seventh Congress to the Committee on Ways and Means brought him face to face with the practical questions of free trade and protection, and to the latter from a Democratic protectionist's standpoint he stood by protection to American industry.

In the years 1858 and 1859 he served as a Democrat in the State senate, and in that dignified body of men, consisting of only thirty-three senators, he commenced early to show his aptitude for legislative work. He filled out the two years of the unexpired term for which he had been elected, impressing himself upon the people as an honorable senator.

In October, 1862, he was elected to the United States House of Representatives, he and I, with others, having been sworn in as members of the Thirty-eighth Congress upon the first Monday of December, 1863. He continued a member of the House from that time until his death, having been elected fourteen consecutive terms, the last two elections he having had no Republican opponent, thus practically having received both times the unanimous vote of the citizens of his district. To have sought his defeat would have been a marked failure, and had he survived his present term, again he would have had a unanimous election.

Such a Congressional record is rare and could occur only by the knowledge his constituents had of his integrity and unselfish, intelligent attention to duty.

In all the walks of life, private as well as public, honesty commends to the people in the greatest degree the man who never allows himself to be led astray by improper influences. In what body of men is honorable conduct more witnessed than in the Congress of the United States? Men of honor take their places here. Our associations here are with gentlemen high in tone, upright, and incorruptible. The pride of our membership is that we have served and been intimate with Representatives whose lives in the estimation of their constituents and the country have exemplified honesty, integrity, and unqualified adherence to principle. Dishonest action could not be tolerated in Congressional service. The country knew my colleague to be honest, and his devotion to economy in public expenditures saved many millions to the Treasury.

Though burdened with public duties, never ceasing in work, yet he always considered the individual constituent. Busy as he ever was, the call of a constituent was never denied. A letter from the humblest man received from him a due reply and ever a willingness to have his wishes, if in the right, carried out if possible. Eminent as he was in statesmanship he found time to be accessible to his fellow-citizens and to receive them without heeding their circumstances in life, rich or poor, powerful or weak, educated or uneducated. He was a statesman with a heart and knew that statesmanship failed sooner or later when courtesy, tenderness, and freedom of approach were denied the people.

He was a man of few words, and at once his discerning mind gave him immediate insight into the wants of whoever approached him. A seeming abruptness of manner was merely the necessity of husbanding time, so ever occupied was he in public duties. But he could not be misunderstood, for a frankness of answer, whether acquiescing or refusing, meant just what he said, and he never deceived.

No one was more sensitive than he. He had the power of concealing his hurts and disappointments. Ingratitude stung him to the very quick, but he was too great to make complaints, too honest in his own actions to look for deceit in others.

I repeat, literally he was a statesman with a heart. Promotion could not spoil him, and the higher he rose in the public estimation the more he appreciated the honors bestowed upon him and the more he felt that he should bend himself to listen to the necessary requirements of the people, never ending with those in representative life. Had he been transferred to the Senate, called to the Cabinet, elevated to the Presidency, Samuel Jackson Randall would never have changed in manner, but the greater his advancement the easier of access would he have been to his countrymen.

In the days of the rebellion he twice answered the call of his country, ready to fight to preserve the Union, dropping his uncompromising party feeling as long as the flag was to be upheld.

He never spoke in the House unless it was necessary. He always commanded attention, for he never wasted a word. In expression he was more forcible than eloquent, always using the fittest words. He grew to be a successful debater, but while he knew he had accomplished power of utterance and clearness in presenting his ideas he did not become a talker for talk's sake. He was sure to give information; hence he was always gladly heard. The intelligent debater never tires the House. He never wandered from the point at issue. He was really great in debate, unsurpassed in repartee.

In knowledge of parliamentary law and procedure, his constant study in the earlier as well as the later years of his service, he was, in my opinion, never excelled. He had learned not only the principles upon which the rules were established, but practically on the floor and as Speaker he knew how they should be applied.

In leadership my colleague was pre-eminent. In every important crisis during his Congressional service he was found in the foreground. The pages of the Congressional Globe and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD bear witness to his prominence upon great occasions. He had the breadth of mind to face opposition. In the struggle over the force bill he was all-powerful. In the electoral-count excitement he foresaw dreaded results, but by his calmness and determination as he sat beside Acting Vice-President Ferry, equally calm and determined for the right, the count was completed.

Again, without fear of criticism, he led Democratic protectionists for the preservation of protection to American industry. He persistently, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, insisted, year after year, in reducing the estimates, and, because in preparing appropriation bills he was not influenced by localities, he was sustained as a consistent economist. His name will live in history, and he will be remembered for following in action the courage of his convictions. These were the great triumphs of his legislative career.

You recollect, my fellow-members, the eloquent tributes to him of the Chaplain of the House and of his pastor while we surrounded his remains in the church here, whence we followed his body to the funeral train. These men of God pronounced his conversion to Christ as his greatest triumph. Yes, this was the triumph of his life. He so considered it, and did not hesitate to say so to friends who visited him during the precious times they were privileged to see him after he had connected himself with the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church. To me on several occasions he said that it was his constant comfort, and when in pain and suffering his priceless consolation. Oh! how he wished and hoped his friends, in the midst of the cares of public duties, would feel it their greatest duty to confess Christ and become followers of the Lord.

In his strong personal interest in me, loving words would be uttered by him from his sick bed, and in his prayers, as told me by his devoted wife, he would ask that by the grace of God I should hasten to seek the same comfort and consolation as had in mercy been vouchsafed to him. To me he spoke on several occasions of the frequent visits of a distinguished Philadelphian, high in Government position here, whose Christian influence under God had brought him to realize that he was a sinner and needed forgiveness. This friend's prayers and words of holiness gave him peace of mind and removed the terrors of death.

The ending of our personal intimacy, which had continued so many years, to me is sad indeed. The death of this colleague of mine, younger in years than I am, and the death of our senior colleague, Judge Kelley, and our long-time associate, Samuel S. Cox, have made a void which can not easily be filled. Cox, Kelley, Randall, three Representatives serving at the same time, twenty-five years and over, together, dead within a period of less than seven months. What a blow to their surviving fellow-members! What a loss to their country! Certainly they have never been excelled in intelligence, influence, and ability in any Congress from the organization of the Government.

Our hearts were crushed as we passed our resolutions in the House upon the announcement of Mr. Randall's death. While his colleagues from Pennsylvania at their meeting were expressing their more direct personal grief over the departure of one of their own, the executive committee of the Labor League of the District of Columbia bemoaned in touching resolves the loss of him "as one of the greatest benefactors of the workingmen who had ever occupied a seat in Congress." The citizens of Pennsylvania who were present in this city met in large numbers and deplored in words of affection and heartfelt feeling that a great man of their Commonwealth had died.

Those of us whose melancholy duty it was to follow him to his place of burial will never forget the faces of sadness we saw upon the thousands of Philadelphia people whose affection for him took them to his grave. The poor, the rich, the young, the old, were there to shed tears over the remains of their deceased friend and fellow-citizen. Men, women, and children in countless throngs looked upon his countenance, placid in death, for the last time. Eminent men of all political parties paid homage to him who in life, though a partisan, had won their friendship and esteem. His simplicity of manner, his kindly greetings, his devotion to the individual, his courage to do what he believed was right, his fearlessness in asserting his opinions, endeared him to all men. They mourned his death not only as a loss to their city, their State, and their country, but wept over him personally as those who "would not be comforted."

His wish that his funeral should be devoid of pomp and ceremony was fully carried out in Washington. In Philadelphia there was no ostentation, but the hearts of the people could not be restrained. Their desire of bearing testimony by their presence to his virtues, his unsullied life as a Representative and as a man, brought multitudes from all parts of the city in unformed procession, but in the quietness of profound grief, to see their deceased friend laid at rest in Laurel Hill Cemetery. He was honored in death as in life as few men have been honored.

Samuel Jackson Randall died a professing Christian. The solemnity of his death, the loving scenes at his interment, will linger long in our memories, and while we are pronouncing our tributes upon him let our prayer be to the Lord that the dread messenger in His mercy may not again visit the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, when one feels a loss as of that of a comrade and as a matter of personal experience can recall the genial kindness and courteous consideration for others which marked Samuel Jackson Randall's intercourse with his fellow-men, it is difficult to speak calmly of his completed life and untimely death.

There is something chilling and repressing in premeditated eulogy; yet to give vent to the feelings and to put into words the sorrow which all who knew him feel because we shall look upon his face no more would not besit this occasion.

Memory brings back to us all very vividly the dignified presence, the earnest voice, the impressive manner of the man who but a few short weeks ago was a leader in this House, a living power among living men, molding public opinion and shaping national policy.

It is hard to realize that we shall hear the earnest tones of his voice no more, and that here, where yet the echoes still linger, in accordance with the custom of this body, kind words are spoken of him to-day as flowers are sometimes dropped into new-made graves.

He was a man whose strength of character, whose sterling integrity and tenacity of purpose the masses of his countrymen fully comprehended. His was not the dazzling brilliancy of genius which is directed as by inspiration and compels public attention, but he was one of the workers who tirelessly take up the duties of every day and patiently and laboriously build that which endures. Slowly, carefully, and methodically he examined every public question, and however difficult the problems involved might be he would patiently and thoughtfully consider them until he was prepared to debate and vote intelligently and understandingly. The one great end and aim of his Congressional life was to do his duty and bringing to the labors of every day the strong common sense and vigorous interest of an earnest, faithful, honest man.

He walked attended
By a strong-aiding champion—conscience—

There were times, though not often, when I thought his views were wrong. But there never was a time that I did not know, whatever his position, that he believed he was right. I know of no man who served with him in public life (and I know many) who, however he may have differed with him, would not to-day gladly stand beside me to testify to his fidelity to the right as it was given to him to see it.

His life was a protest against the ignoble love of ease and pleasure, and the prevalent and degrading worship of wealth which poisons our national life had no abiding place in his generous nature. He never ate the bread of idleness, and in the sturdy independence of his character he valued men for what they did rather than for what they had, for the noble qualities of their minds, and not for the bulk of their material wealth.

Although not always in accord with the majority of his party on questions of public policy, yet Mr. Randall was essentially a Democrat, believing with all his heart in the simple customs of the early days of our national existence and heartily despising the tinsel and glitter, the pomp and vanity, extravagance and luxury of these latter days. He talked well, and always to the purpose, when there was occasion, and was among the most potent of all the able advocates who have graced the halls of the American Congress, because his speeches were strong with the power of a strong man's conviction. He was a thinker and a worker whose self-denying faithfulness in the discharge of arduous duties gave him such large experience and intimate knowledge of public affairs that no man without such special training can hope to fill his place.

Such men sent here to represent the people do honor to the people's cause. The dangerous brilliancy of genius is more attractive and the melody of eloquent orators will charm for awhile against the voice of reason itself, but it is the unswerving honesty of purpose, the sturdy common sense, and steadfast adherence to duty of such men as he that preserve to us all that is best and worth preserving in our national life.

It is not necessary that I should dwell further upon this melancholy subject, nor that I should tell this House, nor the millions whom we here represent, who Samuel J. Randall was. His fame as an honest, wise, and faithful representative of the people is as wide as the Union itself. In his death the great State of Pennsylvania mourns the loss of a citizen whom she delighted to honor and this great country that of one of her wisest and most patriotic statesmen. His pitiable condition for many months prior to his death can not be contemplated without feeling of the most profound sorrow. Suffering with a painful and incurable malady, he battled long and manfully for life, and never ceased to hope until the grim messenger of death closed his eyes in peaceful and, as to all earthly scenes, eternal slumber.

There is a rustle among the leaves and a sound like a sob as the ripe fruit falls upon the sod beneath the trees, and that is all. The sun shines, and the shadows fall, and the wind whispers among the leaves as before.

The time of bud and blossom comes again and again, and the snow's white mantle falls upon the graves of departed friends. The awful indifference of nature to the darkness and pain and sorrow of death seems harsh and pitiless as we turn from the grave to the teeming life of a summer's day. "If a man die shall he live again?" Generation after generation the sons and daughters of men have come and gone since that heart-stirring inquiry was first recorded. Science has been appealed to in vain to answer, and all the passionate longings of love get no reply. Our friends and loved ones pass from life, and the rest is silence. Only faith can make a hopeful response, and never is faith so hopeful as when, regarding duty well performed, it listens in the darkness of the tomb and hears the still small voice: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

My colleague [Mr. BUCKALEW] was to speak after my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL]. He is unable to be here on account of sickness, and I ask unanimous consent of the House that he be permitted to print his remarks in the RECORD.

Consent was given.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Mr. Randall began with my entrance into the Forty-fourth Congress. From that time until his death our relations were both pleasant and friendly. I was associated with him for seven years upon the same committee. To-day I desire, with others, to unite in paying my humble tribute of respect to his memory.

In expressing my sorrow at his death I know I am speaking the sentiments of the people of my State, for Alabama held him in high esteem, admired him for his many virtues and sterling qualities, loved him for the services he had rendered her people.

During the great struggle in the House of Representatives, denominated by some as "the battle of liberty against despotism," the parliamentary tactics, indomitable pluck, and heroic endurance of Mr. Randall shone with unparalleled resplendence. To these great characteristics of the lamented statesman the whole country is indebted for the defeat and overthrow of a policy which would have wrought incalculable injury to the best interests of the entire country; for these grand efforts in behalf of just and humane legislation the South owes him a lasting debt of gratitude, and so long as a love of justice shall animate the Southern heart the memory of Mr. Randall will be cherished by her gallant and noble people.

Hon. Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, his colleague, as well as others, has truly and fittingly spoken of Mr. Randall's services to his State, his loyal devotion as a husband, his loving kindness as a father, and the sweet domestic happiness which ever reigned in the home circle. I come to speak of him as I knew him in this Hall and in the committee room.

During the fall campaign of 1874 a political cyclone swept over our country which gave to the Democracy a majority in the House of Representatives. The key-notes of that campaign were the extravagances of the Republican party, "Retrenchment and reform!" Mr. Kerr was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, and he made Mr. Randall chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the money committee of the House.

A great work was before him, a herculean task had to be performed. Expenditures must be reduced. Mr. Randall's long service in Congress made him familiar with the details of the Government. No one was more familiar with the previous legislation of our country, its history, its resources, and the needs of the people. He was well equipped for the discharge of the duties assigned him. He had able and experienced associates upon the committee. The work of "retrenchment and reform" commenced. He soon became master of the situation. When the work was finished the result of the labors of his committee, as well as I now remember, showed a reduction of $30,000,000 in the expenditures of the Government. The policies in respect of retrenchment and reform inaugurated by his committee have been the controlling policies of his party since 1876, and which were so wise and eminently proper that the opposition, in the main, have followed them. By the work of Mr. Randall and his associates the people of the United States have been saved the expenditure of many millions of dollars.

Upon the death of Mr. Kerr, Mr. Randall was elected Speaker of the House, and was re-elected in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses. As Speaker of the House he was a model presiding officer, equal to every emergency, quick and ready, firm and resolute, yet always courteous. He was the peer of any of the great men who had preceded him; and the record made by him as Speaker of the House of Representatives will compare favorably with the records of the most illustrious men who have filled that exalted position since the organization of the Government.

As a legislator he had few equals and no superiors. The impress of his great mind is stamped upon the statutes enacted during his Congressional life. He was a man of sterling integrity and above reproach. He lived through the days of jobbery and corruption; he came out with garments pure and spotless. He was the enemy of all corrupt schemes and was opposed to all raids upon the Treasury. The lobbyist disliked and dreaded him. They knew he stood for his country and his country's good.

Mr. Randall has been called a born leader of men; and why? He possessed all those great qualities which go to make up a leader. He had an iron will. He had nerve and courage. He hated intrigue, despised all shams. He was open, frank, honest, and manly to his opponents. He wore no mask. His panoply was the justness of his cause. He had convictions, and he was always loyal to his convictions. One of the highest evidences of his loyalty to his convictions was that he never yielded one jot or tittle from his convictions upon the great tariff question, when he knew with reasonable certainty that by his yielding and falling into line with his party upon that question he could have reached the highest position in the gift of the American people.

Upon all questions save that of the tariff, in which he differed with a majority of his party, he was the acknowledged leader of the Democratic side of the House up to his death. During parliamentary battles all eyes turned to him to lead the Democratic forces. When the battle raged the highest, in the hottest of the fight, he was cool and deliberate and never for a moment lost his balance. In the midst of confusion one blast from his bugle would rally his forces, and the "two wings flapped together."

As a debater there were men who had a more ready flow of language, who were more gifted as orators, but none surpassed him in making his points clear. If eloquence consists in carrying one's point, in convincing one's hearers, Mr. Randall was an eloquent man. He never indulged in flowery language or rhetoric, but he came down with sledgehammer blows which his adversary could neither resist nor ward off.

Mr. Speaker, Samuel Jackson Randall, one of the greatest statesmen and purest patriots of his age, has passed over the river. Death has taken him from amongst us. He will be missed, not alone by the city of Philadelphia, his home and birth-place; not alone by the great State of Pennsylvania, which he for twenty-seven years so ably and faithfully represented, but he will be missed here, in this Hall, by his party and by the people of our entire country.

It is a pleasing reflection, Mr. Speaker, in our sorrow for his loss, to know that our friend and colleague has gone to a purer, brighter, and better world. His minister, Rev. Dr. Chester, told us in his eloquent sermon at the funeral of Mr. Randall that he "had administered to him the sacrament of the Lord's Supper." He told us that Mr. Randall "had passed through weeks of great pain, but bore his sufferings with a beautiful christian patience." He told us that "when the summons at last came, on the Sabbath, just as the morning broke, just as the bells in a neighboring church were calling its worshippers, it found Mr. Randall prepared, for his soul was washed in that blood which cleanseth from all sin, which can fit a child of earth for an abundant entrance into heaven."

May we all be prepared to join our colleague when, like him, we are called to pass over the river.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, of the youth and early manhood of Samuel J. Randall I know nothing, except as they were reflected in the character and bearing of the matured man. When I first saw him, he was occupying the Speaker's chair, presiding over the deliberations of the national House of Representatives. His appearance was striking, and you at once pointed to him as a man of mark.

Samuel J. Randall was a man of mark. The qualities that made him conspicuous among his fellows were not acquired, they were innate, they were God-given.

As I reflect upon his, as it seems to me, untimely death, and the loss his people have sustained, there comes to my mind the words of David, when he learned of the death of Abner: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

Samuel J. Randall was a prince among his people. He held his title not by word or touch of royalty; he was a "prince by virtue of an earlier creation and the imposition of a mightier hand."

It is seldom given to a man to leave upon the times in which he lives the palpable impress of his genius.

There are many who, pursuing the noiseless tenor of their way, do yet perform a mighty work in the interest of the state, and more especially of the neighborhood in which they reside. But Mr. Randall's field was larger than the neighborhood where he abode; it was broader than the State that claimed him for her son; it was as wide as the nation.

His entrance upon the stage of public life was not such as to attract attention, but was quiet and without display. There was nothing meteoric about his movements. His election to Congress was not the result of great brilliancy of intellect, nor yet of dash in any forum, neither in the battle-field where he strove, nor yet in the council where he was wise and persuasive, but it resulted from a recognition by his fellow-men of the sterling qualities which gave him prominence here upon this floor.

He was of the stuff of which martyrs are made. He was a Puritan—I speak of a character, a type, rather than one of the class of persons who bore that name. He had the characteristics that have marked, the Puritan everywhere upon the earth.

He possessed an indomitable will and an inflexible purpose, and, when once he had decided what duty required of him, he moved forward to the discharge of its requirements, and there was no change or shadow of turning until his work was done.

Duty was to him a word of imperial command. He would have been useful to Cromwell. He would have sat with serenity as a member of the court that sent Charles to the block, and I believe he would, with the same intrepidity that marked the Roman Regulus, have returned to Carthage to be tortured rather than advise the Romans to a cessation of hostilities or to make peace with the Carthaginians. He was a leader, not by the accident of choice, but by virtue of a commission that men might disregard, but could not revoke.

Leaders are rarely needed. They are for great occasions and times of public peril, not for the dull current of common events. Thersites was never silent in the councils of the Greeks. Ulysses seldom spoke.

In politics Randall was a Democrat, largely, I have always thought, on account of the value of the political trade-mark under which they did business—the name Democrat.

Apart from its partisan aspect there is a charm in its suggestiveness. The name "democracy" is worth to the party that bears it a million of votes in this country, without regard to what is advocated or what is opposed by the party.

It is known that, while Randall stood one of the foremost and most influential in the ranks of Democrats, he nevertheless advocated many of the cardinal principles of Republicanism.

He was an earnest protectionist. By that I mean he believed that the best interests of his country and his countrymen required that they should have at least, and possibly something more than, an equal opportunity with the citizens of other nations in every field of industrial endeavor.

He did not believe in a system of what has been termed "reciprocal brigandage," born of an abuse which would supplant inequalities in opportunities between citizens of the United States and those of other nations by similar though more hurtful inequalities between our own people. The former, Mr. Randall deemed a disadvantage; the latter, a national calamity.

He had confidence in the future of this Republic, an abiding faith in the saving common-sense of the American people.

He believed, first, that they desired to be right, that they desired to be just, and that if left to themselves, in the presence of conditions which afforded opportunities for an intelligent understanding of public questions, they would work out the salvation of the Republic without civil strife, without revolution.

It is quite possible that he did not give sufficient consideration to the dynamic element which has been introduced from all nations of the earth and the baneful influence that element has exerted upon the American character. But is it to be wondered at, since ordinarily there is more concern felt to achieve present political success than there is to preserve our institutions free from influences potent though obscure which tend to civil discord and revolution? Who can guide the ship and yet stand on the shore?

Mr. Randall's life-work is done.

It is difficult to rightly estimate the influence of such a character. He was not an orator, he was not a man of high scholastic attainments, yet he was none the less a profound practical philosopher. Few grasped as he did the logic of events. It may be justly said of him that in a human sense he saw the end from the beginning. His strong points were a wealth of saving common-sense, an incorruptible honesty, steadfastness in honorable purpose, and untiring industry, all supplemented by the highest order of moral and physical courage.

He was thoroughly devoted to his family. No man felt a livelier interest in the purity and well-being of the home circle. He was not, I believe, until a few months prior to his death, an open professor of any religious faith, although he kept the commandments, which is evidence of a perfect faith.

Less, I think, to bring peace to his own mind than to set a worthy example, he connected himself with the church, realizing and testifying by his example and by the testimony he bore that it was well for us to associate ourselves together as christians and to meet together for the purposes of worship.

To my mind, at least, the fact that Samuel J. Randall openly, earnestly embraced the christian faith, ought to go far to confirm the wavering and remove the doubts of those who are hesitating, for he was a strong man, and no fear of death moved him, no terror that the grave could present operated upon his mind, but his profession was the result of a clear and full conviction that there is a life beyond the grave and that that life might be in some measure, greater or less, fashioned by the thoughts and acts of mortals while on this side.

We miss him, the country will miss him, and it will be long before his State will find his fellow. She may have sons more brilliant, whose bearing will attract the public notice more quickly, but she has no son who loved her with a devotion less selfish or who will serve her with more courage and constancy.

Mr. VAUX. Mr. Speaker, elected for the unexpired term of Samuel J. Randall in the Fifty-first Congress, occasioned by his death last April, it is fitting that I should pay my personal tribute to his character and memory. His distinguished colleagues who have served with him so long in Congress can better discuss his official life and his eminent public services. We have already heard from them the most interesting delineation of his career.

I knew Mr. Randall after he reached manhood, and we were associates, more or less, for many years. In his early manhood he seemed to be destined to commercial pursuits. He did not, however, evince any partiality for that vocation. He was restive under the restraint of the conventional rules which then regulated business enterprises. There were allurements in the energies that surrounded political organizations. These attracted him. If he studied law, he never, I think, undertook the discharge of the duties of the profession or entered a professional career. He was attracted to political life by its harmony with his temperament. It is a remarkable fact that legislation was most congenial to his tastes. He was circumscribed in his public service to the legislative branches of government.

His first introduction into politics was as a member of the municipal government of the city of Philadelphia, in which we both were born. He served four years in that body. It was a labor most especially of detail which he was thus forced to undertake. This he learned in his earliest experience. Then he was elected to the State senate of Pennsylvania and served two sessions in that body. This was an enlarged sphere for his experience acquired in the municipal government. A short time after this he was elected to the Thirty-eighth Congress, and to this body he was consecutively re-elected until the Fifty-first, a quarter of a century of continuous service.

It is not now to be considered whether exclusive devotion for a long time to legislation is not the best school to eliminate the highest qualities of a statesman.

Mr. Randall never served in any administrative or judicial station. He was not a great student nor a profound thinker. His practical common sense was his guide on and in all public questions. His marked characteristic was the mastery of details. He investigated and analyzed the practical elements in all public questions. He was a leader by the force of his personal power for high purpose. In him the sense of public duty was the basis of his public actions. His reputation stands on the pedestal of earnest convictions of right, which he followed. In the performance of his part in Congress this power was most conspicuous. Rarely did he discuss great principles. He always exhausted the facts and figures in all economic legislative measures. He was a great master of this most important branch of Congressional work. He became pre-eminent as an authority on all fiscal measures. He impressed his colleagues by his familiarity with the practical details of the questions proposed. He was by Congress elected its Speaker. He led the House by his clear statements on taxation and appropriation bills, and fully expressed and explained the purpose and effect of such measures. In the chair he gained his highest honors. The people of the United States were as familiar with Randall as the Speaker as they were with him as a member of the House. The character of his mind as we have sketched it will be developed and illustrated in his speech delivered on the 27th of March, 1876, "On the substitution of silver coin for fractional currency."

We cite this only to substantiate the views we have expressed. It is a speech which shows Mr. Randall's line of thought, his command of detail, and his intellectual power. Mr. Randall's high rank and great fame were due to his zeal, energy, will-power, courage, and determination. If he had taken up the profession of arms and entered military life he would have been a great commander. His capabilities would have been there manifested. He had the power to dominate and lead men, and his will was wonderful. His personal and political integrity were beyond the reach of suspicion. Schemes, jobs, covert efforts to secure public plunder by legislation, were neither countenanced nor encouraged. He was the enemy of the lobbyist. It is somewhat significant that these characteristics were so rare as to be the glory of his life, but so it was. The people honored these virtues and honored him. His integrity was one of the powers that gave him his influence. He never faltered, never hesitated in the course he had marked out. Those of his party who could not agree with him, and they were a large majority, bowed before his universally admitted stainless honesty. That was the brilliant jewel in the coronet of his fame.

The corner-stone begins the foundation; so the cap-stone marks the completion of the material edifice. The consensus of virtuous minds is formulated in the axiom that is the concretion of the lesson of human lives. When the days of the years of Mr. Randall's life were coming to a close, surrounded by his family, whose devotion soothed as it had ever sustained him, he united himself with the christian church. This consensus of virtuous minds in this axiom to which I have referred is found in the words Finis coronat opus. Confessing God the Almighty and Eternal Father and his only Son our Holy and Blessed Redeemer, it came to pass that the life-work of Mr. Randall was crowned as he entered into eternity. Finis coronat opus.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, it requires no exaggeration to pay a high tribute to the life and character of Samuel J. Randall.

The truth, simply and plainly spoken, will best serve my purpose in the part which I shall take on this occasion.

It was to my advantage to be with him many years upon the floor of this House. Here I learned to know him and appreciate his great services to the country. It is a pleasure for me to add a few words to what has already been said concerning his public life; to that alone shall I direct my attention.

Mr. Randall was a plain unassuming man, but his work was most effectual. He dealt in facts and was always armed with reasons to justify his acts. He was not in any sense demonstrative. He accomplished most by a steady progress in his work, taking no steps backward.

For many years he was a member of this House while his party was in the minority. But he stood firmly, wrestling against odds, yielding nothing. Over and over he submitted to defeat, only to rally and try again. He not only led his party at this time, but he commanded the entire respect of the opposition. Whether he was right at all times or whether he was wrong on some occasions, no man could question his sincerity or the honesty of his purpose. He seemed moved solely by a sense of duty. In 1875, when his party came into power in the House of Representatives, he took high rank at once as a leader upon the floor. This he did, not only in carrying out his policy, but also in the work of providing ways and means for defraying the expenses of the Government.

The administration in all the Departments was still opposed to him, but as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he held his hand firmly upon the door of the Treasury and to a great extent he dictated the entire expenses of the Government. No man in the United States at that time, unless it were the President himself, held a stronger position than did Mr. Randall. He could absolutely fix the amount of all the appropriation bills, on which the whole machinery of the Government depended. He could say, "This you can have, and no more." In the first year of his services as chairman of this committee he made large reductions in the expenses. He revised the entire civil force, applying the pruning-knife conscientiously, if not wisely, with a view of reforming the service, reducing expenses, and consequently the burdens of the people.

Still later on, in 1877, when Speaker of the House, he rendered the country a service which alone was sufficient to place him high on the plane of statesmanship. That occasion will never be forgotten by his contemporaries upon this floor, nor will it be forgotten by the American people, who love their country better than their party.

In the history of our Government we have never been without a President for any period, however short. If the electoral count had not been completed that year, so as to determine who was chosen President before the close of the session on March 4, no method could have been devised by which the result could be determined, and for a time at least we would have been without a President of the United States, and the succession would have been involved in the greatest of doubt. The last hours of the session were rapidly approaching. The count was incomplete. Dilatory proceedings could easily have consumed the remaining time to the close, leaving the result of the election of 1876 undetermined. A completion of the count was certain defeat for Mr. Randall's party. Revolutionary means alone could install in office the man he believed to be elected. But Mr. Randall preferred the defeat of his party to the jeopardy in which the country would be involved. If Congress had adjourned without declaring the result no one could have predicted the consequences.

Rising above party, above the rules and parliamentary law which had always governed the House, he planted himself upon the constitutional mandate that the electoral vote should be counted, and he held the House should not adjourn or transact other business until this high duty should be performed. And it was performed. In this bold but justifiable act on his part, as Speaker of the House, history will write his name along with the fathers and defenders of the Republic. His far-seeing eye ran out over the future, and he believed in the ultimate triumph of truth and justice.

If wrong should intervene in counting the vote, he knew the people at the first opportunity would make the correction. He thought it far better that he and his associates should meet with defeat than that this Government of the people should be suspended or that we should be arrayed in hostile attitude toward each other over the executive department of the Government. He was willing to sacrifice his personal preferences for the good of the whole country.

During the last years of our lamented friend he was shorn to some extent of his leadership in the party to which he belonged. Many will say and believe he was greater than his party. Certainly his transition from the place he had held as leader so long was not due to a want of ability, or integrity, or in generalship, so much needed at the head of 30,000,000 of people, but simply and solely for the reason that his associates differed with him on the great protection policy, which he so sincerely believed to be necessary for the good of the country.

In the stand he took for the protection of American industries no one can doubt his sincerity. He was reared in the school of protection, and he was executing the will of a most patriotic constituency. He faltered not, but remained faithful to his trust to the close, and a grateful people will reverently and respectfully remember his patriotism and fidelity. Strange as it may seem, the succeeding triumph of the party to which he did not belong was his own vindication and restoration to leadership. While Speaker of the House he was a great believer in the constitutional rights of each individual member, and no one, however strong, was permitted to usurp or trample upon the rights of any other member. He believed in the equality of representation, and that the constituency of each member had a right to be heard in the House of Representatives.

This was a distinguishing feature of his administration as Speaker. Few, if any, of his predecessors excelled him in fairness. His official service was marked with a personal kindness that brought sincere regret, shared in by all, when the hour of separation came at the close of the sessions.

But the useful career of this great man has passed into history. He has gone from us to return no more. We shall no longer hear that voice, so familiar to us here in the House. The messenger of death has stilled it forever. But he has spoken volumes for us and left a record here full of examples and instructions to guide us in our deliberations. He has passed from this arena, where he earned his great name and fame in the cause of his country, to that better shore, where truth and goodness reign supreme.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, this occasion awakens the memories of the past seventeen years in connection with the most important and stirring events of that period. The figure, the action, and utterances of Samuel J. Randall assume that distinctness and nobility which proclaim him a leader of men in the public affairs of his time.

It is not my purpose to review his life from its commencement, but rather from the period when I first knew him on the floor of this House until his end came. Indeed, this task is more than I can consummate, for it would exact not only the history of all the stirring scenes which by reason of the incidental excitements commanded public attention, but of a large part of national legislation, requiring patient and laborious study of the very highest importance to the country, and yet repelling the ordinary mind by the long-sustained effort to comprehend fully its scope and results to his countrymen.

Coming myself to the Forty-third Congress, he first attracted my attention by the intense interest which he manifested in debate on all questions which involved public expenditures. At the head of the Committee on Appropriations was Hon. James A. Garfield, afterwards President of the United States. His comprehensive analytical mind was dominating its work. Eying all of it with shrewdness, sagacity, and unswerving toil and courage stood as the leading opponent of the majority Samuel J. Randall. The election of a Democratic House brought him to the head of the Committee on Appropriations. I was placed on that committee with him. To this I refer only because it gave me a rare point of observation of his qualities. He saw and seized the opportunity of a most marvelous reduction of public expenditures. The Senate of the United States was Republican and opposed to his purpose.

The President of the United States was not only a Republican, but sustained by the devotion which sprang from the fact that he was peerless amongst the great soldiers who led the armies of the Union in the recent civil war. Under his counsel and guidance the appropriations contained in the various bills made a reduction of $40,000,000. Immediately the fires of the opposition in the House, Senate, Administration circles, and the press were kindled. All the resources of political warfare were turned upon him and his measures. Taking advantage of the financial crisis then upon the country he pursued them in debate in the House with a courage, zeal, patriotism, and richness of information which rallied his friends about him with a confidence and enthusiasm never excelled by any man, living or dead.

The Senate rejected his reforms and disparaged them with the most labored and vehement criticism. Conferees of the House met, hotly debated differences, and returned to their Houses reporting disagreements in language born of intense and bitter strife. Most of the session of 1875-'76, which ended on the 15th of August, 1876, is filled up with a struggle for reduction of expenditures. The Senate finally yielded a reduction of $30,000,000. On this struggle rested the Democratic campaign of 1876. Mr. Randall had conceived and consummated the magnificent record on which his party claimed the confidence of the American people. The occasion forbids that I should enter fully into a discussion of the scenes in the two Houses of Congress, the Electoral Commission proceedings, the general alarm in all sections and all parties for fear of an interregnum in the Presidential office, and the possible dangers from irregular and unconstitutional measures which might be invented.

The elections of 1874 returned an overwhelming majority for the Democratic party in the House of Representatives for the Forty-fourth Congress. The second session of the Forty-third Congress assembled in the following December with the House of Representatives nearly two-thirds Republican. The civil-rights and force bills were brought up for action. It was believed by Southern members that they were designed to create disorder and race troubles in the South. Despondency and irritation each afflicted her people. With a great Government hostile to its peace, its civilization, its hopes, as was manifested in the proposed legislation, there seemed to be utter darkness all about them. And yet there was found a way of escape.

A leader of the minority, skilled in parliamentary tactics, grounded in constitutional principles, brave in every emergency, burst upon the scene. From the rules of the House he extracted a system of dilatory motions, which for three nights and two and one-half days without intermission, staid all action. During the time he had never slept, and ate at his desk. His manly frame yielded not to fatigue; his clear-sightedness never for an instant mistook the situation; his firm resolve and flashing eye animated with faith and enthusiasm his followers. At the end of this struggle it was seen that the session was too near to an end for the force bill to pass; it was believed the Democrats in the Senate could consume time and prevent the passage of the civil rights bill and that further tax of physical strength was not needed in the House. The force bill never became a law, the civil-rights act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, the sky brightened in the Southern land, and henceforward the name of Samuel J. Randall was revered and loved at her every hearthstone.

This struggle and that for reduction of public expenditures, to which I have referred, placed him in the group of great Americans. The death of Mr. Kerr, Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress, during the summer of 1876, vacated this high place. To fill the vacancy was an easy task. It was assigned naturally, justly, enthusiastically, to Mr. Randall. He was afterwards twice elected to the same office. His administration was marked by economy in expenditures and aggressive purity on all questions. My memory is full of interesting incidents in his career in this office, but I must not pause to utter them here. I shall be permitted to speak freely of one.

It will be remembered that, in the Presidential election of 1876, on the face of the returns Mr. Hayes received 185 votes and Mr. Tilden 184 votes. It was alleged that the returns in Louisiana were false and fraudulent; that the certificate to the Florida vote should have been given to the Tilden electors; that in South Carolina, by the use of troops and deputy marshals the people were overawed and a fair election was defeated. Exceptions were taken to the certificates from Oregon, and it was alleged that the electoral vote of that State should have been given to Mr. Tilden.

Time will not permit nor is it deemed necessary to state with more elaboration the objections against counting the votes of these States for Mr. Hayes and the reasons for giving them to the Tilden electors. They were attended with circumstances so significant as to create a profound fear of civil war. This led to the passage of the Electoral Commission act. To the commission were submitted all the questions in dispute. Provision was made against dilatory proceedings in the two Houses of Congress in joint or separate sessions. Thus it seemed a peaceful solution was assured. The case of Florida was decided in favor of Mr. Hayes. The same conclusion was reached as to Oregon. A like result was reached in the case of South Carolina. At this stage, March 1, 1877, a majority of the Democrats of the House, under the belief that the decisions of the commission were erroneous and founded on partisan feeling and that bad faith obtained, desired to stay the proceedings. If this were consummated the 4th of March would come and no provision have been made for President. An interregnum in the office would have occurred. Expedients based on necessity and unsupported by law might have been resorted to by both parties. Law and order were threatened throughout the land. Dilatory motions were made in the House and supported by the great body of Democratic Representatives. If successful, anarchy was threatened.

All depended on the lofty patriotism and heroism of the Speaker, Hon. Samuel J. Randall. Obeying the law, he refused to entertain the motions. He left his party friends because duty dictated it. It were better to say that they were driven by passion from law, while he, lifting himself above the storm, saw in that great arbitration the safety of our institutions and the harmony of his countrymen. A study of the details of this Presidential election, of the varied and violent agitations of the popular heart, the vast dangers apprehended by the best men of all parties, and its peaceful solution, furnishes a grand appreciation of him who rose as high as this great emergency.

Mr. Speaker, for fourteen years of his public career I had such relations with Mr. Randall as to enable me to say I knew him well. His time was devoted to his public work. He was a severe and constant student. This, long continued, enriched him in knowledge. I would not call him learned. The greatest judges, soldiers, and statesmen have rarely been pre-eminent here. I would not call him the most artistic debater. Not that he might not have excelled in this. His earnest heart and quick, sagacious mind seized truth and scorned the slower methods of the logician, which stood between it and action. I would not call him an orator. His modest, simple nature turned him away from all the ornaments of language and the art of arousing and directing the hearts of men.

He was courageous. No man excelled him in his physical or moral courage. He was an honest man. The giver of bribes shrank from his presence; the flatterer bound him not with silken cords; the paths of friendship only paralleled his duty to his country. Armed with knowledge, earnest, clear, direct enunciation of thought, commanding physique, lofty traits of character, he was easily the leader of associates who followed with a faith and enthusiasm such as I have never known any man to enjoy in all my experience.

The law of change is written in the early forms of vegetable and animal life, whose characters science busily deciphers. The drifts and sands of time give up to human endeavor the arts, manners, forms of government and religion of dynasties once hid from human remembrance. The historic period emerges. Over this wide field myriads of busy men have acted their noble or ignoble parts. The muses have charmed; philosophers have instructed; the warrior has conquered; the statesman has debated and diplomatized; the masses have trod the humble ways of human life, and over all an unseen power, never changing, is ever changing all things. It is not palpable to sight or touch, and yet 'tis about me. It has taken from me my friend, from my country a patriot statesman, from a noble wife the unsullied affection, sympathy, and counsel of a model husband.

Samuel J. Randall has passed from life, and history will preserve his character and career as a treasure for her students. When last I saw him he was emaciated, bloodless, pulseless, dead. The awful mystery seized upon my imagination and consciousness. The warrior's form was there, but where was his animating soul? The dim lights of man's highest philosophy disclose its immortality. The teachings of nature point to the same truth. The divine revelation proclaims that if a man die he shall live again. A higher charmed life rises out of our scenes of sorrow and soars to nobler labor and joy. We stand on the shore of time eagerly struggling for some glimpse of our friend in the unknown land. 'Tis vain. We can only say in our sadness, Farewell!

Mr. McCOMAS. This House to-day mourns its greatest parliamentary leader, Samuel J. Randall, during half of his lifetime a member and thrice the Speaker of the House.

A century of Congress shows that a mere rhetorician may flash and fade here. A golden tongue may put a passing spell on members and galleries, but even tumultuous applause dies away. The rare gift of eloquence, when its voice is stilled, lingers here only as a half-extinct tradition.

It is not so with our great Congressional leaders. Long experience and the training given on this floor are the bases whereon they build a more lasting fame.

Samuel J. Randall will rank among the foremost of these.

Modern civilization affords no occupation for great lawgivers. Every Congress can not rewrite the statutes. The wisest and truest Representatives do not aspire to leave a law as a legacy to the people. Ephemeral statutes are soon made and soon obsolete. Enduring laws are the work of many hands and slowly evolved.

The office of great leaders like Randall is to steadily sway and constantly lead the minds of their fellows within this Hall and public opinion outside. It is hard to catalogue their achievements, hard to trace in outline their impress on legislation. If, as was Randall's fortune, a long career here be passed as a member of the minority, his function is to resist, and not to initiate. The four years of President Cleveland's Administration unhappily did not wholly extricate him from his attitude as a minority member, on industrial questions.

By nature he was a conservative; forceful, masterful, aggressive, yet nevertheless a conservative. In that school of adversity, the minority, steadily through long service Samuel J. Randall acquired his marvelous equipment for attack and defense and gained undoubted leadership on this floor.

Tall, athletic, robust, he seemed a man born to command. Some faces fade from the memory as a fleck of cloud from a morning sky. We who knew him never can forget Randall's handsome leonine face, his keen, black eyes, his wavy, iron-gray hair, his iron jaw, his smile, or his frown, as he in the van of controversy cheered or checked his side of the House. We hear again his voice penetrating the recesses of this Hall, witness again his pluck in pressing the fight or his sudden and gracious tact in yielding non-essentials when stoutly contested in order to carry through the House in triumph a great appropriation bill.

His keen analysis, his short sentences, his brief speeches, often impassioned, always effective; his compact statements, always clear; his intuitive knowledge of the temper of this House, wayward and sudden and fitful as it always is, made him the leading and controlling spirit in Committee of the Whole and the master of debate under the five-minute rule, the only real debate in this House.

He was an intense American. This thorough Americanism kept him in touch with this House, a composite of every variety of American thought. He thus instinctively felt every change of its mood. After he had concluded his last memorable tariff speech, as he crossed this Hall he exclaimed to me, "I am an American and therefore I am a protectionist."

It was his Americanism, his love of the Union, that carried him as a volunteer soldier to the front. What a worthy glimpse of American life to see Private Randall in his tent with a cracker-box for a table writing to the Assistant Secretary of War that George H. Thomas ought to be made a general.

He was serving his sixth term in Congress when he electrified his party, seized its leadership, and, by the skill he had acquired, defeated the so-called "force bill."

His most memorable service to the country as Speaker was when he courageously checked and routed the filibusterers by a ruling which led the House to abide by the result of the Presidential Electoral Commission and saved the country from a disputed succession to the Presidency.

Upon the subject of appropriations, whether as a member on the floor or as chairman of that great committee, he struggled unceasingly for retrenchment in public expenditure.

More than any of our public men, it was Samuel J. Randall who taught the country and many Administrations that the power of appropriation is in Congress, that it is not in the Departments, that Congress must closely scrutinize estimates of public expenditure approximating $400,000,000 annually. For this duty of retrenchment and power of Congress, he waged battle against the Departments, the bureaus of the Army and Navy alike. For this cause he as firmly resisted the Democratic Administration as he had always fiercely assaulted Republican Administrations.

After six years' service with Samuel J. Randall on the Committee on Appropriations I am convinced that he, during his fourteen terms of service, saved very many millions of dollars for the people and ingrafted reforms upon every branch of administration. He did not stint appropriations to the defenders of the Union, their widows, and orphans. He was never a blatant, yet always a sincere friend of labor.

In the secrecy of the committee I often noted his sincere sympathy with the great modern movement for shorter hours and the amelioration of the condition of the multitude of toiling men and women who constitute ours, the greatest Republic. He was, in the best sense, Democratic. His tastes were simple. His daily life was ceaseless toil, lighted up by the glow of a happy home fireside.

Throughout his long and distinguished career his reputation was unsullied, his integrity stern, unbending, and stainless. Samuel J. Randall, the great leader of his party, one of the foremost commoners of his age, was above all an honest man. With a warm and generous heart, attaching friendships beyond party lines, living more than a quarter of a century in the Capital of the nation, he who saved a hundred millions to his country was indifferent to wealth, as though he had taken a vow of poverty, and died a poor man, having worn out his noble life in his country's service.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, my words on this occasion will be few. To-day we make a halt in the work of legislation that we may, in proper form and words, do honor to the life and character of the late Samuel J. Randall. He was born in the city of Philadelphia, October 10, 1828, and died in the city of Washington, April 13, 1890. He entered Congress March 4, 1863, and remained in continuous service till his death.

A eulogy will be at fault which does not assert that Mr. Randall was a man of the severest integrity. Serving here during a period when great temptations were offered for a departure from the path of public and official uprightness, he has left a name which no whisper of wrong-doing has ever tainted. The allurements to gain touched him not. He was true to himself, his oath, his country, and his God. He courted poverty rather than wealth.

Mr. Randall was a man of conviction. His convictions controlled him. They gave him purposes and rules of conduct which formed his character. That character was early discovered by political friends and adversaries. In its possession, he was strong and unshaken amid the temptations which beset a man of his prominence. The ruggedness of his convictions was seen and always felt, for it was sustained by the boldness and courage for which he was so pre-eminently distinguished. Such a man becomes a leader and, in Congress, leaves his impress upon the legislation of the country.

When Mr. Randall had taken a position, he could be driven from it by nothing less than a clear conviction that he was wrong. This firmness on many occasions made him grandly useful to the nation. In 1876 he gave his adhesion to a settlement of the Presidential count by an Electoral Commission. During all the dark hours and days which followed the creation of that commission and the final announcement, Mr. Randall was heroically patriotic. Had he wavered, a civil war, then so threateningly imminent, might have befallen the country.

The following sentences, taken from a leading daily, so clearly and truthfully delineate the character of our lamented friend that I use them here:

His was a patriotic breadth of character that sectional lines could not circumscribe; his influence was far-reaching and his usefulness was national. He was a lover of his country and its institutions, and his departure from the activities of life leaves a vacancy that will be sincerely regretted and profoundly felt by the whole people.

He was a force that never faltered in the presence of blandishments or intimidations, a man whose sympathies were always upon the side of the community, to which he gloried in belonging. He had no use for intrigue or conspiracy, and fraud upon the Government in any form was to him the synonym of baseness akin to treason.

Of such a man, it is our wont to say that he can ill be spared; but he had gathered abundant sheaves, and God called him, in His own good time, to rest.

He was thoroughly a man of the people. He knew their wants and had their ways; and it was upon the floor of the House, as a tribune of the people, that he most distinguished himself by his readiness in debate, his alertness of action and fruitfulness of resource, his wonderful self-command, and the masterly skill with which he led his forces in and out of the attack.

Wherefore did the whole country mourn at the death of Mr. Randall? It was because a great leader of conspicuous public and private virtues had gone; because a man of stern integrity had ceased to hold his place in the councils of the nation. Such a man is loved, for he can be trusted; for such a man the sweetest praise is sung; at the grave of such a man the purest tears are shed.

My acquaintance with Mr. Randall began with the opening of the Forty-second Congress. In the Forty-seventh, I had the honor to be with him a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. It was during our service on this committee that I discovered his habits of mind, his industry, his thoroughness, and his methods of investigation. He declared his purpose to make an exhaustive study of all the questions coming to that committee. He began and continued his studies with remarkable zeal.

Though he had then been a member of the House for eighteen years and Speaker more than four, yet he brought with him a primer giving the language and technical meaning of words found in revenue enactments, announcing his purpose to make himself familiar with the very elements. It was during that Congress that I learned to honor him.

Some of us will remember the manly strength and beauty that were his. It did not seem possible that he would, in so few years, be found grappling with a disease which should bring him to the end of life.

Death plans his own campaigns. He holds council with none of his victims. They are wholly at his mercy. To the many he gives no warning, while to some he allows his approach to be seen. To these, it is often a favor, though not meant to be so. To our friend, whom we mourn to-day, death was in sight for many months. He had no fear, for, indeed, he hoped for returning health and other years in the service of the country. He had no fear, for he had given a cheerful submission to Heaven's way of escape in death from the sufferings of a mortal state to the felicities of a heavenly. At the funeral service his pastor said of him:

He passed through weeks of the severest bodily pain, he fought nobly, courageously, hopefully, the battle with disease, yet he bore his sufferings with a beautiful christian patience. On a Sabbath, just as the morning broke, just as the bells in a neighboring church were calling its worshipers, the summons came to him to worship in the heavenly temple, to enter the Sabbath of eternal rest.

The simplicity of the funeral services in the church which he had so long attended was touchingly beautiful. It was the wish of our friend that no display be made when he should be taken to his final resting-place. His wish was carefully observed. The common people came to the church and sought a last view of their lost friend. Many hundreds came. His simple life and his friendly greetings in the years past had won their admiration and love. No better tribute could I render to the illustrious dead than to record this fact. An account of the funeral at Philadelphia closes as follows:

The absence of any public demonstration and the immense gathering of people of all walks of life mark Mr. Randall's funeral as one of the notable ones in Philadelphia's history. The flags on all public and many private buildings were placed at half-mast, but this was the only outward sign of sorrow, it appearing as though everybody was content to express their grief in silence.

Thus quietly and eloquently the great statesman was laid at rest.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, before I proceed I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read an extract from a letter written to me by Ex-Governor Crittenden, of Missouri, who was a warm personal and political friend of Mr. Randall, a letter written as a testimonial of affection for his friend.

The Clerk read as follows:

Randall is dead. Truly a great man has fallen. In brain power there were and still are many men in Congress stronger than he, but, when all their qualities are considered, I much doubt if his equal has been on that floor for many years. You and I were with him in the Forty-third Congress, when his bold leadership did more to defeat the force bill, with the small minority at his back, than the work of all others combined. He never retired from the Hall, seldom from his chair, during that prolonged session, and then only to partake of the simple lunch served from his own home.

After the famous political contest was over, led on by General Butler on the one side and resisted by Randall on the other, I heard President Grant say could Randall have led military forces as he did political ones his legions would have been invincible. He was a man of few words, but of many deeds. He had the respect of all men and the confidence of friend and foe. He never betrayed a man under any circumstances. He differed from the great leaders of his party on the tariff question, yet he differed with them as a man of honest convictions, as truly and boldly representing his views and locality as any Representative in Congress. I doubt if he ever intentionally wounded the feelings of any honest man, however much he differed from him on any subject. He was an ardent friend of the South on three grounds: First, its constitutional right after peace had been declared; second, his friendship for a brave people; third, his desire for a rehabilitation of impoverished States and people, in justice to themselves and as a means of strengthening the whole.

Whilst not an impetuous and belligerent man, Randall condemned wrong to a man or a section so strongly that, in the words of Daniel O'Connell, he could say, "I am against oppression everywhere and at all times, and wherever the oppressor shows his head there I launch my bolts."

Although not by any means an orator in the common acceptance of that word, yet he was a speaker of much magnetism to thinking men by reason of his strong ideas, compactly presented, commanding the attention of his opponents as fixedly as any debater of superior forensic power. He never spoke without having something to say and saying something when he did speak.

The whole country sustains a great loss by his death, his party a safe leader and wise adviser. No man did more to command the respect of the younger members in age as well as service than Sam Randall. He was ever ready to help them over the troublous ways of parliamentary law in such a modest way as to accomplish the desired effect without embarrassing the recipient of his favor.

Permit me to give you another instance of his kindness of heart. When four of us were retiring from Congressional life at the close of the Forty-fifth Congress—two from the South, one from Indiana, and myself from Missouri—he invited us to take a farewell home dinner with his family at his modest home on Capitol Hill. It was an occasion of the most genuine, unassuming hospitality, free—absolutely free—of all restraint, making each guest feel at once that he was at home with his own kith and kin; also making each one think and feel, without the least tinge of obligation to the distinguished host, then the Speaker of one of the greatest legislative bodies of the world, that the farewell dinner was a special, personal honor and a sweet souvenir of a closed political life.

It has so impressed me from that time to this, and I would rather erase from my memory all other recollections of Washington than that evening with Sam Randall.

As I read of the quiet close of his great life, with the sweet word "Mother" dwelling in love upon his lifeless lips—the first conceived and the last uttered—I with millions of others think it was in full harmony with his nature, so simple, so pure, so true to every instinct of elevated manhood, closing, as it had begun,

"With the beauty of the moonlight,
With the beauty of the starlight."

Mr. MILLS. The death of Samuel J. Randall marks an epoch in our history. For more than a quarter of a century he had been a member of this House, and for the greater part of that time a conspicuous figure in American politics. He came from the camp, where he had performed the duties of a soldier, and entered the legislative halls of the nation to perform the duties of a statesman. He entered public life at the most critical and trying period through which the country had ever passed. The apple of discord had been thrown and the purple testament of bleeding war was unrolled, and in every part of the land the people were reading the lessons which its crimsoned letters revealed.

During the continuance of the strife all eyes were fixed upon the battalions that were gathering at the bivouac or fighting and falling on the ensanguined fields. The laborious duties of the statesman, however necessary to the popular safety, attracted but little notice from the public eye. The light that was soon to be seen high above the horizon and burning with resplendent brightness was not then observed through the thick battle-clouds that darkened earth and skies. The terrible conflict ended during his second term as a member of the House. The insurgent armies were disbanded; war had "smoothed his wrinkled front." Victors and vanquished had returned to their homes, and the tardy and difficult work of restoration began. The attention of the country was now turned to the national Capitol and fixed upon the actors who were engaged on that great stage.

The fierce passions which war had fanned into flame were still sweeping like forest fires over the land. The country was divided on questions of policy affecting the treatment of the conquered people. Some of the ablest of the Republican leaders demanded that their lands should be confiscated and granted to the victorious soldiers of the Union; that the Confederate leaders should be executed; that the States which it had been asserted could not withdraw from the Union were in fact out of it and could only be brought back on such terms as Congress should prescribe; that the white people should be disfranchised and their emancipated slaves enfranchised.

A wild, reckless, and ungovernable revolutionary spirit seized and dominated the Senate and House of Representatives. Laws were passed which annihilated State governments and organized military districts on their ruins. Civil government was abrogated, courts were closed, military commissions were appointed, trial by jury was abolished, and the writ of habeas corpus was incarcerated in the same military dungeon with the vanquished. The "indestructible States" were obliterated and States were reconstructed on the foundations where they once stood, with their powers derived from the consent of emancipated slaves, and the corrupt adventurers, who had been sent among them to lead them, were chosen to fill all Government positions.

Corruption reigned supreme in all the departments of the newly instituted and reconstructed States. A vast monument of public indebtedness was raised upon the shoulders of a people already prostrated to exhaustion by war. The contagion was not confined to the reconstructed States. Every branch of the National Government was inoculated with the poison. In the midst of this stormy and starless night, Sam Randall, as he was known familiarly and called by the people, began to rise before their admiring gaze. He was seen to wear "the white flower of a blameless life." At such a time a man of his ability could have acquired an ample fortune, but he chose to live and die poor, and yet was always too rich to be bought. By his labor he could support his family in comfort, and with that he and they were content. Wealth had no spell which it could throw over him, no power that could draw his feet the ninth part of a hair from the path of integrity.

From crown to toe he was an honest man. He was honest in his thoughts, honest in his words, honest in his feelings, and honest in his desires. No man, from the beginning of the Government to the present hour, ever entered this Hall or departed from it with a purer conscience than Samuel J. Randall. When he surrendered back to his constituents the trust they had so long confided to him and when he surrendered back to his Maker the spirit that made him a living soul, he could stand at either tribunal and say like old Samuel when, after a long tenure, he was surrendering up the government of Israel, "Here I am. Witness against me. Whom have I defrauded? Whom have I oppressed? Or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith?"

It was not alone his spotless integrity that made him conspicuous at a time when corruption was widespread in all departments of government, but it was the lion-like courage and the splendid ability with which he espoused and defended the cause of the right. Like Moses, he was a born leader of men. Like Moses, he loved his own race and kindred, and he loved the laws and institutions of his people. Like Moses, he came to the rescue of his oppressed kinsmen with heart nerved and his soul consecrated from the fire of the divine presence. Like Moses, he was not fluent in speech; he was a man of deeds rather than words. He used but few words, which he aimed directly at the subject. There was something about him that attracted men to him and riveted their confidence in him. That something was what made him a leader among men. He had strong character. Every one felt its force when he was brought into contact with him. He was calm and deliberate in counsel. He was firm even to stubbornness in adherence to his opinions. No one of his lieutenants nor all of them together could make him swerve from his purpose. There was something in his blood, his brain, his nerves, and his moral structure that attracted like gravitation.

Without seeming to affect it or even to desire it, he held his party to his person, and with one exception, and only one, they followed wherever he led, and followed without a question of his ability or the wisdom of the measure he supported. On economic questions he was not in accord with his party, and the divergence gave more cause of regret to them than it did to him. I have often remonstrated with him and entreated him to concede something and keep in harmony with his party, who were ready to bestow upon him the highest honors within their gift. Again and again I have assured him of the strong hold he had on the affections of our people, and how painful it was to us to see him persist in his opposition to all the traditions and teachings of his party, and how anxious we were to put him first, above all others, as the one bright and illustrious name, the loved leader of the party of Jefferson and Jackson; but entreaties and remonstrances alike were vain. Nothing could move him from his conviction. He was like that hero of whom Horace sang:

Should nature's frame in ruins fall
And chaos o'er the sinking ball
Resume primeval sway,
His courage chance and fate defies,
Nor feels the wreck of earth and skies
Obstruct its destined way.

In the memorable struggle over the revolutionary measures of the Forty-third Congress he displayed the great qualities of leadership that made his name a household word throughout the land. It was then he showed to the world that he was master of parliamentary law. He was at the head of a minority, but little more than a third of the House, yet by his consummate skill and address he foiled every attempt of the majority to pass their bill. The majority side of the House had a large number of the ablest men in the Union, but among them all there was no match for Randall. When he stood among them he was like Saul among the chieftains of Israel, from his shoulders and upward he was higher than the tallest on the field. I can never forget, nor will the people among whom I live ever forget, that struggle or forget the man who for seventy hours stood at the post of duty to avert the blow that was aimed at their hearts.

The name of the force bill and the name of Sam Randall, the one the oppressor and the other the deliverer, are remembered and often spoken around the firesides of our Southern homes. Our people remember how they shrank with fear and trembling at the mention of the one and how their hope sprang forward at that of the other.

We will soon have before us another wanton, reckless, and revolutionary measure, more widespread and pernicious in its effects than the one of the Forty-third Congress. That measure is now being proposed and it is to be enacted to override the State governments of the South, supplant the State officers, and take charge of the ballot-box and the registration, counting, and certification of the votes of State electors. We shall miss Mr. Randall when this legislative monster enters this Hall.

On his dying bed, when he knew not that the hand of death was on him, he often expressed a hope to be fully restored to health when these measures were taken up in the House. While he could not accomplish anything where parliamentary rules were abrogated and the procedure was regulated by a sort of military order that prevents motions and amendments, and permits the majority to register their decrees without debate, yet he could make his indignant denunciations heard throughout the land and awake a slumbering public opinion to speak out in behalf of the imperiled rights of the people. But he is gone, and we must meet the enemy and fight the battle without his aid.

As a Southern man and speaking for Southern people, I say that our differences of opinion are buried in the grave with our dead friend, that we cherish in our memories and will keep perpetually green the tender recollections of his faithful friendship for us when a powerful enemy was seeking our destruction.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, Samuel J. Randall was born in the city of Philadelphia October 10, 1828. His education was academic and it was his early intention to become a merchant. Politics lured him from the ambition of his youth, and he became a member of the senate of Pennsylvania. While a senator the war broke out, and at the first call for troops by the National Government, in April, 1861, he enlisted, and on the 13th of May, 1861, he was mustered into the United States service as a private soldier of the Philadelphia City Troop to serve for ninety days.

The troop was attached to the Second Regiment United States Cavalry, commanded by Col. George H. Thomas. His service though brief was active and interesting. He was with his troop, and participated in the battle of Falling Waters, and proved himself to be a brave soldier in battle. For his conspicuous gallantry on that occasion he was promoted to orderly of the troop.

In October, 1862, he was elected a Representative in Congress from Pennsylvania. From that time until the day of his death he remained in Congress, having been successively re-elected to every Congress from the Thirty-eighth to and including the Fifty-first. I have been told by gentlemen who were in Congress when he came here that he was a very quiet member and took time in becoming accustomed to his new surroundings. He, however, early made himself efficient in committee work.

In the Forty-second Congress he became a member of the Committee on Rules. In the Forty-third Congress he led the opposition against the force bill, and its defeat was due mainly to his efforts. He made an aggressive fight. By common consent Randall became the hero of the occasion. In the Forty-fifth Congress his friends were confident that he would be made Speaker, but they were obliged to wait, and Randall became chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Before the close of that Congress the Speaker died and Randall was chosen to fill the vacancy.

His occupation of the Chair was a guaranty of an honest administration of its duties, regardless of personal consideration, and in the broad spirit of a statesman.

History will record him second to none as the presiding officer of this House, whether the standard be ability, integrity, firmness, breadth of character, or learning in parliamentary law.

When I contemplate how he stood up in the Forty-ninth and in the Fiftieth Congresses in defense of protection to American industry, I confess an admiration for his nobility of character and declare that he was a patriotic statesman of the broadest vision. Nothing could stand between him and duty.

His life was one of honor and honesty, amid great temptations. There were times in his life when his friends trembled lest he should stumble. But thanks be to Him who sits among the stars he has passed into the great hereafter without a stain upon his personal integrity.

After twenty-eight years of public service, during the most exciting time of our country's history, he died honored and beloved by all who knew him.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, in all ages and in all countries men have honored their dead and turned aside for awhile from the cares and conflicts, the duties and demands, of life to recall their virtues and triumphs, and in kind and loving language rendered to their memory tributes of respect and love.

"Death, advancing with equal and impartial step," has stricken down nine of our brothers in this House of Representatives. All had served faithfully and capably, and three of them, Samuel S. Cox, William D. Kelley, and Samuel J. Randall, because of their long membership in Congress, their great abilities, and their valuable services, ranked among the foremost men of our country. The death-roll in the Fifty-first Congress is very lengthy and memorial proceedings have almost continually reminded us that "In the midst of life we are in death." To-day we pay tribute to the memory of Samuel Jackson Randall. This desk at which I now stand was his for nearly twenty years. It recalls his devotion to duty, his fealty to principle, his brave and able efforts as a tribune of the people. Here he displayed that courage that never blanched before an adversary, that leadership which made him one of the most remarkable men of his time, that honesty which was so well known and so highly respected, and that ability which enabled him to grasp facts and achieve victories in behalf of wise and patriotic legislation.

It recalls also his genial nature, his pleasant faculty of endearing himself to all who sat around him, his unforgetful courtesy and friendship which were so often manifested to his friends and which, if I may be pardoned for a personal allusion, he showed to me so kindly when, among his last written requests, he invited me to occupy his seat at this desk. His committee-room was his workshop, and the House of Representatives was his grand forum, where he helped to form the policy of his country and helped to check encroachments on the rights of his countrymen, and I know of no other man who for twenty-eight successive years was so completely identified with the House of Representatives or who gave himself to national legislation so unceasingly and untiringly without a single abstracting pursuit.

Mr. Randall seemed to be destined to act his part in very important epochs. He was born in the midst of the great campaign which resulted in the election of Andrew Jackson as President of the United States, and in courage, energy, and devotion to duty he was a fit exemplar of the hero of the Hermitage. He was elected to Congress soon after the commencement of the Administration of Abraham Lincoln and took his seat when a terrible civil war was raging. His experience as a soldier before he entered Congress and his participation in the legislation of Congress during the war made him the true friend of Federal soldiers and the champion, when the war was over, of peace, friendship, and fraternity on honorable terms between those who had engaged in civil strife.

Nearly twenty-eight years have passed since he entered Congress, but he belonged to such a remarkable and distinguished group of men who impressed themselves so thoroughly on the legislation of those times and developed so rapidly under the excitement of the war period that the history of all of them is conspicuously interwoven.

Samuel J. Randall, Samuel S. Cox, George H. Pendleton, WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, were then on the Democratic side of the House of Representatives, and James A. Garfield, James G. Blaine, William D. Kelley, and WILLIAM ALLISON were on the Republican side. What a splendid galaxy of gallant and gifted gentlemen. All were young and prominent in the Thirty-eighth Congress. One has since been elected President of the United States, two were nominated for the Presidency but defeated, two have been formidable candidates for the nomination for President, one was Speaker of the House of Representatives for five sessions, and five of them were Senators or foreign ministers.

To-day all of the Republicans named are dead except two and all of the Democrats are dead save one, Mr. Randall being the last to receive the dreaded summons which sooner or later must come to us all. It may be said with emphasis that no man in that conspicuous array of able men excelled him in stainless character, honest purposes, pure and exalted manhood, and courageous devotion to convictions.

He was fourteen times elected by the voters of his district to represent them in the Congress of the United States and he was three times elected Speaker by his brother Representatives.

He was an accomplished parliamentarian and discharged the duties of Speaker ably and promptly and fairly. On the floor of the House of Representatives, as a debater or as a working member of committees or as leader of his party, he was conscientious and courageous, and won from his friends and political opponents the proud title of a just and honest man. When corruption was rampant in the country and lust for power threatened to be stronger than love of country, the tongue of slander never tarnished his reputation, and he died poor in purse but rich in honor and public respect.

As the unrelenting foe of extravagance and jobbery he stood between the Treasury and the men who were trying to obtain appropriations of money, and as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he saved many millions of dollars for the Government.

In defending the rights of the States against Federal encroachments Mr. Randall was at his best, and his memorable physical and intellectual battle royal in opposition to the "force bill" not only gave him a great and deserved reputation throughout the country at the time, but it will always be remembered as a great achievement in a life full of brilliant achievements. Trained in the protection school of Pennsylvania politics he was always in full sympathy with the Democratic party on every question except the tariff, and no one ever doubted his sincerity on this subject or dared to assail the integrity of his motives.

But it is not necessary that I should say more about the public life of Samuel J. Randall. His utterances are found in nearly every CONGRESSIONAL RECORD issued in the last quarter of a century, and the history of his life is a splendid compendium of national legislation during that period.

His private life was peaceful, pleasant, and happy. All that I know of it was interesting, instructive, and tender. With the weapons of worldly warfare laid aside, his home life was full of sweet cadence, and at his own hearthstone he appeared as the devoted husband, the loving father, the generous friend. It was here that he illustrated how happy and contented he could be, as he tried to do his full duty to his God, his family, his country, and his fellow-men.

Thus loving and loved our friend and brother Representative passed away. The political storm in which he was born, the trying and thrilling war scenes amid which he commenced his Congressional career, have long ago been succeeded by "ways of pleasantness and paths of peace." He lived to see, and with a master mind he helped, his country return to peace, progress, prosperity, and fraternity, and he died with the music of church bells filling his ears and the sweet word "Mother" on his lips.

We miss him and mourn for him here. His countrymen deeply deplore his death. It ameliorates the nation's loss to feel that he "fought a good fight," and died full of years and full of honors, and that history will forever record and preserve his public services. Bowing with resignation to the decree that called him away from us, I express the sincere hope that divine blessings will comfort and sustain his loved and bereaved wife and children.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it is very fitting that those who for many years had participated with Mr. Randall in the conduct of public affairs should bear witness to those manly qualities, that lofty conception of duty, and devotion thereto which entitle him to a place among the great men of his time; but it is also fitting that some who stood at greater distance from him and can dispassionately measure results should be permitted to bring their contribution to the chaplet to be woven in his praise. Of such, Mr. Speaker, I am one.

Coming to the Fiftieth Congress a new member, I met with a friendly reception that I had no right to expect from a veteran statesman like Mr. Randall. I had from him words of counsel and encouragement, and I found that he was not unwilling on occasion to take suggestion and counsel even from a new comer.

One scene, by reason of his connection with it, is ineffaceably impressed upon my memory. I recall with great distinctness the day when, in this House, Massachusetts with commendable pride made gift to the nation of the portraits in oil of those of her distinguished sons who had occupied the Speaker's chair. In words fitly spoken and with chaste and classic eloquence the presentation was made. The Speaker's chair, as it happened, was temporarily filled by an honored son of New York and of the nation, now, too, numbered among the great cloud of witnesses who testify only to the things that have been.

He whose memory we now honor, speaking, as he said, in words inspired by the occasion, moved the resolution by which the gift was accepted.

It occurred to me then that there was a peculiar appropriateness in the fact that an ex-Speaker, whose official record would compare with that of any Speaker living or dead, should voice the nation's acceptance, and it occurred to me also that the time was probably not far distant, when Pennsylvania might claim the proud right to place in the Pantheon of the nation's worthies the counterfeited presentment of Samuel J. Randall, side by side with pictures of the chosen sons of Massachusetts.

Mr. Randall's speech on that occasion was characteristic of the man and furnishes the key to his life and character. Referring to the speakership, he said:

Soon after I entered this House, now more than a quarter of a century ago, I came to consider that that office which you, sir, now temporarily hold was the highest office within the reach of an American citizen; that it was a grand official station, great in the honors which it conferred, and still greater in the ability it gave to impress upon our history and legislation the stamp of truth, fairness, justice, and right.

These, then, were the objects of his ambition—truth, fairness, justice, and right—to be enacted into law; this his estimate of the value of public place, that it furnished the opportunities for such enactment.

Will any man say that Pennsylvania's great Speaker ever swerved from his lofty conception of duty or hesitated in the task of its performance? And does not history bear witness that regardless of person or party, keeping close to the line of conscience, he faced with a dominant courage every emergency that fortune cast into his pathway?

The historic period within which his public career is bounded is the most picturesque in our national life. It includes a civil war unparalleled in kind and character in all the annals of time. In that war Mr. Randall was a soldier on the side of his country; but of this he made no parade, content that the consciousness of duty done should be his ample reward, and his fame will ultimately rest upon his achievements in this House.

Here legislative questions presented themselves, more novel and trying even than those attendant upon the early days of an experimental republic, questions involving new relations between individuals and between States, questions of finance, of taxation, and relating to new and untried conditions. The wise adjustment of these questions called for ingenuity, for courage, for the exercise of a discreet and deliberate judgment. This is not the time for their review, nor have they any place here, save as illustrating Mr. Randall's loyalty to his conviction of duty, his untiring industry, and his contribution to their wise determination.

Mr. Randall was eminently a tribune of the people. To most men distinguished in public life the House of Representatives is but a halting place on their pathway to the Senate or beyond. To this rule Pennsylvania has contributed a triumvirate of conspicuous exceptions. With pride she points to Thaddeus Stevens, William D. Kelley, and Samuel J. Randall as members of the world's select company of great commoners whose pulses beat in unison with the pulses of the people.

Mr. Randall's was a long, faithful, earnest, honest, fruitful public career. It is ended. The chapter of his life is closed. The judgment must now be pronounced from which there is no appeal. It is with us who knew him a judgment of commendation. I hazard the opinion that posterity will not reverse it, that his character will assume larger and grander proportions with the passage of time. Many men make their mark on their own time; not many leave their mark on succeeding times. Many men write their names so that their own generation may see and know them; but few carve their names, as Samuel J. Randall did, on the enduring tablets of history.

And so we leave him—his career well rounded, his life work done, the strife of this arena forgotten, all cares rolled away, all pains soothed—

Secure from worldly chances and mishaps.

Here lurks no treason; here no envy swells;
Here grow no damaged grudges; here are no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, Pennsylvania weeps over the grave of Randall, her illustrious son, but she weeps not alone.

Every State mingles her tears with those of the State that gave him birth, rocked him in her cradle, nursed him in her lap, reared him to manhood, honored him through life, and looked with unspeakable pride upon his greatness and fame, and now wreathes garlands about his imperishable name.

Pennsylvania stands with bowed head, clad in mourning as his mother, but she stands not alone in her grief, for this whole land is stricken. She is here to-day through her Representatives to speak her words of sorrow at his death, but she speaks not alone, for the Representatives of forty-one other States by sigh or voice or moistened eye speak the sorrow of a nation.

I have risen in my place as a Representative of the Old Commonwealth to testify as best I can with my feeble tongue to the love she bore for this great and grand man, and to the anguish of her soul now that he has joined the mighty host beyond the shores of Time.

I need not say Virginia never simulates love; she never feigns sorrow. She loved Randall with a devotion that knew no bounds, and her sorrow at his death is as genuine as her love was true.

She may not quickly forgive an enemy, but she never forgets a friend. Her heart may be as hard as adamant and her temper as violent as a cyclone when confronted by a foe, but a kind hand, a kind word, or a kind look softens that heart and calms that temper, and a friendly deed opens up the well-springs of her nature and they come forth gushing in torrents of gratitude. She may write wrongs deep upon the tablet of her memory, but she chisels deeper acts of justice.

In Randall she ever found a friend whose hand and heart and soul were enlisted in her defense against wrongs and in the vindication of her rights.

With her Southern sisters she stood weak and poor, bleeding from a hundred wounds, helpless to avert the dangers that threatened, powerless to ward the blows which were being aimed at her dearest interests, her material welfare, her most sacred rights, her civilization, her homes, her lares and penates.

Almost in despair, almost ready to accept what seemed to be the inevitable and to bear with heroic patience the yoke which had been made for her neck, as sudden as a flash, as quick as a sunbeam, despair gave way to hope, hope sprang into confidence; a deliverer in full armor, strong, able, and courageous, appeared in the arena—Samuel J. Randall, the man with a nerve of iron, the courage of a lion, and the wisdom of a sage. Samuel J. Randall, the born leader of men, the born enemy of tyranny, the born lover of constitutional freedom, had espoused the cause of a weak, feeble, bleeding, and defenseless people.

From that eventful moment the South took courage; her patriarchs raised their drooping heads, her young sons stepped quicker and their blood flowed freer, while the bosoms of her daughters heaved with emotions, and with uplifted eyes their lips moved in prayer and their tongues sang psalms and praises.

History records that memorable conflict on this floor when for seventy-two consecutive hours, with eyes that never slumbered and a body that never rested, this man stood like a mighty giant parrying and thrusting, contending and battling for the eternal principle of local State government until the light of victory broke and the wires heralded the glad tidings from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, and the mountains and plains, hills and dells of the South were swept by the sounds of a rejoicing people.

Mr. Speaker, it is always easy for a public man to spring into the current of popular sentiment and be carried along by the clamors of the majority, but true manhood rises in the majesty of its strength, when in the maintenance of some great principle it becomes necessary to stem the swift-gliding current of popular sentiment and face the clamors of the multitude. True heroism shines in defense of the weak and never in the crusade of the strong. True patriotism dazzles with its effulgency in the vindication of trampled rights and never in the maintenance of public wrongs.

Measured by this standard the illustrious son of Pennsylvania will ever stand in the twilight of history as the very personification of manhood, heroism, and patriotism. Our annals are replete with examples of the highest types of the man, hero, and patriot; our pages of history are bright with the deeds of those "whose names were not born to die." The youth of this land need not turn his eyes to foreign climes for the most perfect models of public virtue. He need not delve among the dusty traditions of Greece and Rome or study the records of modern Europe for patterns of the statesman and patriot.

Here, here under these skies, under this sun that, unobscured by partisan clouds, sheds its genial rays alike upon the plains of Texas and the hills of Maine; here, under theegis of our Constitution, have been born, have lived and died the grandest types and most perfect models of men; and here in this galaxy is Samuel J. Randall, from whom the boy of Virginia or Massachusetts can draw the inspirations of truth, honor, courage, fidelity, and patriotism, and learn the duty that man owes to his country.

But, Mr. Speaker, I must not trespass longer upon the time set apart for these memorial addresses. My tribute, though poor and unadorned, has at least the merit of sincerity. My heart feels more than I can express.

I am glad that I knew Samuel J. Randall personally and proud that I could call him my friend.

He is gone—

And let our future poets learn to sing
How here in his place he stood erect,
And battled always for his country's cause,
Her shrines, her Constitution, and her laws.

Virginia brings her laurel wreath to bedeck his name; upon his grave she plants her evergreens of memory, and upon the walls of her homes she will hang his image, hoping, believing that the God in whom he trusted, who "from seeming evil still educes good," has dealt the blow for wise purposes of His own.

Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise, sir, not to direct your memory back to struggles in this Hall, when the fires of sectional hate were kindled and party spirit ran high, but, in a few words, to pay tribute to what I believe to have been the predominate trait in the character of our departed friend and associate.

Samuel J. Randall was an honest man. Amid all the temptations of place and the allurements of power he kept his name and fame pure and unsullied. No doubtful scheme received his support, and his vote followed only upon careful and conscientious investigation. Devoting the best years of his manhood to his country's service, he thought only of the public good, and never of self. Holding at times the reins of extensive power, he lived the simple life of an humble citizen, and died poor in this world's goods, but rich in the affection of his colleagues and endowed with the esteem of all the people. Words grow tame as we stand in the presence of such a character and with all the freshness of such a memory yet upon us.

May his example animate us and inspire to such a performance of our duties here that when, over the cold and inanimate form of each one, the words of tender friendship are spoken, it may be truly said: "He, too, was a faithful representative of the people."

With his simplicity of life, his devotion to duty, his love of country, Samuel J. Randall would have at our hands no other monument.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, some years since an aged friend was stricken to die within the hour. Being near neighbors, my wife and myself were hurriedly summoned. On arriving, I found my friend lying upon his right side with his face toward an east window, his devoted wife and some of the younger children at the foot of the bed sobbing wildly, at the side his eldest son, convulsed with grief, kneeling with an arm over the form of his father. Passing around the foot of the bed, entering a narrow space between it and the window, I took the hand of my friend within my own, then looking into his fast-fading and dim eyes I said, "Uncle Andy, do you know me?" At once, brightly, yet almost divinely, through the eyes of the soul he answered my appeal. I have said brightly, I should have said fiercely, scintillating like diamonds "of purest ray serene," the eyes burned with electric fervor.

Never in all my life had I gazed upon and into such glorious eyes; entranced, I saw naught but his life, his intelligence, his spirit, his soul, answering to my gaze. Thus a moment passed. Then the flashing scintillations became quiet, the eye burned brightly, but quietly, the orb seemed to contract, the bright light grew smaller, weaker on force, fading, dying, is gone, a scarce-heard sigh was gently breathed, and the spirit of Uncle Andy wafted its way to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns."

The body of my late friend lay before me. The earthly tabernacle was there, but the spirit, the intelligence that dominated that body, was gone; gone never to return to earth or to again inhabit its late abiding place. Strange thought, strange idea, yet for years I have felt that I saw that imprisoned soul depart and heard its zephyr whisper of farewell.

What is death? Who can answer? That it separates the spirit from flesh all admit. That the flesh after death perishes, decays, all know, yet what of the spirit? For one, I affirm an undying conviction that it survives. I know not how nor where, but I do know that I have never thought upon death without a blind, fierce, intolerant conviction growing upon me that my soul could not enter into oblivion. It must survive. It must somewhere exist and adapt itself to its new condition and surroundings. It may be in happiness; it may be in misery; but, glorious thought, triumphant conviction, it survives, it lives, it exists. Reason as I will, as I have, I can not escape, nor would I, the everlasting belief in the eternity of the soul.

That it were possible
For one short hour to see
The souls we loved, that they might tell us
What and where they be.

A great man of a great country has died—died like a hero, in that he died at the post of duty. A man of imperial mold, Samuel J. Randall scorned dishonor, hated cant, despised hypocrisy, and loved integrity. To those he loved, gentle as a woman; to those he scorned or despised, fierce and unrelenting as a tiger. A spirit bold and untrifled as ever animated a man, he knew not fear or surrender. Given to him the conviction that he was morally right, he never yielded nor quailed. When I remember, much as he loved the Democracy, to which his whole life was dedicated, in whose service he died, that he would not abate a jot of his devotion to the cause of protection, when, badgered, hounded by every organ and every orator of tariff reform, he pursued the even tenor of his way, fighting for his idol of protection, disdaining to strike back at party friends who so frequently read him out of a party he idolized, but out of which he never went, and, it may be, in humble imitation of "the man of sorrows," never taunted or reviled his traducers, I think and believe he was the strongest yet most patient man in his convictions of political duty I have ever known.

I did not know Mr. Randall prior to the Fiftieth Congress. I shall therefore leave the questions of his lifetime service to his party, to his country, to others to speak upon, who knew him longer and more intimately than myself.

To me he was always kind-hearted and obliging. Upon his learning that I was born in the limits of his district, he ever afterward seemed to feel an especial interest in my welfare, and I recall many manifestations of the same upon divers occasions. A couple must here suffice. When ascending the Delaware River upon the occasion of the launching of the two United States steamers at Cramp's navy-yard at Philadelphia, in the summer of 1888, he sought me out upon the boat, stood by my side, warned me to look quickly, as the boat shot by the foot of Chestnut street, lest I should not see the corner nearest the spot of my birth, which he was playfully anxious I should see, which he carefully described beforehand, and then pointed out to me.

Again, in July, 1888, during the tariff debate, under the five-minute rule, I was, with whatever power and energy I possess, assailing the doctrine of protection. When my time expired, Mr. Randall sought and obtained recognition, and kindly, nay, graciously, gave his friend from Missouri his time, and permitted me to go on and assail, to my heart's content, his favorite political dogma. This recognition by the Chair and transfer of time was his last appearance in health upon the floor of Congress, save once, a day or two later, when, on July 9, he spoke a very few words, only a dozen or two, in regard to the proper rate of taxation for molasses under the then pending tariff bill.

Stern, austere it may be at times to others, to me he was uniformly kind and gracious.

Grand old man—heroic soul—making his peace with his God, surrounded by a loving family and mourning friends, he departed this life Sunday morning, April 13, 1890, poor in the goods of this world, but unpurchasably rich in an undying fame, an unsullied reputation, and a glorious memory, to which his country and his friends can ever point with unceasing pride, and bid the youth of the future emulate his career and take him for one of their great exemplars.

Let us believe, purified by long suffering, disenthralled from an infirm body, which on earth hampered his mighty soul, he is to-day in the realms of eternal space, a leader among disembodied spirits, even as he was on earth a leader among men.

God's finger touched him and he slept.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, death is a mystery unsolved by human intellect. The grave is a sealed book, and beyond the portals of the tomb lies the shadowy land of the unknown. Philosophy builds out of the aspirations of this life the theory of the immortality of the soul. Religion calls to her aid the hand-maid of faith, and teaches the doctrine of a life beyond the grave, but in the presence of this profound problem of human destiny we have only the speculations of the philosopher and the faith of the christian, for no messenger has ever returned from the shoreless sea of eternity and the grave has never revealed its secret. Therefore, in the presence of death the proudest intellect bows in reverential awe and the humblest child of earth stands with quivering lips and aching heart.

Mr. Speaker, my personal acquaintance with our honored colleague whose death we mourn and whose virtues we to-day commemorate began in the Fiftieth Congress, but for over twenty years I have been familiar with his public history. Although I was not in sympathy with the party to which he belonged, I have watched his political career with intense interest, for there is something inspiring in watching the career of a brave, honest man fighting not only his political foes, but fiercely contending with his party friends for the establishment of a policy and principle he believes to be for the interest of his people and nation.

Samuel J. Randall was elected to the Thirty-eighth Congress, and re-elected to every succeeding Congress to the present time, and died a member of this body. I am informed that during his first and second terms in Congress he seldom participated in the debates on the floor of the House, but was a hard worker in his committee-room. In the Forty-third Congress he obtained a national reputation for the strong, persistent, and successful fight he made against a powerful majority in opposition to the famous "force bill."

In the Forty-fourth Congress he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and added new laurels to his growing fame in his successful efforts in retrenchment of Government appropriations. In the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress he was elected Speaker, and was also elected Speaker of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth. His rulings as Speaker have been criticised severely, and oftentimes harshly, but no decision made by him was ever overruled by the House. He received 100 votes as the nominee for President in the Democratic convention of 1880, and in the convention of 1884, where he was not a candidate, but a strong supporter of Grover Cleveland, he received on the first ballot 170 votes.

Had he been nominated in 1880, when the friends of the silent man of destiny were sulking in their tents and the friends of the Plumed Knight of Maine were brooding over defeat, he would have commanded the confidence and support of the friends of protection in his State and nation in sufficient numbers to insure his triumphant election. Mr. Speaker, this is not the time and place to criticise and speculate upon the mistakes of a great party, but I believe that had Samuel J. Randall received the nomination of his party for President in 1880 one of the saddest chapters in the history of this nation would have been unwritten and the tragedy which resulted in Garfield's death avoided.

Mr. Speaker, Samuel J. Randall died a poor man. This statement standing alone is ordinary and commonplace; but it is not so when we remember that during his long Congressional career he occupied positions where he had only to be silent and silence would bring riches, he had only to be passive and inaction would bring wealth, and that through his long career of public life, five times appointed chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, three times elected Speaker of the House of Representatives, no stain rested upon his personal integrity, no shadow of suspicion fell upon the pure white robe of his reputation for honesty.

Mr. Speaker, in this period of our nation's history, when the wisdom of statesmanship is subordinated to the greed for riches, when the God-given genius of bright intellect pales before the glint of gold and the sparkle of diamonds, when the toga of a Senator and the robe of the tribune of the people are won and worn as the price and adornment of wealth, the rugged, honest character of Samuel J. Randall stands out as a priceless heritage, not only to his family, but to the common people of this nation.

Sir, since the beginning of this session of Congress two of its oldest and most honored members have passed away. Pennsylvania and Philadelphia have been unfortunate. William D. Kelley, "the father of the House," full of honor and of years, rich in experience and the wealth of a well cultivated intellect, after devoting his life to establishing the principles of the equality of all men before the law and protection to American industries "sleeps the sleep that knows not breaking," and before the flowers that adorned his grave faded in the sunshine and storm we were called to pay the last tribute of respect to his honored colleague, who died in the prime and vigor of a ripe manhood, the victim, as I believe, of constant and unrelenting toil for the cause of the people he loved so well.

Mr. Speaker, the memory of Samuel J. Randall will live in the hearts of the people. The simplicity of his life, the impress he has made upon the statute-books of the nation, the fearless spirit and the rugged honesty of the man will be an incentive and inspiration to the young men of our country to cherish the liberties of the people and the simple manners of the fathers of the Republic.

[Mr. COVERT withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the life of Samuel J. Randall and his services, particularly those which made him conspicuous, render an eulogium upon him in a House composed of political friends and enemies a task of extreme delicacy and much difficulty. To draw Mr. Randall as he actually was, to do justice to his life and what he said and did, to make his character truthful, articulate, and life-like, requires much sympathy with his opinions, such intense, earnest belief in those convictions which were rooted in his very soul that he who does it upon an occasion like this either falls short of what he believes is just or runs the risk of overstepping the line which marks the proprieties of such a scene.

Mr. Randall was essentially a partisan. He believed with all his heart that his political principles were true. He accepted the conclusions which severe logic required of those principles, and he followed the practical conclusion to the end. He felt that his country's interests were involved in his party's triumph. He risked himself, his fortunes, and his all upon his party's success. Not because the narrow horizon of party bounded his vision, but because he interblended his love for his country and his hopes for her glory and prosperity with the consummation of the victory of principles which he believed to be essential to that prosperity, and which alone could give to the country its glory and to free institutions their permanency and life. No man has ever appeared in American politics, except Andrew Jackson, who was so intense a partisan; and therefore when I was asked to participate in these ceremonies my inclination was at once to decline, because I feared that to do him justice might seem to be a criticism upon others.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, it is only in the frank contest of opposing opinions, only in the severe and rigorous battle of truthful and noble natures who disagree, that right is found and truth made victorious. When men uncover their hearts, when they remove the veil from their brains, so that all men may see the honest processes of their thought and behold all the emotions of the inner man, then to contest is given nobility and from party struggles are taken both hypocrisy and suspicion. If we could understand one another in these strifes, if we could see in one another's hearts that love for country is the basis of our efforts and that all we desire is to build upon that foundation what is best for that beloved country and for man, we would forgive the asperities of debate, we should be patient with disagreements on the floor, we should have toleration even for those things which we could not approve, that sprang out of a motive so good. And when I view the life of Mr. Randall, consistent, vigorous, earnest, sometimes fierce, always aggressive, I do not know how to read it aright except upon the simple and truthful explanation that he was exactly what he professed to be, a Democrat in his convictions, believing the success of his party was essential to the glory of his country.

When he came to apply those principles in practical politics in his place on this floor they bore under his leadership such fruit as he believed would follow. The nearest representative of the people is the House of Representatives, into whose keeping the Constitution has primarily deposited the right of the purse. Its supervision shall be over executive expenditures, its warrant shall be the condition precedent to executive action. This principle Mr. Randall enforced with a knowledge of detail, with an energy of will, with an aggressiveness of purpose that did not save thirty millions a year merely, for that is the very smallest item of it, but which elevated the House of Representatives to its true position in our political government, which made the House dominate the executive department, which restored to the representatives of the people the power of the purse, and for the first time in years taught all other persons in power that the House of Representatives was in fact the people of the United States and its voice was the voice that came from the ballot-box.

This was the notable triumph of Mr. Randall's life. It was a triumph which marked him as an extraordinarily great parliamentarian. That he should have acquired a knowledge of every bureau under this complex Government; that he should have measured its necessities and have correctly ascertained the needs of its expenditures, so that on the one hand all might be well done and on the other none should be extravagant; that he should force upon a party in power the measure of such reduction, and should require the Senate to agree so nearly to what he thought was wise, demonstrates a rare combination of qualities. And this strikes me as the act of Mr. Randall's life. No life ever produces one single act. It may be that there is one extraordinary transaction, one single day which under the radiance of a peculiar light stands conspicuous, but it is consistent with all that went before and all that comes afterwards. Mr. Randall had been preparing for this very emergency through many years. He had been a member of various committees. He for many sessions sat upon this floor taking part in its deliberations; he had been acquainting himself with these details; he had become familiar with this body, the most remarkable and peculiar body probably in the world; he had learned its moods, he had made himself the master of its rules, and he stood prepared, when the emergency came, for all its exigencies.

One other memorable act Mr. Randall performed, which was also in the interest of the honor and the dignity of the House. He was then the leader of its minority. A great war had ended. States were under military domination. Grave, abstruse, and troublesome questions pressed upon Congress. Taking advantage of its rules, rules framed for just such a purpose, rules meant to be in the way of unjust and hasty legislation, rules meant to give dignity to the House, rules meant for the purpose of adding power to its deliberations, Mr. Randall, as the leader of the minority, demonstrated the value of delay, the power of obstacle, the usefulness of the sober second thought. It was another elevation of the power of the representatives of the people.

It was not simply Randall standing here in his individual capacity. It was the people behind him, clothing him with their power, speaking with his utterance that voice of the minority which sometimes can make itself heard to compel pause before injustice might be done. It was the uplifted voice of a helpless people upon the floor of the greatest representative body of freemen, asking for further time to be heard. And it was through a fit person. He who had been a soldier, risking his life; he who had sprung from the loins of an educated lawyer, skilled in all the learning of liberty; he who had been a man of business, and knew how troublesome times hurt business and injured the interests of the people; he who amid times of temptation and of brazen wealth had kept poor; before whose honesty nobody dare offer a bribe and to whose integrity no man was bold enough to suggest temptation; he, standing in his place, not great probably in the learning of the schools, without the gift of persuasive eloquence, but with the sturdy courage of a free-man and the trained power of a parliamentarian, elevated the minority power of this House and gave to the people another evidence that under a true system of parliamentary rules liberty was safe, even in the hands of a small minority ably and bravely led.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to-day the thought that presses upon me is that a new era of statesmen must come to the front. The men who participated in the war are passing away. You may call them Kelley, Cox, and Randall, as typical of their day and generation; but the generation is passing away. The men who fought that war, the men who were trained before it came, the men in whose minds olden opinions and ancient traditions still have lodgment and bear fruit in utterance and in act—they are giving way to the younger men who are around us.

As we give up the scepter of command to these younger men, standing by the grave of this the most stalwart and aggressive of the parliamentarians of his party, what is the lesson that we ought to impart as we speak in this Hall this afternoon? Is it not that the liberties of the people can be preserved only by the representatives of the people in the House where their representatives stand, elected at the ballot-box, freely chosen without interference, saying to the new generation of statesmen, "Your ancestors have preserved American institutions in the House of Representatives. See to it that you do not sacrifice that House and thereby lose those institutions!" [Applause.]

MR. KERR, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I can add anything to the eulogies that have been so eloquently and impressively pronounced to-day in the hearing of this House, but as a member of the delegation from Pennsylvania I nevertheless desire to add a closing word, to drop a single tribute to the memory of Samuel Jackson Randall.

This session of Congress will ever be memorable for the number of deaths among its distinguished members. Truly, "Death loves a shining mark." Pennsylvania has lost another faithful son and the people of the land mourn the loss of one of their ablest representatives.

Mr. Randall's life, public and private, has been eloquently traced by those who preceded me, some of whom have been his intimate associates on the floor of this House for over a quarter of a century.

Mr. Randall was a man of strong convictions and very little consideration for those who were otherwise. He was an earnest, faithful, and devoted champion and defender of the people's rights, possessing a fund of common sense and sound judgment which stood him in good stead in dealing with the diversified questions which continually challenged his attention. His decisions as Speaker, his reports, official papers, and arguments on the floor of the House all bear witness of great diligence, earnest thought, profound and exhaustive knowledge of the subject he had in hand. With great intellectual qualities he had a sincerity of purpose and positive conviction which was restricted by no narrow, selfish, or partisan feelings—qualities which commanded for him the respect and confidence of all.

As a representative he consulted the people's interest as he would have consulted his own. He was brave, he was cautious, he was vigilant, he was honest. His courage and sincerity of devotion were the charms of his triumph. As a representative of the people he never sought to mislead, inflame, or deceive them, and he never trifled with their liberties, their rights, or their honor. Seldom surprised and never deluded, he was so thoroughly equipped by labor, experience, and study that he was always ready and equal to every occasion, a practical, useful, and efficient man.

The occasion on which I remember last to have seen him alive I shall never forget. It was during the debate just previous to the adoption of the present rules, a departure from well trodden paths, a reversal of the legislative engine, as it were, which created a great interest and excitement among the members of the Fifty-first Congress. It was during this time that I visited Mr. Randall. I found him, although quite weak, very much interested in the probable action of the House. Then and there I was given an insight into the wonderful power of this remarkable man such as I had never appreciated before. Removed from the passion and prejudice which seemed to control this body at that time, he nevertheless was interested, and anxious that the House should not depart from old and well established precedent.

His conversation was like that of a person inspired, and I returned to the scene of debate deeply impressed with his magnetism and irresistible power which made him such a formidable antagonist when on the floor of this House. He was an earnest partisan, but never so at the expense of his patriotism. He believed in the Democratic party as embodying the true principles of republican government. Although, during the last few years of his life he wavered between the lines of the two great parties on one single issue, he was always a Democrat. During the exciting times of the civil war and sectional strife he was as firm as a rock. During the stormy days of reconstruction he was one of the ever-present leaders of a small minority in this body and did a faithful work in helping to restore a helpless, broken, and discouraged people to peace and self-control under the Constitution.

During the season of reckless extravagance and corruption which seemed to take hold of the people with the close of the war, the character of Samuel Jackson Randall, as a public man and private citizen, was stainless. In an age of corruption, sensation, and abuse, no breath of scandal, however faint, shadowed his good name, and the records of Congress bear permanent and abundant testimony to his many battles against wanton and reckless expenditure of the people's money. A man of the people and for the people, he was always an advocate for equal rights and exact justice to all, with special privileges to none.

In a word, the full symmetry of his illustrious career, the beauty and grandeur of his character, can be found in searching the legislative annals of his country, where the impressive lessons of his great and glorious life are stamped in enduring words of truth and soberness.

What more can be said or done? No better tablet to his memory can we erect: "Typical American! Wise and revered statesman! Honored friend!" On thy tomb we lay the warmest tribute of our hearts. Monuments of stone and marble to commemorate thy life will be erected in the city thou didst love, but thy name and fame will live enshrined in the hearts of the people, in the hearts of thy countrymen, long after these have crumbled into dust.

As a fitting finale to the words that have been spoken, I can do no better than take from his own language, used by him in his eulogy on Thomas A. Hendricks. At that time true of the distinguished gentleman of Indiana, they are peculiarly true of and strikingly a reflection of the character of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania whom we mourn here to-day. He said of Mr. Hendricks:

He was the embodiment of that old Latin saying, "Mild in manner, resolute in conviction." His ways were gentle and kind, but in a matter of right or wrong he was fixed and immovable.

No seduction could allure, no terrors frighten him. To duty he was fidelity itself. He was easy of approach. He dwelt in the greatest intimacy with his neighbors. He knew the heart-beats of the people. He could not be deceived as to their wishes. His gentleness of manner won them to his presence and then his bearing, firmness, honesty, fidelity, and logic bound them to him. As he was greater than others individually by whom he was surrounded, so, too, he was always stronger than any political organization to which he was attached. He was a devoted student of the principles of our republican form of government. He anchored his hope in their preservation in their pristine integrity. He believed that our liberties were secure only when all tendency to paternal government and toward centralization was resisted and destroyed.

Loyalty to his country was the key to his whole character, for he was loyal and true in every relation in life. Against the integrity of Mr. Randall no tongue has uttered a word. His fame as an honest man is unsullied by even a suspicion. He was ever true to himself, to his honor. No temptation beguiled to venality and no dishonest dollar touched the palm of his hand.

In these times, when vice apparently yields more revenue than virtue, when fortunes are readily obtained without honest labor, and money, not merit, wins position and power, a man who lives an honest and upright life is worthy the admiration of men.

It is these virtues far more than genius that make our late colleague worthy of the highest praise this day bestowed. He has indeed left a life-account well closed, without one blot or stain to mar its fair page, in every relation of life proving himself in the highest and best sense a man. Firm and sincere in his convictions, true to his friends, liberal toward his opponents, conscientious in the discharge of every duty, a patriot and a christian, he surely deserved, and doubtless has received, the final decree of the Judge of all living, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. REILLY, and Mr. MCADOO, who are unavoidably absent to-day, intended to speak on this occasion. I hope that they, as well as others who may desire the privilege, will be permitted to print their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. In further respect to our deceased fellow-member, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that, as a further mark of respect to the memory of Samuel J. Randall, the House do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 16, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a communication from the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other inclosures in reference to the proper construction to be put upon section 3622, Revised Statutes, in relation to the rendition of accounts by disbursing officers and recommending a modification of the same; he also strongly recommends that the inclosed draught of an item for the modification of said section be incorporated in the pending Indian appropriation bill—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

UNDELIVERED PATENTS IN ARKANSAS AND MISSISSIPPI.

Communication from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a copy of the report of the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, giving an approximate estimate of the number of undelivered patents for lands in the States of Arkansas and Mississippi in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives dated April 29, 1890—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

BENJAMIN P. ROGERS VS. UNITED STATES.

Letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Benjamin P. Rogers against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported with amendments the bill of the Senate (S. 1859) providing for the acquisition of land for town sites and commercial purposes in Alaska, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 2450)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Commerce, reported with amendment the bill of the House (H. R. 8631) to create a port of entry at Eagle Pass, Tex., in lieu of Indianola, Tex., accompanied by a report (No. 2451)—to the House Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 16, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3538) for the relief of Albert H. Emery, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment to the bill and agree to the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SPOONER, Mr. HIGGINS, and Mr. WILSON of Maryland were appointed.

PUGET SOUND COLLECTION DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3163) to reorganize and establish the customs-collection district of Puget Sound.

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments made to the bill by the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House disagree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

Resolved, That the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and ask for a further conference, with instructions that the House conferees recede from the original amendment of the House.

Ordered, That Mr. E. B. TAYLOR, Mr. STEWART of Vermont, and Mr. CULBERSON of Texas be the managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment to the House amendment and agree to the conference asked by the other House.

In making that motion I wish to say a word. It has been stated, and appears to have been believed in some quarters, that the Senate amendment to the House amendment had the effect to repeal or modify the provision of the interstate-commerce law prohibiting pooling. I wish to say (I think I may safely say it for all the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, certainly for myself) that the amendment as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary had no such effect whatever, and that it is impossible for anybody who looks at the whole section as it would read amended to imagine any such thing. I think it is due to the House of Representatives and the Senate to say that.

I have seen it stated, Mr. President, in a newspaper (and that is the only way I can allude to it, and that is all that I have a right to know about it) that the Senate amendment was got through the Senate by the influence of railways and corporations, and that the Senate was given to that sort of influence, and not much else could be expected from it in that behalf. I wish to recall to the attention of the Senate that every piece of important legislation in the last ten years or more that has affected great corporations and important interests has been the work, so far as I remember, in the outset, of the Senate of the United States. The bill which brought the Pacific railroads into some sort of obedience to the laws of the United States, and some sort of sense of their obligations in respect of what was due the United States, was the work of the Senate. The interstate-commerce bill was a Senate bill, although I believe the House had a bill of the same character as well. It is, therefore, entirely unjust for anybody to say anywhere (and perhaps I dignify it a little too much by alluding to it at all) that any act of the Senate or any act of any Senator can be referred to at any time which would justify what I have seen in the newspapers.

It may be further said, Mr. President, in respect of this very amendment of the Senate, which the House of Representatives has now disagreed to and proposes to recede entirely from its own amendment and leave the bill as it passed the Senate originally, that the very force, and the only force that I have known to be exerted—and I have known of it—has been a somewhat organized and persistent and powerful effort on the part of railroad and other corporations through well-known agents and influences (well known to me) to induce simple-minded persons somewhere—I am unable to say where, of course—to defeat the Senate amendment and to mislead those persons into opposition to it by betraying them into the false position that they were defending the people in defeating an amendment which the railroads did not want; and the railroads and other corporations appear to have accomplished their purpose.

Now, if the newspapers think they are doing any public good under such a state of things, which everybody outside of the newspapers knows perfectly well, by imputing to the Senate a subserviency to railroad or corporate influence in respect to this amendment, or indeed any other, speaking particularly now of this which is up, and are not wise enough and bright enough to see that the scheme of these great corporations is brought to bear upon people who do not know any better, to fire them up with the idea that the railroads do want it and get them to vote against it, when, as I say, to my personal knowledge the exertion of very potent but ineffectual railway influence with me and with others that I know of has been tried, but it was to accomplish exactly the thing that the House of Representatives, not subservient I suppose to railroads, but hungry for the public good, has done.

I think myself that this amendment of the House was wholly unnecessary, but the original bill as it passed the Senate was adequate to cover every case over which Congress had power, and broad enough to include every case of wrongdoing of any kind of that nature. So if the House of Representatives, led or misled by railway influence, wishes to retreat from its position altogether, I do not know that I shall have any objection; but I thought it due to the Senate and to the committee to say thus much.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what section of the interstate-commerce act it is proposed by this bill to amend?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not any section.

Mr. PADDOCK. Ah!

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was an effect, it was said.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, when the trust bill, as it is called, was pending before the Judiciary Committee prior to its being reported to the Senate, I was under the impression that the bill could have been made much more effective and valuable in the direction which all of us were pursuing if an additional section had been put to it specifically attacking the practice of destroying competition in the rates of transportation as to interstate commerce. A majority of my colleagues upon that committee were under the impression that the bill without that provision was sufficiently stringent, and I yielded my opinion to theirs upon that subject. The courts must at last construe this bill, because we are entering upon a new and untried field of legislation, and I was under the impression that the courts would construe the original bill as being sufficiently effective in prohibiting those pooling arrangements by which the prices of transportation to the people at large were kept up to ruinous and dangerous rates.

When the bill went to the House of Representatives a provision was put upon it, crudely drawn, imperfect in its language, but the object of which was to strike specifically at the evil; and when it came back to the Senate I was under the impression that with a modification of that provision as to its language and structure the amendment ought to be adopted. It could not possibly, in my judgment, have done any harm, and it might have done a vast amount of good. The Committee on the Judiciary came to the conclusion that the amendment of the House was unnecessary. I was appointed one of the conferees, but was unable to agree with the other two conferees on the part of the Senate in the conclusions which were reached. I am under the impression that the following provision, which I intended, if opportunity had come, to have offered in the Senate, would strengthen the bill:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy entered into for the purpose of preventing competition in the sale or purchase of any commodity while the subject of interstate commerce, or to prevent competition in the transportation of persons or property from any State or Territory to another, or from any State or Territory to the District of Columbia, or from the District of Columbia to any State or Territory, except such contracts or agreements in regard to transportation as may be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be deemed unlawful within the meaning of this act. Nothing herein shall be deemed or held to impair the powers of the several States in respect of any of the matters in this act mentioned.

If that amendment had been placed upon the bill, in my opinion it would have put the meaning of this legislation beyond any question. It would have made a salient issue between a great evil which now exists in this country and the Congress of the United States representing the people. It goes without saying, with our knowledge of the present transportation system of the United States, that railroad companies do by combination, unlawfully, in my opinion, fix the price of rates to suit themselves, without regard to the public at large or to the consumers of the country. If our bill with all its provisions be worth anything, it is to strike down that sort of unlawful conspiracy against the people of the United States. As I said before, sir, I hope that the courts will construe the original bill as sufficient to do away with this monstrous evil, but it is certainly to be desired that Congress should be so explicit on the subject as to their intent in this legislation that there can be no question in regard to their intent.

Now, Mr. President, in regard to what has been said in another part of this Capitol as to the influence of railroads upon our legislation, to which the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of our committee, has alluded, I have this to say: As a matter of course it would be undignified and unparliamentary to indulge in recrimination in reply to such statements as these, but I can not resist the temptation of saying that within my personal knowledge one bill has passed the Senate repeatedly, a bill which simply provided for the government of a public park belonging to the people of the United States, and when that bill has gone to the House of Representatives it has been repeatedly defeated because the Senate would not agree that a railroad corporation should be permitted to construct its railroad through that park. If railroad influences be potent in this Capitol, there is a glaring and conspicuous example of the iron hand of corporations grasping the legislation of this country for their own private purposes.

I was never approached about this subject except, after the amendment of the House had been adopted, by a friend connected with a large railroad system in the United States, who objected to that amendment because he said it would prevent railroads from making legitimate rates by agreement as between themselves. My reply to him then was, and my reply now is, that there never has been known a case in which railroads ever combined except for their own benefit. It is safe to assume, without making any attack upon them, that there are no interests in this country so well provided for by the exertions of their attorneys and the influence of their wealth, by their appeals to sectional and other interests, as the railroad companies in this country. It will always be so, and it is, in my judgment, impossible that the Congress of the United States inside of the Constitution can go far enough to make any of their legislation immoderate or unjust when we are attempting to protect the interests of the people.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, and I would inquire—

Mr. BLAIR. What is the question before the Senate? Upon a conference report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the Senate still further insist upon its amendment to the amendment of the House and agree to the request for a further conference thereon. It is a privileged question. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I merely wanted to inquire if it would not be better to have the report printed. Then we can be able to see it. It is a very important matter, and I think we ought to be able to know what we are voting on, as certainly we do not now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All we are voting on now is simply to agree to the request of the House of Representatives to have further conference on the subject.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the managers of the further conference on the part of the Senate, and Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings filed by that court in the case of E. N. Fish & Co. and other causes; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PIERCE presented a resolution of Farmers' Alliance No. 21, of Guelph, N. Dak., praying for the passage of the bill known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Farmers' Alliance No. 21, of Guelph, N. Dak., praying for the passage of what is known as the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PIERCE. I present resolutions of the North Dakota Baptist Association, embracing 27 churches, convened at La Moure, N. Dak., in which they say that "we urge upon our Representatives in Congress to insist upon such Congressional enactments as will guaranty to the State of North Dakota, and every other State in the Union, the right to enforce a prohibitory law enacted by a majority vote of the people or by legislative enactment."

I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the Union Prohibitory League, the Christian Temperance League, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Chester County, Pennsylvania, praying for Federal legislation to protect State liquor laws; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CARLISLE presented the petition of Hosea W. Groome, of Des Moines, Iowa, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented additional papers to accompany Senate bill 3977, granting a pension to Henry Cook; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of W. L. Rodman Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Bedford, Mass., praying for the transfer of the revenue-cutter service to the Navy Department; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Grocers' Association, of Boston, Mass., praying for the admission of free raw sugar up to No. 16 Dutch standard, with a protection to refiners on refined grades not exceeding 1 cent a pound, and a bounty to American sugar-growers not exceeding 2 cents a pound; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, signed by Maj. Gen. Lew Wallace, praying for a speedy, complete, and accurate publication of the Official War Records of the Rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented the memorial of Barton Sewell, president of the National Smelting and Refining Company, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the imposition of a tariff duty on lead ore; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Evansville, Ind., praying for the enactment of a law limiting the hours of labor of clerks and others in first and second class post-offices to eight hours a day, with a full day's wages therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Farmers' Alliance No. 8, of Allen County, Indiana, remonstrating against the manufacture or sale of counterfeit or compound lard; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of Farmers Alliance No. 8, of Allen County, Indiana, remonstrating against dealing and gambling in agricultural and farm products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Indianapolis (Ind.) Brewing Company, remonstrating against an increase of tariff duties on hops; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of citizens of Marshall, Tex., praying that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for clerks in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Robert Estabrook, of Fond du Lac, Wis., praying to be allowed a father's pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MOODY presented petitions of citizens of Hughes, Charles Mix, Hanson, Grant, and Codington Counties, in the State of South Dakota, praying for the passage of a law making it unlawful to import intoxicating liquors into any State or Territory contrary to the laws thereof; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Weller and 68 others, citizens of Rhode Island, praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MANDERSON presented petitions of Farmers' Alliances of Birdwood, Lincoln County, Nebraska, of Phelps County, Nebraska, and of Sherman County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of the Conger lard bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of Farmers' Alliances of Birdwood, Lincoln County, Nebraska, and of Sherman County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of the Butterworth option bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of M. Tiebig & Brother and 96 others, citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for a reduction in the tariff on tobacco from the rate proposed in the McKinley bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the members of the Congregational Church of Atwater, Ohio, praying for the enactment of laws to prevent the carrying through the mails of obscene literature; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MORRILL. I present sundry petitions from Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and Vermont, praying that no duty shall be imposed upon tin. Some of these petitions do not indicate what place or State they come from. They all appear to have been sent out in obedience to the G. H. Grimm Manufacturing Company, of Hudson, Ohio. It calls the attention of maple-sugar makers, as follows:

Your interests are in danger. Will you submit to being pulled and plucked under the forms of law without uttering an earnest protest?

The petitions are sent out with printed envelopes; they are printed petitions, all alike; and returned alike.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 75 citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of a national Sunday-rest law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of 42 citizens of Horseheads, N. Y., praying for the passage of the pending tariff bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Yuma, Colo., praying for a complete system of levees on the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of Comstock, Ferre & Co., and other firms of Milford, Conn., praying for an increase of duty on seeds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PAYNE. I submit from the Committee on Foreign Relations a report on the joint resolution (S. R. 66) authorizing Commander Dennis W. Mullan, United States Navy, to accept the medal presented to him by the Chilean Government, which was under discussion on Saturday. I ask that the report and accompanying letters may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report and accompanying papers will be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 3991) for preventing adulteration and misbranding food and drugs, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by him.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3555) to increase the compensation of the assistants to the attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, and to amend section 907 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to said District, reported in with an amendment.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment offered by himself on March 24, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill concerning payment to Robert Berry, of Leadville, Colo., reported it favorably and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill (S. 4090) to relieve purchasers of and to indemnify certain States for swamp and overflowed lands disposed of, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLUMB. The adoption of this substitute by the committee renders unnecessary the further consideration of three Senate bills on the same subject, which I send to the desk, which the committee recommend be indefinitely postponed.

The following bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 673) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States;

A bill (S. 1018) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States; and

A bill (S. 1055) to relieve purchasers of and to indemnify certain States for swamp and overflowed lands disposed of, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION AND CENSUS DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Appropriations I report with amendments the bill (H. R. 10906) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions and for the expenses of the Eleventh Census for the fiscal year 1890, and for other purposes, which I ask may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Maine state whether any action is to be taken upon the various entries that are made on this bill? It seems to be written over and interlined.

Mr. HALE. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations prepared the amendments. The first is a matter of form, making the language of an appropriation more definite. The clerks at the desk will readily see what the amendment is, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks may see, but the Chair can not. The Chief Clerk will report the amendment. [A pause.] The Chief Clerk announces that he can not.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chief Clerk please send the bill to me?

[The bill was sent to Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. The form is correct in the original House bill, I see. There is no necessity for any amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought there were some amendments to the bill that had been adopted in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. On examining the bill I find the form of the House bill is correct with reference to the appropriations, and there are no amendments needed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did the chairman of the subcommittee receive any information in regard to whether the amount here appropriated will be absolutely sufficient to meet the expenditures of the current year for pensions? There was a question as to whether the amount contained in this bill would cover all actual deficiencies.

Mr. HALE. I have the letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, which was written at my request, upon the suggestion of the committee, asking that question. He states that the amount which is given here will cover all the payments that are needed for the year ending June 30, 1890, and gives the estimates and the manner in which they are arrived at.

Mr. COCKRELL. So that this will wind up the pension appropriations for the fiscal year 1890?

Mr. HALE. This will wind up the pension appropriations for the year.

Mr. COCKRELL. This being the second deficiency we have provided for, I was anxious to get the exact amount necessary to be appropriated and be done with it. Has the Senator the letter from the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. HALE. I have the letter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have it read.

Mr. HALE. I will have it inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Maine inform us what the aggregate amount of the appropriations for this fiscal year will be on account of pensions when this deficiency bill is passed?

Mr. HALE. The regular annual appropriations for this fiscal year amount to $98,427,461.

Mr. ALLISON. For next year, the Senator means.

Mr. HALE. For this year. In the urgent deficiency bill $21,613,009 were appropriated. The present bill carries the amount stated, which the Secretary will be good enough to read.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is $3,708,898.35.

Mr. HALE. Those together make the aggregate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did I understand the Senator to say that the first appropriation was $98,000,000 and then $21,000,000, and then $3,000,000?

Mr. HARRIS. That was the statement.

Mr. HALE. The first appropriation bill that was passed for the last year—I have the figures here—was $81,758,700.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the reason why I called the Senator's attention to it. He said it was $98,000,000, which would make a vast addition.

Mr. HALE. That sum included other items. The original appropriation bill was $81,758,700, and the second appropriation $21,598,834, and the present bill $3,708,898, making in all $107,066,432 and odd cents.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the aggregate in millions?

Mr. HALE. It is $107,066,432 and odd cents. The figures that I first gave, $98,000,000, do not apply to this bill. The Senator from Iowa was right in that regard.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of even date relative to the deficiency now existing in the appropriation for the payment of pensions during the current fiscal year, and in response to hand you herewith a statement prepared in this bureau and showing by a close estimate that $3,708,898.35 will be needed, and immediately, for the purpose stated.

I am of opinion that said amount will be sufficient to meet the requirements in all cases issued, and in which vouchers shall be executed during the present month, the last of the present fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
United States Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 4091) authorizing the President to appoint and retire NATHANIEL P. BANKS as a major-general in the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. I ask leave out of order to introduce in connection with that bill a petition from members of the Massachusetts Legislature. It is signed by all the senators and nearly every one of the members of the house of representatives of the Massachusetts Legislature in aid of that bill. I move it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 4092) granting an increase of pension to William J. Gregory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. POWER introduced a bill (S. 4093) to amend section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 4094) for the relief of John Sachs and Frederick Rhine; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4095) for the relief of Samuel B. Kepner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 4096) for the relief of William W. Burns; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL (for Mr. BARBOUR) introduced a bill (S. 4097) for the relief of Mrs. Agnes B. Jeter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR. Introduce a joint resolution requesting the President to invite an international conference to meet in Washington, with a view to the formation of an international alliance for the suppression of slavery and the slave trade, of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, fire-arms, and destructive substances with uncivilized peoples, and to promote the establishment of schools of common knowledge, art, and industry among them; also, to secure the disarmament of nations and the organization of international courts. I desire to address the Senate upon this joint resolution at a later time. If there be no objection, I will ask that the joint resolution be read in full and lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire introduces a joint resolution, which will be read at length the first time if there be no objection.

The joint resolution (S. R. 101) requesting the President to invite an international conference to meet in Washington, with a view to the formation of an international alliance for the suppression of slavery and the slave trade; of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, fire-arms, and destructive substances with uncivilized peoples, and to promote the establishment of schools of common knowledge, art, and industry among them; also, to secure the disarmament of nations and the organization of international courts, was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the President be requested to invite all foreign powers with whom the United States maintains diplomatic relations to designate representatives to meet with those of the United States, not exceeding ten in number, to be appointed by the President, for the purpose of holding an international conference in the city of Washington on the first Monday of February, A. D. 1891, with a view to the formation of an international alliance which shall be valid and binding upon those powers who shall ratify and agree to the same, the objects of which alliance shall be:

First. To suppress the crime of kidnapping and the slave-trade within the limits of the continent of Africa, and to destroy the traffic in the liberty of human beings and the institution of slavery in all parts of the world.

Second. To regulate and suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors and other noxious substances, and also in fire-arms, gunpowder, and the means of destruction between so-called civilized men and nations and other less civilized peoples, especially with the inhabitants of the continents of Africa, Asia, and the islands of the sea, and also to promote among them the establishment of schools of common knowledge of agricultural and mechanic industry and the arts of civilized life.

Third. To secure the reduction and, so far as possible, the disbandment of existing military and naval establishments, and to prevent the arming of nations and the waging of wars hereafter; also to promote the creation of tribunals for the trial and settlement of international controversies, and such other measures for the welfare of mankind as can be better secured by the joint efforts of nations.

Resolved further. That $100,000 are hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much thereof as may be necessary to be expended in carrying out the object of this resolution.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

REPRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask an order for the reprinting of an important bill which has been exhausted, being the bill (S. 3991) for preventing adulteration and misbranding food and drugs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reprinted, if there be no objection.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. MITCHELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3833) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations; which was ordered to be printed.

CHEROKEE COMMISSION.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the President be requested to inform the Senate whether negotiations have not been concluded by the Cherokee Commission with certain Indian tribes for the cession of lands in the Indian Territory, whereby such lands may be opened for settlement by act of Congress.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.; and

A bill (S. 2403) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Beaver Falls, in the State of Pennsylvania.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. 2548) for the relief of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city of Louisville, Ky.

JONATHAN DEAN.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that Order of Business 1496, being the bill (H. R. 2418) granting a pension to Jonathan Dean, sr., be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. There is an error about the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the bill referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin will be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

TREASURY NOTES AND SILVER BULLION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, on page 2, line 8, after the word "notes" where it occurs the second time in the line, the Committee on Finance report to strike out "shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and;" so as to read:

And such Treasury notes shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued; and such notes when held by any national-banking association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] relinquished the floor when the bill was last under consideration for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is whether or not we shall have silver bullion and a paper currency predicated thereon, or silver pure and simple "as money" as advocated by the Republican party in their Chicago platform.

Whether it shall be decided to have silver as the basis of a paper currency or silver as money in a direct form, this is a day of great victory and triumph for the representatives of Democracy in this country and for those who through good and through evil report have steadfastly maintained the money of the people. This is a day in which a compliment is paid to the legislation of 1878, known as the Bland act, greater than any that could be embodied in language. That act contained the provision that $2,000,000 worth of silver should be coined per month and gave discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury to coin $2,000,000 more, making an aggregate of four millions' worth per month.

To-day those who opposed that policy in the beginning and those who have continued in opposition thereto for many years come forward to pour their libations of praise upon the altars of the triumphant Democracy, which was the author of that bill and which has been its unyielding friend. That the world moves and that this is a land of progress was never better demonstrated than by the fact that the great leader of Republican financial policy in this country, who carried the single gold standard over two continents, should come forward in his speech to lay it down at the feet of the double standard, and to proclaim that he at last is the advocate of silver money.

Triumphant as would be the result of the policies which have been advocated by the Bland act, the Democratic Administration which retired to give way to that which is now in the ascendant receives also at the hands of the present Administration as high a compliment as could possibly be paid by one set of statesmen to another.

The Chicago platform of two years ago was an exceedingly discriminating and nicely drawn document. It proclaimed that the Republican party was in favor of the use of both gold and silver and added the words "as money," and then it added that it condemned the policy, not of the Democratic party, for it knew that the body of the Democracy could not be so condemned, but it condemned the policy of the Administration, meaning, of course, the Executive Administration, in its efforts to demonetize silver. Curiously enough, the political organization which thus denounced its rival for Executive honors stands now posing before the country in advocacy of measures of which it finds the prototype in the very recommendations of that Administration which it denounced.

SECRETARY FAIRCHILD'S RECOMMENDATION OF PAPER BASED ON BULLION.

I beg leave to read to the Senate from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of 1887, when Hon. Mr. Fairchild was the occupant of that position. In that report, on page 41 of the message and documents of 1887-'88, abridgment, Secretary Fairchild has the following:

The law should be so amended as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates against the coining value of the bullion bought and to coin only such number of dollars as he might deem expedient hereafter. This would not restrict in the least degree the use of the silver dollar as currency. The cerificates would be equally secure whether representing coined dollars lying in vaults, or representing bullion also lying in vaults, and which would be coined into dollars. The bullion should be melted into the form of very heavy bars, which could not be easily stolen or lost. In this form the silver could be easily and quickly moved and counted.

The recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury of 1887 was repeated in somewhat different language in the succeeding report of 1888, and when the Republican party convened at Chicago with those recommendations of the bullion policy, so to describe it, fresh before the country, it turned its batteries of denunciation upon it and described it as efforts to demonetize silver, and, presto, change! while the statesmen of the Republican party all over the land are coming in and giving adhesion to those doctrines of which Democracy has been the leading spirit for twelve years after the re-enfranchisement of silver, the present Administration, not to be outdone in compliments to its adversary, takes up the recommendation of the antecedent Secretary and stands before the country holding up and defending for the salvation of the nation the policy which it denounced at Chicago as "efforts to demonetize silver." The handsome thing to do, Mr. President, although it might be very embarrassing to some of the present Administration, would be to resign and to ask the country to restore the authors of these suggestions to power, that they might carry them out according to the lines which they have indicated.

RICARDO'S VIEWS OF PAPER MONEY BASED ON BULLION.

But, Mr. President, this bullion policy did not originate either with the Cleveland Administration or with the Harrison Administration. It is an old thought among the financiers of the world that bullion may perhaps be made the subject of a better currency by being developed into its paper representative than by being coined into dollars. David Ricardo advocated such a doctrine as this as long ago as 1808, and I beg leave to read a little from the Currency Proposals of D. Ricardo as contained in a volume called Silver in Europe, by S. Dana Horton, page 285. Said Ricardo in this paper:

Let the Bank of England be required by Parliament to pay (if demanded) all notes above £20, and no other, at their option, either in specie, in gold standard bars, or in foreign coin (allowance being made for the difference in its purity) at the English mint value of gold bullion, namely, 31.17s. 10d. per ounce, such payments to commence at the period recommended by the committee.

Without quoting his language in full he goes on to say that the advantage in utilizing the precious metals in bullion in this fashion would be to prevent the remelting down of coin for export to foreign nations, that unfavorable exchanges could be most speedily corrected by the transportation of bullion, that there would be no danger of abrasion of the metals by treating bullion as the basis and paper as the representative. He goes on to pay this compliment to silver:

And with a silver coinage on just such principles, we should possess the most economical and the most invariable currency in the world.

Then he adds with respect to silver as a standard of value:

The only objection to the use of silver as the standard is its bulk, which renders it unfit for the large payments required in a wealthy country; but this objection is entirely removed by the substituting of paper money as the general circulation medium of the country. Silver, too, is much more steady in its value, in consequence of its demand and supply being more regular; and as all foreign countries regulate the value of their money by the value of silver, there can be no doubt that, on the whole, silver is preferable to gold as a standard, and should be permanently adopted for that purpose.

In a note to his paper he adds:

I have already observed that silver appears to me to be the best adapted for the standard of our money. If it were made so by law, the bank should be obliged to buy or sell silver bullion only.

SILVER AND GOLD SHOULD BE TREATED ALIKE.

But there was this difference, Mr. President, in the plan recommended by Ricardo and that which is now proposed: Ricardo recommended the use of both metals alike, gold and silver, as the basis of paper currency which he suggested were alike to be treated. The trouble in this case is that you propose one system of currency by your gold and another system by your silver. You give gold the seat of honor by coining it into dollars and by permitting any particle of gold metal that comes to you from any part of the world to become a dollar. You further facilitate its use as money by permitting it to serve by certificate or paper representative.

As long as you treat one metal in that manner it is philosophical and logical and just to treat the other metal in the same manner, and it seems to be a disjointed and illogical system which will thus take one metal and place it upon a high plane of favor and then take the other metal and relegate it to a different system of finance and to one which is less calculated to appreciate that metal in value.

WAGES OF LABOR INCREASE WITH THE INCREASED PRICE OF ITS PRODUCTS.

In addition to the argument which has been made against the silver coinage, that we shall be in danger of losing gold, the only other argument which has been insisted upon in the debate—which seems to have some popular acceptance—is that contained in the queries which were put on Friday last to some of the speakers by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and which have been repeated in various forms by other advocates of the degradation of our silver money.

They ask the question, with an obvious suggestion of argument beyond it: "If it be true, as you say, that this remonetization and expansion of the silver currency will increase prices, do you not perceive that it will increase the value of everything that the laborer is to buy, and therefore have a tendency to reduce the purchasing power of his wages?"

That is a suggestion which comes to us from the other side of the Chamber; and, to take a superficial view of the question, it would seem at first glance that if you are going to increase the price of the articles which the laboring men of the country must wear and must eat and must provide for the support of their families, you would be reducing the purchasing power of their wages, and therefore, perhaps, do them to some degree an injury instead of a benefit. But to take that view of the question, Mr. President, is thoroughly superficial. These productions which will rise in price—what are they? They are the products of that labor; and, as the result of his day's work, should the price of cotton and of manufactured fabrics rise, the laborer will find in his workshop or in his field as the result of his daily labor a larger addition to the wealth of the country. As these productions are the fruits of labor and will increase immensely in value by the expansion of your currency to meet the demands of the country, you are driven to the horns of this dilemma: Either you must contend that the enhancement of the prices of the fruits of labor does not increase wages, or you must acknowledge that with the rise of prices by the expansion of silver there will be a great addition to the fruits of labor, and a greater opportunity to reward labor out of them.

It is very curious, indeed, to see the leaders of a great political party changing front, turning coat, renouncing the doctrines upon which they proclaim for a protective tariff and apply the very opposite of the teachings which they have sought to impress upon the country to prevent the establishment of laws which will be for the benefit of the whole population. There is scarcely a Senator upon the other side of the Chamber who has not talked in his writings and in his speeches that just in proportion as you increase the price of the fruits of labor so you will increase the wages of labor. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] have been the champions of that doctrine. What do they mean when they change front and march to the rear and ask their Democratic colleagues the question, if they do not see that they are going to injure labor by increasing the price of its products?

Let it hurt whom it may, let it stand in the way of any doctrine which may be advocated, it must be evident that the increase in price of the products of labor does have a tendency at least to increase the wages of labor; and the opponents of a restrictive prohibitive high Chinese tariff do not oppose it upon the ground alone that there is no tendency from the increase of price to the increase of wages, but upon the proposition that this increase of price which you aim to protect by a Chinese tariff is first taken out of labor before it is given back to it. That does not apply in the case where you appreciate the prices of all the products of the land, not by giving a bonus to this man or a bonus to that one, but by that natural accretion of values which flows from the general health and prosperity of the whole country.

HOW OUR AMERICAN WHEAT MARKET HAS BEEN INJURED AND THE INDIA WHEAT MARKET BUILT UP.

I will illustrate this proposition by presenting to the Senate a table which was kindly prepared for me by a statistician of distinction. I refer to Mr. Ivan C. Michels, who has carefully stated in two tables which I shall insert in my remarks the production, the farm value, and the export value of wheat from India for a series of years, beginning in 1873 and winding up in 1889. The associated table which goes with this one is a like statement of the production, farm value, and export value of the wheat of the United States exported to foreign nations:

That table, Mr. President, tells its own story, and it serves as an illustration of the proposition which I have enunciated. In 1873, when silver was demonetized, India was producing 142,000,000 bushels of wheat, in round numbers, and exporting 735,000. In 1889 so greatly had the production of wheat in that country been stimulated by the degradation of our silver currency that India had added to her exports of wheat 100,000,000 bushels and it had grown to 243,000,000, an addition of 1,000,000, and the exports had risen to 42,000,000, while on the other hand you will perceive that just as India has gained in that race the United States have lost.

I have not time, for I do not wish to consume any greater length of time than is necessary, to comment upon all the totals of that paper, but any intelligent man can peruse its figures and see exactly where the fatal blow has been struck against the agricultural interests of this country. You will see also from that table that it is not overproduction that the United States is suffering from, if at all. We built up this Eastern market from India to England and to Europe. There was a market for our surplus. It is by destroying the market for our surplus and lowering the price, and not because that surplus ought not to have been produced, that the farming population of this country have suffered such great losses.

THE WINDOW PLAN.

Mr. President, there are several plans before the Senate for dealing with silver. The first plan is that suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, of which I present a brief analysis:

1. Issue Treasury notes against deposits of silver bullion in the Government vaults.
2. At the market price of bullion when it is deposited.
3. Payable on demand in such quantity of silver bullion as will equal in value at the date of presentation the face value of the note at the price of silver then.
4. Or payable in gold at the option of the Government.
5. Or payable in silver dollars at the option of the holder.
6. Repeal the compulsory feature of the present coinage act.
7. The Secretary to have power to suspend temporarily the receipt of silver bullion for payment in Treasury notes.

THE SUBSTITUTE PRESENTED BY THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE FOR THE WINDOW PLAN.

A substitute was presented for that plan, which is known as the Jones bill, an analysis of which I also beg leave to present. This substitute treats gold and silver exactly alike, and provides for Treasury notes based upon the bullion which is hypothecated for their issue.

Its provisions are:

1. The Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $4,500,000 worth of silver bullion per month.
 2. At the price not exceeding $1 for 371½ grains pure silver.
 3. Also, to purchase gold bullion at not exceeding $1 for 23.22 grains of pure gold.
 4. Treasury notes to be issued on payment.
 5. Treasury notes to be redeemable on demand, "in lawful money of the United States."
 6. When redeemed the Treasury notes to be canceled.
 7. The Treasury notes to be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.
 8. The Treasury notes may be counted as part of the national-bank reserve.
 9. Secretary to coin silver or gold bullion as may be necessary to redeem Treasury notes.
 10. Act of February 28, 1878, is repealed.
- This substitute does not make the Treasury notes legal tender.

THE HOUSE BILL 5381 NOW BEFORE THE SENATE.

The third plan is that which appears before us in House bill 5381. That provides for—

1. Purchase per month by the Secretary of the Treasury of $4,500,000 worth of silver bullion at the market price.
 2. The price not to exceed $1 for 371.25 grains pure silver.
 3. Treasury notes are to be issued in payment in denominations of not less than $1 nor more than $1,000.
 4. These notes are redeemable in coin.
 5. They may be reissued when redeemed.
 6. They are legal tender for all debts, public and private.
 7. They are receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.
 8. They may be part of the national-bank reserve.
 9. The Secretary of the Treasury may exchange for such Treasury notes an amount of silver bullion equal in value at market price.
 10. The Secretary shall coin enough silver bullion to redeem the Treasury notes.
 11. When silver bullion reaches par it may be freely coined.
- The differences between this substitute and what is known as the Jones bill are that it makes the Treasury notes legal tender; that it authorizes the redemption of the Treasury notes in bullion instead of in silver dollars, and that it authorizes free silver coinage when silver shall come to par.

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE TO HOUSE BILL.

The Senate Finance Committee has presented certain amendments to this House bill. It strikes out the provision in section 2 that Treasury notes shall be a legal tender. I had thought at first that it was necessary to have these notes as legal tender, but I do not see that it is at all indispensable that they should be, in the light of the fact that the dollar or its equivalent is in the Treasury, can be obtained on demand, and that it is a legal tender; still it is best to make them legal tender.

The Finance Committee also recommends the striking out of the bullion-redemption feature. That seems to me entirely wise, and, indeed, indispensable to the building up of the value of silver and to the establishment of a sound currency. It has been very well shown in one of the speeches made upon this subject that if you allow the bullion to be put in the Treasury, the Treasury notes issued for it, and then the Treasury notes to be carried back and bullion to be issued for them, the same quantity of bullion may flow to and fro for an indefinite time and extent, and that there will be no absolute assurance of the extension and expansion of your currency.

It also strikes out the free coinage of silver when silver shall come to par. It seems to me that this is a very unwise and unsuitable provision. It has always been contended that silver ought to be freely coined when it shall come to par, and it is curious that when we are taking measures to bring it to par a clause should be stricken out of the bill which authorizes free coinage when that "consummation, most devoutly to be wished," has been attained.

This bill also provides that at the end of five years its operations shall cease. I can not see any need at the present time for a provision that we shall at any particular future day reverse a policy which we are now inaugurating. It may be that at the end of five years such a thing would be wise, and it may be that it would not be wise, and how can we undertake at the present time to forecast so long a track of years, especially as the currents of our financial history have taken an erratic course unexpected by our finance ministers? Why should we undertake to anticipate so long a track of time and announce a policy which might then be unwise and fatal?

RECENT MOVEMENTS OF GOLD.

Mr. President, I was asked the question on Friday afternoon by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] how the balances between our country and foreign nations were to be paid. The balances are paid in exchanges or in the movement of the metals. I have before me the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1889, in which will be found a trace of the amount of gold moving from this country to other nations. On page 123 of his last report it will be seen that when a little flurry took place in the movements of gold and $61,000,000 of gold left this country for Europe in 1888, $27,000,000 went to France, $18,000,000 to England, and $15,000,000 to Germany. This temporary flurry in the movement of our precious metals is, however, explained in large degree by the Secretary of the Treasury and in such a manner as to indicate that we should not apprehend any permanent current of gold to foreign nations.

As a matter of fact—

He says—

As a matter of fact, most of the gold which recently left this country went to France. In addition to the amount directly consigned to France ($27,692,853), it is well known that the Bank of France received, during this period, large sums of gold from the United States consigned to London.

So that to France, which uses both gold and silver, and not to Germany or England, did this movement of gold take place, and it is largely explained by the further remark of the Secretary of the Treasury:

It is estimated—

He says—

It is estimated that some 120,000 people from the United States visited Paris during the exposition, and nearly all of them have carried with them bills of credit which necessitated settlement by New York bankers with their London and Paris correspondents.

So that this temporary shifting of the balance of trade against our country, this temporary movement of gold to Europe, seems to have been one of those transient things caused largely by the French Exposition and not arising from any derangement of our system or from any fixed tendency of American wealth to flow abroad; but now, as we stand on the eve of the great American Exposition of 1892, we are just at a time when this gold which went abroad then will be coming back to us, and in any forecast which we may make of the early future of our country there is nothing in the permanent condition of our affairs or in those temporary changes which may occur, from which we may anticipate anything but a continuous flow of immigration, wealth, and money to our country.

THE DUTY OF CONGRESS TO PROVIDE MONEY—HOW THE STATE BANKS CAME TO HELP THE COUNTRY.

Mr. President, there is a peculiar obligation upon the Congress of the United States to respond to the popular demand for the increase in the volume of currency, a peculiar obligation greater than that which existed in earlier periods of our country. In the year 1861, when this nation stood upon the eve of an appalling catastrophe, it was not gold, it was not the national banks, it was not your legal-tender currency, it was not any resource of the Federal Government, which came to the rescue of the imperiled institutions which, as you conceived, were then demanding defense. It was the State banks of this country, the local financial institutions which had sprung up in the bosoms of the people, and which had been so perfected as to respond to popular wants and meet popular necessities, that held out the first hand of salvation to a nation in sorest need.

Mr. President, at that time there were no less than $238,000,000 of State-bank notes in circulation, an amount equal to two-thirds of what now constitutes your entire legal-tender paper currency. In other words, 30,000,000 people, without assistance from the Federal Government, had built up in their own midst institutions of finance which spread broadcast over this land $238,000,000 of domestic money, and which carried the facilities of commerce and exchange as King Alfred carried justice to every man's door.

It became necessary according to the views of the financiers of this nation to strike down these domestic institutions, and they did it, and I do not propose now to criticize that action because that is not essential to the trend of the argument which I am making. They thought it necessary to destroy the State banking institutions in order to build up the great national banks.

HOW THE NATIONAL BANKS DESTROYED THE STATE BANKS.

Now, I have a table here which I take from a work called Gold and Debt, which gives the amount of national-bank and of State notes in circulation for a series of years, beginning in 1854 and winding up in 1876. I shall insert this table in my remarks, but without now reading every figure of it I beg leave to make this comment upon it.

Up to 1863 there were no national-bank notes, but there were, however, $238,671,210 in State-bank notes. In 1863 the national-bank act passed. The next year there were $66,769,375 in national-bank notes. In 1866 there were $213,239,530 of national-bank notes, and so on up to 1873, at the time when silver was demonetized, there were then in circulation $336,259,287 of national-bank notes, and the State banks, then in the very last gasp, had a circulation of $1,511,396 alone left. I append a table showing the national and State bank notes in circulation during various years. The flickering taper was then totally extinguished in 1894 and your State institutions perished while the national bank took its great position in the financial concerns of our country.

Here is the table:

* National-bank act passed.

† No later report.

The mission of the national banks, as it seems to be generally thought and as the proposed legislation would indicate, is now about ended. The war is over; we are returning to normal conditions of peace, and we are seeking to lay the foundation of a financial system guarded on every hand, which shall attend this nation through a long period of time of peaceful prosperity.

AGRICULTURE SUSTAINS OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE AND HAS A RIGHT TO A CURRENCY THAT WILL SUSTAIN IT.

Now that this system which was built upon the ruins of the State banks is going out, and as a substitute which was adopted for them is passing from existence; now, too, that you have destroyed the sovereignty of the States with respect to their local currency, with redoubled force and emphasis is cast upon you the obligation to furnish to the people such medium of exchange as they demand and as their necessity calls for. There seems to pervade the halls of statesmanship, and especially the halls of great bankers, the idea that the people must not be trusted in their ideas of finance; that we must send for some accomplished experts of foreign nations or some scholars from the closet before we seek to do anything with financial concerns, and the hardy yeomanry of the country and their representatives who come to Congress are not to be listened to when they give their views as to what ought to be done about the policy of the country of which they are the supporters.

The apprehensions which have been put before the Senate that our farmers and laboring men will get a cheaper dollar are apprehensions which have never arisen in their minds, and for which they are indebted to that class which has no community of interest with them. If they are going to get a cheaper dollar by this policy and want the cheaper dollar, why shall they not have the right to it? They are the men who to-day are producing that portion of the wealth of this country which enables it to hold up its head amongst the nations of the earth. When you look to your balance of trade and your foreign exports, you find that the farmers of the West and of the South are contributing each year to the wealth of this nation by exporting $532,000,000 of all that you export, the equal of 72 per cent., and you find that the manufacturers, whose representatives on the other hand are generally clamorous against this policy, only export to foreign nations 18 per cent.

If, then, it should be a cheaper dollar, why is it that those who will receive so little of it in proportion to what the others will receive should be the ones to make objection, while those who will receive it do not make the objection? It is because these same farmers and producers who are sustaining the balance of trade with foreign nations know that they are not going to get a cheaper dollar. They not only know that they are not going to get a cheaper dollar by the light of experience which falls upon this picture from twelve years of your history, but they also know that they are going to get more dollars, and therefore it is to-day that they stand here in almost solid phalanx, from the West and the South and from the agricultural regions of the North, asking you to expand their currency and allow them to have more money, and the representatives of other interests who do not sustain our balance of trade with foreign nations seem to be greatly alarmed with a foreign commerce in which they take proportionately so insignificant a part, and wish to impose their devices and their policy upon interests with which they do not develop any hearty sympathy and with which they have no immediate community.

Mr. President, I had intended to allude further to some circumstances in respect to the history of silver, but seeing that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is not in his seat, as it relates to the remarks made by him, I shall omit that. On Friday afternoon I did make allusion to our financial history, expecting that probably the Senator from Ohio would come in on that afternoon, or at least that he would be here at some time before my remarks were closed. I do not deem it necessary, however, to repeat what has been so often shown respecting the history of the demonetization of silver and what may be said to have passed into the common and familiar history of our country. I will let that go, and simply conclude my remarks to-day by saying, as I began, that I believe the absolute free coinage of silver is the only safe and proper exit out of this problem, and that if it be not safe, that can only be shown by what is to a degree an experiment. But that experiment can be made without peril, as we should have ample time to correct any evil tendency, if it should be developed, before harm would happen, and it is an experiment necessitated by the demand of the times and by the disordered system of our finances into which the country has been thrown.

I shall not detain the Senate longer. So far as I am concerned, I leave the subject with these remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 2, line 8, after the word "notes" where it occurs the second time, the Committee on Finance report to strike out the words "shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and;" so as to make the clause read:

But no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion then held in the Treasury purchased by such notes; and such Treasury notes shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in section 2 the provision is:

But no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion then held in the Treasury purchased by such notes.

If any considerable amount or if any amount is coined, which may be under this bill, there will be from Treasury notes by the amount of the coin—

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is only coin for redemption.

Mr. TELLER. It must be coined before it is redeemed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But suppose they coin it and do not redeem?

Mr. TELLER. Then it should say "no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion and coin then held, the result of the purchase by such notes."

Mr. ALDRICH. That would not do, for the reason that there might be a double set of notes out as against coin. Under the provisions of law certificates are issued against coin, and if notes were also issued you would have $2 in paper outstanding as against $1 of silver in the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose they should issue $10,000,000 of Treasury notes for that amount of bullion and then they should coin preparatory to the redemption (because they must have some coin on hand with which to redeem) a million, under the wording of this, there could be but $9,000,000 of certificates out. It would be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury then to call in $1,000,000. That is not what anybody wants. What is wanted is that there shall be no more certificates out than the bullion and coin made from the bullion purchased for those certificates. Therefore, if we should insert after the word "bullion," in line 7, section 2, the words "and coin," and after the word "Treasury," in the same line, insert "the result of the purchase by such notes," it would be just what I think everybody intends. Therefore I move, after the word "bullion," in line 7, to insert the words "and coin"—

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, is it not the ordinary course to agree upon the committee amendments or disagree upon them first?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the customary method in these cases is to consider the committee amendments, which are open to amendment as they proceed, and after those have been considered and disposed of, to then move additional amendments to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the Senate proceeding with the amendments proposed by the Finance Committee. I will move that amendment when the proper time comes.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, my occupations have been such for the last three weeks or a month that I have not been able to give close attention to the debate upon this bill; but inasmuch as we are about to vote on it and the amendments offered to it, I desire to make a few observations respecting the votes I shall give.

The House bill, which is now as I understand the pending measure, all other bills and amendments having passed away, is substantially the bill proposed by the Finance Committee when it made its report originally to the Senate, with the exception that the House of Representatives has added a provision redeeming in bullion and a provision relating to free coinage after it shall appear that the bullion price of the dollar is equal to 371½ grains of pure silver. These, as I understand, are the two vital amendments which have been made to the bill as originally proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Inasmuch as I assented to the original report, I desire to say in the beginning of my observations that I expect to support that report substantially, as I believe it is the wisest and, on the whole, the best present solution of this question; and I wish to say just at this moment, as I see the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is giving me his attention, that one criticism made by him in the debate the other day, I think, is a proper criticism as respects the phraseology of one section of the bill. He stated that under it the Secretary of the Treasury might coin fractional silver. As the bill was originally reported from the Committee on Finance it not only included silver bullion but it also included gold bullion, and, therefore, the phraseology applied to both gold and silver, and under that phraseology nothing but standard legal-tender coin could be made. But now, inasmuch as by both the Senate bill and the House bill the provisions respecting gold have been eliminated, I believe with him that, in order to make it clear, we should incorporate in this bill the words "shall be coined into standard dollars."

This subject having been referred to the Committee on Finance for the second time, the committee report back two amendments to the House bill, one striking out section 6 of the bill, which relates to free coinage after a certain period, and one inserting at the end of the bill a provision requiring that the provisions of this act shall terminate at the expiration of ten years. I shall support the Senate committee provision respecting the sixth section, but I will not support the provision respecting the limitation. I regard that limitation as unnecessary and as impairing the efficiency of this bill. I do not believe that this bill will last ten years or anything approaching ten years.

I have agreed to this report upon two grounds: First, that it is necessary to increase the currency under the present exigency and situation. That necessity comes from the fact, first, that the United States has taken entire hold and control of the paper money of our country by our legislation, and, I believe, by the accepted public policy of both political parties there is no disposition anywhere to allow to be relegated to the States the power to issue paper money. Therefore, having taken under our control and disposition the entire question of the paper money of our country, it is our duty as legislators to provide a reasonable supply of that currency. That supply was originally made in 1875 or 1876 by the absolute free banking system then proposed under our national banking laws. But by the payment of the public debt this national banking system is gradually fading away, and public opinion seems so strong against its reinstatement that bills introduced here and in the other Chamber looking to the re-establishment of the national banks upon a different security than United States bonds seem to have met no favor.

Then the question for us to consider is, what is it that we can safely substitute for this fast fading away currency? Evidently the public opinion of our country favors that the Government itself shall in some form issue its currency. There have been various projects respecting how that currency should be issued by the Government. One has been that it should be issued upon land, another upon mortgages, and various devices have been proposed; but the judgment of the Committee on Finance, and I believe the general judgment of the Senate, is that if we shall issue paper currency we should issue it upon something that is in and of itself convertible into legal-tender money. Therefore it is that this bill proceeds upon the idea that whatever paper money shall be issued shall be issued upon silver bullion purchased by the Government in the markets of the world at the market price.

Now, why is it that silver bullion has been selected as the basis for this new paper money that we propose to issue? It is because the public mind rests in the belief that sooner or later this silver bullion will be coined into disks or dollars, and that they will become a part of the metallic money of our currency. It is upon that basis that I vote for this bill; it is upon that basis that I am willing that we shall cease the coinage of silver dollars as the law now provides for, and store this bullion, issuing upon it paper money in lieu of the certificates now issued upon the coined dollar.

One object of this bill, by its promoters I am sure, is to get rid of practically the compulsory feature of the present law. There are, as is well known, two or three varying opinions upon this subject. There are people who believe that these coined dollars are useless dollars in the Treasury, and that it is a wise public policy to cease their coinage. For one, I do not share that belief. I believe that it is just as well for us to continue the coinage of these dollars, and to continue them to the utmost limit of four millions a month under the existing law, as it is to have the bullion security as provided for in this bill.

But there is a large public opinion that is against this view, and therefore, for one, I consent that the bullion shall be left in the Treasury uncoined, and I do so the more readily for the reason that in my belief (though in this I may be mistaken, but I honestly entertain the belief) we shall sooner or later, and I think very soon, be compelled to change the number of grains of silver in our dollar; and therefore whatever we have coined now will be recoined again; and on that account I am willing that this bullion shall lie in the Treasury until we shall know whether or not we can secure a community of nations who are willing to coin silver at an agreed ratio.

It is true that this bill provides that the bullion in the Treasury may be coined for the redemption of the Treasury notes which are to be issued under it, and whatever the opinions of other Senators may be in respect to this, I do not labor under the delusion that in the near future, under the provisions of this House bill or of our Senate bill, any additional silver coin will be issued. There are over 300,000,000 of these coined dollars now in the Treasury. The Treasury has issued against them silver certificates, so that although these dollars belong practically to the holders of the certificates, they are payable for public dues, and when received into the Treasury they belong to the Government of the United States. So the Government of the United States will always have a working balance, in my belief, sufficient to redeem these Treasury notes, especially if they are made a legal tender, without the coining of a single dollar under this bill. Hence I am not deceived in this respect.

Sir, I believe that the only safe way to rehabilitate silver is to secure a concurrent agreement among the nations of Europe that they will open their mints concurrently to the free coinage of silver at an agreed ratio. So believing, I am willing to go on as we are going on now, tentatively as it were, with a provision for the use of silver pending negotiations which are or ought to be had for the restoration of silver upon some agreed ratio by the nations of the world.

Mr. President, in supporting this bill, I am supporting it upon the basic idea that this Government of ours will use its power, whatever it has, in endeavoring to secure an agreement whereby all the commercial nations of the world will use silver as they use gold, at a fixed ratio to be agreed upon. Therefore it is that I am quite willing that this bullion shall be held in the Treasury until such an agreement is made, because I believe that the large number of silver dollars which we have now, and the large amount of gold coin which is in our country, and which under this bill can not go out of the country and will not go out of the country unless there is an unfavorable balance of trade—and, of course, when that goes, anything we have, whether it be gold or silver, will go; and if we had no silver at all, with an unfavorable balance of trade against us, the gold would go, but if we had a thousand millions of silver, that which would be most profitable would go, whether gold or silver, with an unfavorable balance of trade—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which would be the most unprofitable?

Mr. ALLISON. That would depend upon circumstances. We export now more silver than we do gold. Therefore it is more profitable to export silver than gold, year by year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But does the Senator think, if I do not interrupt him—

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator think that when the case came that he has mentioned of an unfavorable balance of trade according to what light he now has, silver would go and gold would stay, or gold go and silver stay?

Mr. ALLISON. "Under the light I have." Does the Senator mean under the legislation proposed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, but according to the opinion of the Senator, acquainted with public affairs and the operation of business all over the world?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe under the existing condition of things, in case of an unfavorable balance of trade, that as between gold and silver, such as we have in our country now, gold would go and silver would go. Gold being more desirable would go undoubtedly first, or perhaps in greater quantities, but if that balance of trade was against us in China or in India, the silver might go.

But that is apart from what I am arguing. I am making the statement that under the provisions of this bill we are in no more serious condition as respects the exportation of gold than we are now. That is the argument I make. I am not arguing the general question.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask if it is not true, now that we have the balance of trade in our favor with gold-using countries of at least $200,000,000, and if we have not had the balance of trade with gold-using nations in our favor for a great many years, that our balance of trade is always against silver-using countries, and not gold-using countries.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that. Of course I did not intend to go into that detail. The balance of trade is in our favor in the gold-using countries.

Now, then, Mr. President, such being the situation, I regard this legislation as a practical continuance and enlargement of the legislation of 1878, and that is all it is. The Senators and the men who upheld that legislation of 1878 now come and say that they are willing not only to take the extreme limit then fixed, of $4,000,000 a month, but they are willing to enlarge that to $4,500,000 a month. Therefore, I regard this legislation and the unanimity with which it is proposed as a complete justification of the legislation of 1878, which contemplated a minimum coinage of 2,000,000 and a maximum coinage of 4,000,000 per month of silver dollars.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understand the Senator to give as one of the reasons why he supports this bill that it may lead to some international arrangements upon the question of silver. I ask him whether he thinks that the prospect of an international arrangement will be promoted by a law which he proposes to pass demonetizing silver?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. EUSTIS. And in that connection will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact—

Mr. ALLISON. I want to be as brief as I can. Of course the Senator knows that we have an arrangement about taking the vote.

Mr. EUSTIS. It will not take me a minute to state my question. The view the Senator presents was the view which the Republican party took in its platform—

Mr. ALLISON. I can not go into the Republican platform now. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] exhausted that subject. I do not want to do that. The Senator from Louisiana will excuse me.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is what the party said.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me to say a word—

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa seems to be under the impression that he has got to close his speech briefly, according to the arrangement which has been made. I do not think anybody is going to object to the extension of the time for taking the vote. There are at least two more speeches that I know of which are to be made. I am not going to make one myself, but there are two, and I think, perhaps, there is still another Senator who desires to speak before we shall be prepared to vote upon these amendments, and I think the Senator may as well go on with the feeling that we are going to extend the time.

Mr. ALLISON. Senators will see how difficult it is for me to subject myself to interruptions when, under the unanimous agreement of the Senate, I have only a few minutes remaining.

Mr. EUSTIS. With the consent of the Senator, I asked him a question to which I should like to have an answer.

Mr. ALLISON. Respecting demonetization?

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no demonetization of silver in this bill as it stands. The relations as respects the coinage of silver are in this bill as they were in the bill of 1878, except that it is provided that a half million of bullion more shall be purchased monthly than under the law of 1878. Therefore, there is nothing that can be used abroad or anywhere to say that we are demonetizing silver; per contra, this very bill will disclose to foreign nations that we are holding silver bullion in increasing quantities, taking our share of that responsibility during the intervening years when we hope to secure the open mintage of silver as of gold. Therefore it is that we can say to foreign countries, "Under the provisions of this bill we have suspended practically the coinage of the dollar of 16 to 1 in order that we may agree with you as to the dollar which shall circulate throughout the commercial nations of the world."

That is my theory as respects this bill, that we are simply putting ourselves in the attitude of waiting to see whether or not we can secure the complete rehabilitation and restoration of silver. When I so act I feel that I am acting not only in the interest of silver, but that I am acting in the interest of all the people of the world who believe as I do, that the affairs of this world can not be conducted upon the single basis of gold; and the war and the contest to-day, as the Senator from Louisiana well knows, is between those who seek to destroy and outlaw silver and those who seek to place it upon an equality with gold. That is the contest; and I am for the full and complete restoration of silver as one of the coined metals of the world, and therefore I propose to do whatever I can do to promote that most desirable object.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understood the Senator to state distinctly that it was his belief that if this bill was passed not a dollar of silver money would be coined. Now, I ask him whether it is not the demonetization of silver to pass a law which does not require or necessitate the coinage of a silver dollar. If that is not demonetization of silver what is demonetization?

Mr. ALLISON. This bill expressly provides for the coinage of silver.

Mr. EUSTIS. But it repeals the only law which requires the coinage of the silver dollar.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated that I believed that for a few years under the operation of this bill, if it shall become a law, no silver will be coined.

Mr. STEWART. Then I should like to ask the Senator in what way we shall redeem the Treasury notes.

Mr. ALLISON. In gold or silver either. I do not choose to go into that subject now. That is a mere opinion of mine.

Now, Mr. President, these are the provisions which, as I understand, have been adopted by the Committee on Finance as respects this question. There is but one thing confronting us, as I understand, as an alternative proposition, and that is, that now, without delay and without circumspection and without limitation, we shall proceed to the free and unlimited coinage of silver. While I have sympathy with that idea, and whilst I would be glad to vote for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, entertaining the views that I do upon this subject I can not cast such a vote at this time or at any time in the near future in the interest of silver until we have exhausted every effort to secure the unlimited use of silver by the other commercial nations of the world.

Now, it is said by the promoters of free coinage that we can enter upon that alone without limitation, unaided by any other country in the world. If I so believed, I would vote for free coinage, but I think all history discloses the fallacy of that possibility. Nothing better discloses it than our own history of coinage, beginning in 1792.

It is a matter just as well known as the multiplication table that in 1834 we had no gold in this country. There was not a million dollars of gold coin in the United States when the statute of 1834 was passed. I have not freshened my memory on that question, but the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] the other day read an extract from a speech I made some years ago when I did examine the question. Yet we had free coinage of gold all the time at the ratio of 15 to 1.

Why was it that the gold went out of the country between 1792 and 1834? Why was it that we had an inundation of silver from every silver-producing country in the world between 1792 and 1834? It was because we had fixed a ratio as between gold and silver that was not the ratio fixed by the law of the commercial nations of the world, and therefore our gold went out and silver came in and remained here.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him how much silver was coined at that time, or how much we had coined when our mints were open to silver at 15 to 1?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not state it accurately, but it will be remembered that by the act of 1792 and the acts following it closely all the coinage of silver was a full legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private. Therefore the half-dollars and the quarter-dollars were as much a legal tender for a million dollars as they were for five dollars; and although we suspended practically very soon the coinage of the dollar—that is to say, but very few dollars were coined—yet the half-dollars were coined by the million and the hundred million nearly, and those half-dollars were piled up in bank vaults as security for circulating notes. They were a full legal tender in the payment of debts, and of these coins we coined between 1792 and 1834 more than $140,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. If I may be allowed to interrupt the Senator, he does not answer my question. He says that we were inundated by silver from all parts of the world.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not mean to say that.

Mr. TELLER. I want to know whether we had a surplus of silver under the ratio of 1 to 15.

Mr. ALLISON. I see the point the Senator makes now. I used an unfortunate expression to the ear of the Senator when I said we were inundated. I withdraw it. I did not mean that. I meant to say that we not only coined a large amount of silver, but that silver came here from abroad and foreign silver coin was a full legal tender in payment of debts. So was gold, but gold did not come. We had no gold, practically, between 1792 and 1834.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him if I understood him aright as expressing the opinion that under the pending bill, if passed, no silver would be coined for the next few years; and if so, how he construes section 3 of the House bill, as reported by the Senate committee:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin such portion of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to provide for the redemption, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. HARRIS. Can it be possible that the Secretary under such an enactment would feel that no coinage would answer?

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for answering the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], who said that we demonetized silver by this bill. That is a complete answer to that. The bill says it shall be coined.

Mr. President, why was it that the gold went out of the country? We had free coinage of gold. It went out because our ratio was not the right ratio. In 1834 we reversed the pendulum and swung the other way, and we changed our ratio from 15 to 1 to 16 to 1. What happened under that? Under that ratio, when 1853 came there was not a dollar, or a half-dollar, or a quarter-dollar of silver in the United States. Gold came in then, and gold was coined at our mints. We had reversed the pendulum and got silver because we overvalued gold. That was the situation in 1853.

I hear it said upon this floor that silver was practically disfranchised and outlawed by our own statutes in 1853. Why, sir, the history of that period discloses the very reverse to be true. The object and aim of the law of 1853 was to so coin fractional silver as to keep it here for the convenience of our people, and there was no expectation of outlawing silver.

Why was it that the silver went away? It was because we struck the wrong ratio in our legislation in 1834.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-three came. I agree that that was a most unfortunate act on the part of Congress by which the disfranchisement of silver occurred in 1873, but I have never taken much thought of it because at that time we had no silver or gold in the United States, practically. We were on a paper-currency basis, and not near a metallic basis in either of the precious metals. Therefore, it is true, as it was true in 1867, when the savants met in Paris and agreed that gold should be the universal standard of money; they did not discuss the silver question at that convention.

They discussed whether they could make a twenty-five-franc piece and a pound piece and a five-dollar gold piece upon an equality; and in that discussion they discovered that that could not be done as respects silver and gold unitedly, and therefore they said, "Inasmuch as we can not do it upon both metals without inconvenience, let us select one of them;" and the influences and the power there of those eminent men favored gold rather than silver. That is all there was in the action of 1867. Mr. Samuel B. Ruggles, of the United States, an eminent citizen of the State of New York, a member of that convention, had no more power to bind the people of the United States as respects its judgment upon this question than we have to bind the people to the adoption of the principles of the Koran. He knew nothing about the sentiments of the people of the United States upon this question of metallic money. There had been no expression of public sentiment either for or against silver or gold. They both stood in our coinage and mint acts as upon an equality at a ratio of 16 to 1. There had prior to that time been no public discussion in these halls or anywhere in the halls of legislation looking to the destruction and desecration and outlawry of silver.

But it was in pursuance of that action that in 1873 we fell in with what seemed to be the popular sentiment abroad in favor of disfranchising silver entirely. I say it was a mistake, but I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that if that had not been done at that time, before we entered upon our specie resumption, if we had maintained the free coinage of silver we should have been obliged to have changed our ratio. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] shakes his head. That is also an opinion of mine only.

Mr. President, here are two illustrations showing that silver and gold must have a ratio that is agreeable to the principal nations of the world, or else that they will interchangeably flow from one country to another. We are to-day upon an absolute gold standard. Does anybody deny that? The standard of everything we have, of everything we own or that is owing to us, is upon the basis of gold. Can there be any doubt about that? That being true, we are entering upon the free coinage and free mintage of silver, not for the purpose but which will have the effect, if the historical statement I have made be true, of banishing gold and bringing silver here. I do not say banishing gold immediately; I am not speaking of that now; but ours is a gold standard.

Is there any Senator here who has recently traveled through Mexico? If there is such a one, he knows that the moment the American traveler crosses the border of Mexico the money of the United States is at a premium of from 30 to 35 per cent. Why is it? The paper money and the gold coin, the greenbacks and the silver certificates, are at a premium. Mexico is upon a silver basis, with a silver coin containing three and a half more grains of standard silver than is contained in the coin of the United States. Yet a silver certificate of the United States crossing the borders of the States of Mexico will bring 30 per cent. premium. Why is that? It is because we are on a gold standard and they are on a silver standard.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator mean to say that a piece of paper payable in a silver dollar is a gold standard? I want to enter my protest by not sitting silent and admitting that we are on a gold standard.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I shall be glad to have the Senator explain why it is.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care about explaining it during the Senator's speech, but it certainly needs some explanation when the Senator says that a silver certificate is worth 35 per cent. premium in Mexico.

Mr. ALLISON. No, I do not say 35 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. Or 30 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not say that it is at any particular premium.

Mr. TELLER. Or 20 per cent. or any premium, because it is payable in silver. It is payable in a silver dollar less valuable, so far as the bullion is concerned, than the Mexican dollar.

Mr. ALLISON. That is just what I was saying. I was saying that there must be some reason for that. Now, what is the reason?

Mr. MORGAN. The convenience of exchanges of paper money.

Mr. ALLISON. Not convenience of exchanges, because exchange upon New York is at 30 per cent. premium in the city of Mexico. It is because they have a silver standard and we have a gold standard, and it is because, although we issue silver certificates payable in silver dollars, up to this moment, and I believe it would be so if we had $700,000,000 of them, twice the amount we have now, our silver certificates are upon a par with the rest of the money in the United States. Therefore it is that these silver certificates, representing our silver dollars, are worth a great deal more than the Mexican silver dollar containing three and one-half grains more of silver.

I may be wrong, but I argue from this that there is a difference of from 25 to 20 per cent. between the ratios of our country and of England, and France, and Germany, as between these gold-standard countries and the silver countries. Now, it may be that Senators are right who believe that this bridge of 30 per cent. can be passed over in thirty days, or ninety days, or even in a year, so as not to disturb and destroy the existing conditions, and so believing they may be willing to enter at once upon the free coinage of silver; but I do not believe that it is practicable. The savants of France and the members of the Latin Union are certainly as wise as we are here, some of them at least. Now, although they have $1,200,000,000 of silver at the ratio of 15½ to 1, they have not been willing to open their mints to the free coinage of silver without, not only the United States, but either Germany or England joining with them.

In other words, they believe that if they open their mints for the free coinage of silver there will be such a disparity between silver and gold as will reduce the standard.

That is my trouble as respects the free coinage of silver in this country. I do not believe we can enter upon it at this moment. We might by such legislation as we propose here enhance the value of silver gradually, and thus in a few years be ready to open our mints to the free coinage of silver; but we are not ready for that now. Whilst I would gladly join with every man who favors the free coinage of silver, I can not do it now, because I believe it would greatly disturb and perhaps destroy the business interests of our country.

I have here from the Comptroller of the Currency a statement of the amount of bank deposits in the United States—$1,500,000,000 of saving deposits alone. I ask Senators in good faith respecting this, can we run the risk of bridging over this difference of 30 per cent., or 25 per cent., or whatever it is, and endanger the people who own these savings in savings-banks? Can we run the risk of disturbing property by a sudden change in the ratio, whether it be part up or part down, making it 15 per cent. by our legislation in a single day? I can not do it for myself. Therefore, I shall not vote for the free and unlimited coinage of silver if that amendment shall be offered here.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Iowa explain to me one proposition that he has advanced? I understand him to state that even if our silver coinage were put up to $700,000,000, which he states to be about twice the present amount, it would not affect the value of the coin certificates of silver relatively with gold?

Mr. ALLISON. Under the present plan of coinage.

Mr. VEST. Would free coinage have any other effect?

Mr. ALLISON. I think so. That is what I am trying to explain. I will give another reason why.

Mr. VEST. I do not see how.

Mr. ALLISON. It is perfectly plain to me that the silver bullion of the world must regulate itself and be substantially of the same value everywhere. Now, if we go to free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1, what do we do? We say to the Latin Union states, "Unless you will recoin the $1,200,000,000 that you now hold on a basis of 15½ to 1, you must either sell your silver and get gold or you must leave your mints closed forever." Can there be any doubt about that? I should be glad to have Senators explain to me how it will be possible for us to have free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16, and the nations of Europe to have this enormous hoard of silver at the ratio of 15½ to 1.

That situation will not last always. They will be obliged to sell their silver at a loss of 3 per cent., or else they will be obliged to hold to their present status and condition. I do not believe that they will retain their silver. I believe they will sell it at some time.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator if in his judgment the time will ever arrive in this country when we can resort to free coinage of silver with our present ratio existing as the difficulty in the way?

Mr. ALLISON. If I were to vote for free coinage to-day I should vote for the ratio of 15½ to 1. I believe that that would come nearer securing a parity between the silver and gold of the world than the ratio of 16 to 1. But I do believe that by proper negotiations with other countries we can in the very near future secure an arrangement whereby we can open our mints to the free coinage of silver at a ratio to be agreed upon. I will say further to the Senator from South Carolina that I may at some time vote with him, if he and I are both here, when I will not say now, in favor of the free coinage of silver; but I can not do so now for the reasons I have stated. When we do, we are either coming to the silver standard, or it may be a depressed standard, which I believe it will be for some time to come, or else we must come to it by an arrangement such as I have described. Now, that is all there is in this question.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has not answered my interrogatory exactly. The point of my inquiry was whether the time for free coinage would ever arrive with the present ratio of 16 to 1 in this country and 15½ to 1 in the Latin Union.

Mr. ALLISON. It may arrive within six months.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask whether the time will ever arrive when we can safely resort to free coinage with that obstacle in the way which I understand the Senator to say is an insuperable one.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not what I say at all. I say until there is an agreed ratio. It may be that that agreed ratio will be 16 to 1. I hope it will be, because that will prevent us from being obliged to lower our $300,000,000 of silver that we have now. But what I mean to say is that I do not think it is wise for us to open our mints to the free coinage of silver until we have exhausted at least an effort to secure an agreed ratio between ourselves and other states.

Mr. BUTLER. In view of the experience of this Government upon that subject it seems to me that we never shall get an international monetary arrangement. We have made two efforts already, and the Governments of Europe have declined, as I understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. The view of the experience of our Government has no influence upon me. Our Government has had no experience.

Mr. BUTLER. We have made several efforts to get an international monetary arrangement.

Mr. ALLISON. We have made two efforts, one in 1879 and one in 1881, and if they had been pursued, in my belief they would have been successful soon after. But since that time we have had nothing except statements to European powers that the people of the United States were in favor of the single standard of gold, and that they did not believe in silver at all.

Mr. EUSTIS. Do I understand the Senator when he speaks of an international arrangement to include England?

Mr. ALLISON. I either include it or exclude it.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator whether he includes England?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not speaking of an international arrangement with any particular country.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator whether in speaking of an international arrangement he includes England?

Mr. ALLISON. I answered the Senator that I did not include it or exclude it. I believe that the United States and the Latin Union states could, if they agreed upon a ratio, maintain silver at that ratio, but other people do not think so. Therefore it may be that England is necessary. I do not think it is. So I do not include it or exclude it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that, as I happen to know, the Senator from Iowa has had no time to make any preparation for his speech to-day, and I hope therefore that he will not be further interrupted.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Vermont for that suggestion, although it does not disturb me especially to be interrupted, except that it causes me to encroach upon time which belongs properly to others.

Mr. President, I want to say that in my view the free and unlimited coinage of silver at this moment will not result in placing silver at par with gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. I am not prepared to say what the proper dividing line would be. It would be somewhere between the dividing line of 25 and par. Hence I am not willing to enter upon an arrangement which will at once change the standard and thus change all relations in the United States, whether it be the wages of labor, the savings of the people, or the contracts that have been made. These are the reasons why I at this moment am not prepared to enter upon the free coinage of silver. I am prepared to enter upon a free coinage when this dividing line is lessened, as I am not sure it will be greatly by the bill which we propose here. This bill takes from out the markets of the world $54,000,000 worth of silver per annum, and thereby places it in such relation to the other silver of the world as that it can be utilized hereafter in the coinage upon a relation that may be agreed upon.

Mr. DANIEL. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Iowa, will he allow me to ask him a question for information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. ALLISON. I do with the understanding that it is not to be long.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to ask the Senator this question. He expresses the opinion, which is shared in by many, that it would be perhaps better, if we were to coin the silver dollar, to coin it at the ratio of 15½ to 1 rather than 15.98 or 16, as commonly called now, if we issue silver certificates or Treasury notes for bullion. Now, would it not be the same in effect as coining the silver dollars at a ratio of 15.98 or 16, as commonly called, to 1, in that we should be expected to redeem those representatives at that ratio?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no difficulty about that. These certificates are issued at the ratio of 15.98 to 1, but they are not coin, and they are redeemable now, and will be, not only in silver, but in gold. I trust that neither this Congress nor any other will ever propose a measure which will have the effect to separate one from the other. I know of but one instance where the public creditor suffered by a debasement of our coin, and that was in 1834 when 6½ per cent. was clipped from our gold coin by a change of ratio.

Mr. President, I do not like to go into the field of politics and I do not mean to do so; but we have for twelve years had the act of February 29, 1878, upon our statute-books. During four years of that period the control of this Government was in the hands of the Democratic party. The President of that party, before he was inaugurated, insisted that the coinage of silver under that act should stop before he took the oath of office. His Secretary of the Treasury, who came into power on the 4th of March, 1885, finding but $2,000,000 a month had been coined under previous Secretaries, coined during the four years of his power only that minimum; and twice during his term, if I am not mistaken, he recommended the suspension of silver coinage absolutely. Although there was a majority during all this period in the House of Representatives of the Democratic party and a large and influential and able minority in this body during all those four years, ending only a year ago, there was not a voice raised in either House by the Democratic party in condemnation of the policy proposed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make quite so broad a statement in regard to the action of the other House, because there were bills introduced and presented there and voted upon.

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking now of action looking to the passage of bills. The House of Representatives passed no such bill from 1885 to 1889.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is true that the House passed no bills, but a bill was reported to the House by a Democratic member from Missouri and was voted down by the Republican minority and a few Democrats aiding them.

Mr. ALDRICH. A free-coinage bill was adversely reported from a Democratic committee in a Democratic House of Representatives, and it was voted down by a Democratic House of Representatives by a large majority.

Mr. MORGAN. They were not good Democrats; that is all.

Mr. REAGAN. But it was not voted down by a majority of Democrats.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, we sent from this Chamber an important liberalizing bill in 1887 as an amendment to the national banking act. It went to the House of Representatives and there went to "the tomb of the Capulets," and never was heard of during the whole of the Administration of President Cleveland.

Now, what I do not understand is the new-born zeal that comes from that side of the Chamber in favor of free and unlimited coinage of silver when they had four years of power and made no effort—when I say "no effort" I mean no such effort as they could have made—to establish this free coinage.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator certainly wants to be accurate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield? Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator wants to be accurate. The movement for the free coinage of silver came from his side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. I am just giving a little bit of historical information, because I have been interrupted on account of my expressing hostility to free coinage, and that interruption has come largely from the other side of the Chamber, and I wondered why it was that that side of the Chamber had waked up so suddenly to the great wrong that was being inflicted now upon the American people because we do not before daylight to-morrow pass a bill for the free coinage of silver.

Mr. BUTLER. We are following the lead of the Senator's colleagues on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. I know you are.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I think that fact ought to be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I only called attention to it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ALLISON. For one moment.

Mr. VEST. My friend expresses great zeal for historical accuracy. Will he permit me to read from the RECORD in regard to a measure in which he figured very conspicuously?

Mr. ALLISON. I know what that record is.

Mr. VEST. I know the Senator does.

Mr. ALLISON. I voted in 1879, or whatever the date, against the free coinage of silver, as I shall do now.

Mr. VEST. Exactly, and the Senator states now in the Senate of the United States that he is surprised at the new-born zeal of the Democratic party. I have the RECORD here where I myself introduced a resolution for free coinage.

Mr. ALLISON. When was that?

Mr. VEST. On June 30, 1879.

Mr. ALLISON. In 1879. Eleven long years have elapsed and passed into history.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to supplement it by a statement of the resolution? It was—

Resolved, etc., That the complete remonetization of silver and its restoration to a perfect equality with gold, both as coin and bullion, are demanded alike by the dictates of justice and wise statesmanship.

It was known that the Finance Committee was "the tomb of the Capulets" for all silver legislation. The Senator was a conspicuous member of that committee then, as he is now. He is a Republican, and a test vote was had here, and not one single Republican failed to vote to send this resolution to that committee when he knew that was the death of it. They sent it there by 1 majority, on the Senator's motion, and every Democrat but 3 voted against sending it there. It was a test vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that, but that was in 1879.

Mr. VEST. Oh, yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Where was the Senator during the four years of President Cleveland's Administration that he was not introducing these resolutions in this Chamber and asking test votes?

Mr. VEST. I was fighting the Republican party, as usual, on this and every other question.

Mr. ALLISON. But not in the same way.

It sometimes occurs that such resolutions presented by the minority are put in for the purpose of annoying and embarrassing the majority. During the placid quiet and comfort of a Democratic Administration of four years, if I heard the voice of the Senator from Missouri in favor of the free coinage of silver it has passed from my memory; but now when we have both Houses and the President the situation is changed, and the demand is made upon us for free coinage.

Mr. President, I have made these observations without preparation, as I have had no time to make preparation upon the discussion of this bill, for the purpose of stating the reasons why I at this moment of time can not support the amendment that has been suggested upon both sides of the Chamber, by my friend from Colorado and by the Senator from Missouri, but will support what I regard as a safe, liberal, conservative measure, having in view, and clearly in sight, I hope, the free coinage of silver at no distant day upon a basis which will make that free coinage permanent, and enable silver and gold to travel hand in hand, as they did for nearly a century, at a ratio fixed by law with reference to their coinage.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word. In 1878 I heard pretty much the same speeches that are made to-day with regard to some international arrangement with foreign governments; and the people of the United States were told then to wait and that an international arrangement would be secured in the course of time. We are now advocating, many of us, the free coinage of silver, and we hear the same argument over and over again, "Wait, and we will secure some international arrangement." When shall we secure it?

I asked the Senator from Iowa whether he included England in any possible arrangement. He said he did not. I rather think that, certainly up to the time when I asked him the question, he thought that England was a necessary party, and if England be a necessary party we shall never pass a law till judgment day giving the American people free coinage of silver.

It is a little singular that the Senators on the other side, the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Iowa, Senators who may be called the Meccas of American finance, still use that argument, and no other argument, repudiating the Republican platform of 1888 and falling back and shielding themselves behind the platform of 1884. That was what the Republican party declared in favor of in 1884, an international arrangement; for the Republican party has been able from 1878 to 1884 to delude the American people by this specious argument and this impossible promise. This was the plank of the Republican platform of 1884—

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator let me interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. EUSTIS. Let me read this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to announce that the hour of 3 o'clock has arrived, at which time general debate was to cease and each Senator was to be permitted to speak but once only and for five minutes on any question. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. EUSTIS. This is the plank of the Republican platform of 1884:

We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world, and we urge that an effort be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard which shall fix for all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

That was the Republican platform of 1884, and that is the argument which we hear now from leading Republican Senators on the other side. The Republican platform of 1888 repudiated that idea. They did not then, in 1888, say a single word with reference to any international arrangement upon the silver question. They took an entirely new departure when they declared, as their plank reads, as follows:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Louisiana now be kind enough to read the Democratic platform for 1888?

Mr. EUSTIS. I have not got it with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if it is not in the same book he holds in his hand?

Mr. EUSTIS. I expect it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the Senator has it with him and does not wish to read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. EUSTIS. I have not examined the book. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont knows what the book contains.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather think it is there.

Mr. EUSTIS. But we said nothing about it in 1888.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see what it says. Let me take it. [The book was handed.]

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I wish simply to bring to the attention of the American people the fact that the argument which is used to-day against free coinage is the argument that we must still continue to wait until it suits the pleasure of England and Germany and other countries to come down on their knees and to ask us into some conference, or consultation, or combination, or convention in order to establish the ratio between gold and silver which will be agreeable to them (which is an impossibility, and every Senator ought to know it), and to say that if we propose to give the American people silver dollars we shall have to give them irrespective of the wishes, of the policy, or the intent or purposes of any foreign Government.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I simply wish to observe that silence is sometimes preferable to falsehood. If the Democratic party said nothing upon the question of silver in 1888, it was not because it receded from the position assumed always by a large majority of that party, but it was because (and I state it frankly) the President of the United States who had been elected by the Democratic party was an Eastern man, a New York man, who did not sympathize with the majority of his party upon this question. Mr. Cleveland came to the Presidency imbued with the prejudices of the New York bankers. He knew nothing about the West. He was in one sense, as to his opinion upon silver, a sectional man. He had been simply governor of the State of New York, and although he developed after he became President of the United States a degree of ability which his friends, even, never claimed for him, his information upon the silver question was defective. I have reason to believe that he is better informed now upon it, and more in sympathy with the people of the great West and with the immense majority of the Democratic party.

But the Senator from Iowa, who to-day arraigns the Democratic party in this Chamber, pleads the statute of limitations on his own action in 1879. He knew when he voted to send the resolution for free coinage to the Committee on Finance that he sent it to certain and absolute death. He knew that no silver tracks ever came out from that den. He knew that even the Democratic chairman of that committee was opposed to silver. I have the vote here, and in order to make the record absolutely correct I will read it. There were but four Democrats, I believe, who voted in favor of the reference of that resolution. The resolution, which I have read, declared for the complete remonetization of silver.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] moved to refer it to the Finance Committee on the 30th of June, 1879, and a reference to the RECORD will show that it was considered a test vote for and against the free coinage of silver. The yeas, to send it to the cave of death for the purpose of killing it, when they knew an echo would never be heard from it again, were—

Mr. MORRILL. Why does the Senator from Missouri say it was "the cave of death?"

Mr. VEST. It was known that a majority of the committee was against silver.

Mr. MORRILL. How did gentlemen know it? Was ever a bill of that character sent there which was reported adversely or was killed by suppression?

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, nothing was ever heard of this resolution again. I have never heard of it from the day it entered the sacred precincts of that money committee. I knew then it was gone, and I bade it farewell—

Farewell, vain world, I'm going home.

It went there and it staid there; the chairman of that committee never reported upon it, and no action was taken, and it never was intended to be reported upon.

These yeas and nays show how the two parties stood. Now, I will read them. There is no escape. The yeas were Messrs. ALLISON, Anthony, Bayard, who was known to be an anti-silverman—

Mr. MORRILL. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri if Senator Bayard, a good Democrat, was not chairman of the committee at that time?

Mr. VEST. I will interrupt the reading of this roll simply to say that when the Senator from Delaware was made chairman of the Finance Committee, when the Democrats held control of the Senate, for the two years that we held it, he had measures sent to him in favor of the free coinage of silver and positively refused to report them, and when my Democratic colleagues and myself, those of us who were in the Senate, pressed him to report, he resigned rather than do it. Does the Senator want any more history?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes.

Mr. VEST. Now, here are the yeas and nays. The yeas were:

Messrs. ALLISON, Anthony, Bayard, BLAIR, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Carpenter, CHANDLER, Conkling, Eaton, Ferry, Hill of Colorado, Kellogg, Kernan—

A New York man, a Democrat—

Kirkwood, Logan, MORRILL, PADDOCK, PLATT, Rollins, Saunders, Whyte—

A Democrat from Maryland—and Windom—23—

who voted to put that resolution in the tomb.

The nays were:

Messrs. Beck, BUTLER, CALL, COCKRELL, COKE, Davis of Illinois, Garland, HARRIS, Hereford, Houston, Jones of Florida, Maxey, MORGAN, Pendleton, Saulsbury, Slater, VANCE, VEST, VOORHEES, Walker, and Williams—22.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the date of that?

Mr. VEST. June 30, 1879.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just twenty-five days after the Democratic convention in St. Louis?

Mr. VEST. In 1879 I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, in 1879. I thought the Senator said 1878.

Mr. TELLER. What is the date?

Mr. VEST. June 30, 1879.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has spoken five minutes.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to give me a few moments more, as I have not spoken upon this bill heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will have leave to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Missouri will be allowed to proceed without limit of time.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa wants to know why no voice on the Democratic side was raised against the position of Mr. Cleveland on silver. There was a Democratic voice raised, sir, in this Chamber, and raised within ten days after Congress met and after Mr. Cleveland had made known his anti-silver opinions. Before he had taken the oath of office an immense majority of Democrats of the House and Senate addressed him a written communication protesting against what were known to be, then, for the first time, his anti-silver opinions. He replied in that letter which has passed into history, in which he gave the reasons against silver coinage which were given to-day by the Senator from Iowa, that he believed silver would become the money of the country and gold would depart from it; that Europe would inundate us with its cheap silver, and so forth, and so on, ad nauseam.

Mr. ALLISON. I have made no such statement.

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President, the Senator wanted an international conference. I believe the Senator wants that.

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. VEST. I will amend then by saying that Mr. Cleveland wanted an international conference, which is absolutely impossible, and the Senator from Iowa must know it. England will never give up her advantage upon this question by any international conference. England wants gold to be high and dear and silver to be cheap, because she can buy her silver at depreciated prices and use it in her dependency of India, whilst England itself remains the clearing-house of the world upon a gold basis. England is dictating the whole thing. England is responsible for the opinion of the world commercially to-day upon silver and gold.

The Republican party tell us they want an American system. They want to subsidize steam-ships so as to bring back our carrying trade under the American flag. They want to exclude foreign importations, so that we shall have our own American productions; but when we come to silver, the great American production of this continent, we must follow subserviently England and take the English system with gold as the standard of value and silver demonetized as one of the precious metals.

Mr. President, when Congress met after the election of Mr. Cleveland and after his views were known, there was one voice heard in Congress in a speech that reverberated from one end of this country to the other, a speech that brought to their feet the American people all over the West, a speech that had more effect upon public opinion than any which has been delivered since I have been a member of this body. That voice is now stilled in death. It was the voice of James B. Beck, of Kentucky, who in this hall, with the undivided attention of the whole Senate, attacked the views of the Democratic President and exposed their fallacy and the utter want of foundation upon which they could stand.

Yet the Senator from Iowa, who did not then say one word, who to-day stands as he did in 1879, opposed to the remonetization of silver, stands here and taunts the Democratic party with their record upon the silver question, and claims that the Republicans have been par excellence its friends!

In the Forty-ninth Congress, when the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House of Representatives reported adversely a bill framed by my colleague [Mr. BLAND] in favor of the free coinage of silver, and it was brought into the House and voted upon, what was the proportion between the two parties on free coinage then? Ninety-six Democrats and thirty Republicans voted for free coinage, and the Republican party beat the measure. If one-half of them had voted with the Democrats the success of silver coinage would then, so far as the action of the House of Representatives was concerned, have been fully achieved.

That is not all, Mr. President. I have before me a remarkable record. When the Bland bill was passed in 1878 and the banks of New York precipitated a financial panic, it was only averted by the action of the Treasury of the United States. I have before me the record of the extraordinary proceedings then adopted against even the limited coinage of silver to $2,000,000 a month and not exceeding $4,000,000. I read from Weston on the Silver Question:

On the 8th instant, a committee of these banks had a conference at Washington with the Secretary of the Treasury, at which were present the Attorney-General and some minor officials. The result was a plan submitted to these banks on the 12th instant, and agreed to, only one bank representative (Mr. Colgate) objecting. The leading features of it are, first, that the banks will reject silver deposits, except as repayable only in kind; second, that silver shall not be allowed as clearing-house money except for small fractional sums not exceeding $10; and, third, that in respect to all payments by Government drafts on the New York banks, or on the United States assistant treasurer at New York, they shall be cleared at the clearing-house in New York, at which a desk is to be assigned to a representative of the United States Treasury.

At the bank meeting on the 12th, Mr. Colgate objected to the plan, that it "could only mean to fly in the face of Congress and declare the silver dollar that had been declared a legal tender to be worthless." According to the report in the New York Times of the next day—

To this the reply was made that there was not the slightest disposition to depreciate the silver dollar, or to reflect upon the Government, and certainly if it had appeared that there was, the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the Cabinet who approved of the plan would have detected it and sought to modify the policy to be adopted.

Such a reply made by, and in the presence of, the committee of bankers present at the conference of the 8th at Washington, is decisive as to what occurred there. Even more decisive, as far as the Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, is his subsequent engagement which makes a part of the bank proceedings on the 12th, that a Government representative shall take a seat in a clearing-house, in which silver is rejected as money, and where such a representative could not sit, except on the basis of a promise that the Government drafts on New York, being the bulk of all its drafts, shall be paid in gold, or paper convertible into gold. To do all this is to change the metallic standard of this country from coin to gold. The New York Tribune said, exultingly, on the 13th, that "practically the banks of the city of New York repeal the silver bill!"

That is true—

"practically the banks of the city of New York repeal the silver bill." It is as much mistaken as when it said last winter that "the capital of the country is organized at last and Congress dare not fly in its face."

Mr. President, that shows the animus of this attack upon silver. It was deliberately determined upon that the United States of America should abandon silver and put itself en rapport with the commercial world by adopting the gold standard exclusively. If there ever could have been a doubt on this subject it is removed by the fact that the banks in the city of New York, with the consent of the Treasury Department, were to virtually demonetize silver and bring the business of the great metropolis of the country exclusively to a gold basis.

It is true that in 1888 the Democratic party said nothing upon the subject of silver in its platform. It is an open secret known to the whole world that Mr. Cleveland by his message upon the tariff question had put that issue exclusively of all others before the people of the United States, and the campaign in which he was our candidate the second time was fought upon that and that alone. It was the salient point. Whilst we reaffirmed the former platform of the party, I ask no advantage by reason of that. I stand here to avow that the last canvass was fought on the tariff.

I know that in my section of the country the people have never wavered in their devotion to silver. I know that as a public man I have never addressed them from the hustings without declaring for the free coinage of silver. But in the last canvass the tariff overshadowed every other issue, and it is unfair for the Senator from Iowa to say that because nothing was said in our platform distinctively on the subject of silver, therefore the Democratic party had receded from its former position.

Mr. President, I assert that the position of the large mass of the Democratic party has been unwavering in favor of the free coinage of silver; that they have never faltered in their devotion to it, and because one leader or ten leaders did not agree with the rank and file and web and woof of the party, that is no indication that our sentiment had changed upon this great question.

I am not here to attack national banks. I think that for some purposes it is the best banking system ever invented in this country. I have consistently and persistently, and expect to do it until my public career is closed, opposed that feature of the national-banking system which gives them the power to expand or contract the currency of this country at their own pleasure. The first address I ever delivered in this Senate Chamber was against that feature of the national-banking law. I would not give that power to any set of men that God ever created. I would much less give to the Secretary of the Treasury the power that is given to him in this House bill, to do with silver as he pleases. Both these features, the one in the banking law, to which I have alluded, and the one in the House bill in regard to silver, are equally objectionable.

But to show the animus of this attack, to show how this party of aristocratic gold, for it is the aristocratic money now of the world, have persistently and systematically attacked silver, I want to read a circular of the national banks which was published extensively through the country and appeared first in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, having been sent to that paper:

DEAR SIR: It is advisable to do all in your power to sustain such daily and prominent weekly newspapers, especially the agricultural and religious press, as will oppose the issuing of greenback paper money, and that you withhold patronage or favors from all applicants who are not willing to oppose the Government issue of money. Let the Government issue the coin and the banks issue the paper money of the country, for then we can better protect each other. To repeal the law creating national banks, or to restore to circulation the Government issue of money, will be to provide the people with money, and will seriously affect your individual profits as banker and lender. See your member of Congress at once, and engage him to support our interest, that we may control legislation.

(Signed by the secretary.)

JAS. BUELL.

Mr. Buell was the president of a national bank in the city of New York, dead, I believe, some four or five years ago.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the date?

Mr. VEST. There is no date given here, but this paper was published in 1889. It must have been issued some time before that. The date is not given, however; but that paper is an entirely responsible one and the circular has never been denied.

Mr. President, the animus of that circular indicates the spirit of all the bankers in the country without almost a single exception. It is that the money which is dearest and most valuable shall become the standard of value. It is that silver money, which is considered the cheap money of the country, the money of the people, shall be driven out of existence, directly or indirectly.

Mr. HOAR. Is there anything in the circular the Senator has read on the subject which he says indicates the animus of the bankers?

Mr. VEST. I leave the Senator from Massachusetts, who is exceedingly good at conclusions, to draw his own. I have read the circular for what it is worth. I say that the animus of that circular is that the banks should control the monetary system of the United States, and they are arrayed to-day, as their proceedings at Kansas City in national convention show, against silver almost to a man. If Senators will take the trouble to look at the proceeding of that convention they will find that when Mr. St. John undertook to advocate a limited coinage of silver on a bullion basis he was received almost with hisses, coldly, unsympathetically, and he saw that he had no support in that convention.

But when Mr. John Jay Knox, former Comptroller of the Currency under two Republican Administrations, now the president of a national bank in the city of New York, took the floor and declared against silver and for gold as the standard of value in the United States, enthusiasm was high; and when he reached the climax and said, "I stand here and avow that I am the author of the act of 1873 that demonetized the silver dollar," there was a roar of applause such as never was heard outside of a popular convention. Mr. Knox to-day holds it as the crown of his political and banking career that he is the author of the act of 1873 which struck the silver dollar from the coinage of the American people, and he is the idol of the bankers of the United States because he did it.

It is useless for gentlemen to attempt to disguise this whole thing. There is but one safe ground for the friends of silver, and I announce it here to-day and propose that it shall be tested in the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote. There is no middle ground. Silver must be put on the same basis with gold. There never will be an equality between the metals as money metals so long as you limit the coinage of silver.

Sir, this idle fear that the nations of Europe will dump their silver upon the people of the United States if we have free coinage is a dream, an ignis fatuus. It is brought here in order to scare Senators and Representatives from the popular demand now made throughout the country except in a very few sections.

Men are governed by interest. We are sending abroad now—I do not care about statistics—say, $17,000,000 in silver every year. Does any man believe that with this demand for silver abroad, with India as a dumping-ground and a sink for silver, where all they can get goes in and never a dollar comes out, they will lose 3 per cent. in the ratio of coinage and pay transportation for their silver here to be sold? But suppose they do, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] said pertinently the other day, is silver poison? Is silver deadly? Do you want to drive silver from you? What is there about it that would destroy the interests and welfare of the people of the United States?

Mr. President, these arguments seem to be based upon the idea that the United States of America is Roumania, or Mexico, or a South American state. Senators seem to forget the vast resources of this country. We are to-day the commanding people of the world except as to commerce. We are to-day able to make our own standard. We are able to say for ourselves what shall be the money of the people of the United States, and we are able to maintain it. But if the friends of silver run from the flag, if under the caucus whip or the Executive lash they go from their honest convictions and allow its enemies to trample it under foot here again by bullion or limited coinage, the day of its redemption will never come.

Sir, I have seen strange things in my brief political career, but in the last few days I have seen and heard things that went beyond my credulity. I read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with great pleasure but a few days since an eloquent and impassioned address in favor of silver. Every argument of the gold men was refuted; every plea for silver was urged in language that burned, and yet at the conclusion of that oration the gentleman who delivered it announced that he would vote for the pending bill and against silver, in hopes that the thing could be amended in another part of the Capitol. Every conviction was given up, every argument went for nothing, and he announced as the Representative of a district of free people that he proposed to surrender his convictions and vote against silver, because, he said, there were no rules in the Senate limiting debate, and Senators could speak as long as they pleased and offer any amendments they wanted.

Mr. President, the whole issue is silver money or not. I want my friend from Nevada [Mr. JONES] to make no mistake. He understands this question. He knows that the very minute you put any limit on the coinage of silver you degrade it. I was astonished to hear the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] say in answer to a question of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that four and a half million dollars' coinage a month would bring silver up to a parity with gold. In my judgment it will do no such thing. Nothing but equality by law will bring silver up.

The question between us is, shall we follow gold as the tail follows the kite, or shall we assert the true interests of this country and behind its vast resources, its illimitable energies, assert the American system as to an American production?

I happen to have before me, from a Republican and a national banker, a table—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator goes on will he mind answering an inquiry?

Mr. VEST. Of course not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has just spoken about bringing silver up to a parity with gold. Will he kindly tell us precisely what he means by a parity between the two metals?

Mr. VEST. Well, I mean that silver shall no longer be worth less than par value.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is par?

Mr. VEST. Par value would be 100 cents in money of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is easy enough. That it is now. The law says so.

Mr. VEST. I understand it is that now, but simply by virtue of one provision of law, whereas if we allowed the country to have free coinage the result would be that gold, instead of increasing in value and silver diminishing, the silver would go up in value and there would be one dollar really in both, the ounce and the dollar itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if my friend will pardon me—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not quite able (undoubtedly it is my own fault) to understand yet what the Senator's definition of a parity between the two metals is. Does he mean that what we call a dollar in silver will buy the same amount of wheat or of labor (which I think is the final test of all values everywhere in the world or in the United States alone) as compared with gold? He has now merely stated the proposition in another form, to my humble apprehension.

Mr. VEST. A dollar in silver now in the United States will buy just as much as a dollar in gold. What I mean by a parity is that instead of there being 28 cents difference in the bullion value of a gold dollar and a silver dollar under any standard one will be worth as much as the other in bullion, according to the ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can there be that difference if each will buy the same thing? How can there be 28 cents difference?

Mr. VEST. I stated intrinsically or in the bullion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the test, then, of the bullion?

Mr. VEST. The test is its value the whole world over, if the Senator will have it that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the value the whole world over anything to do with the question?

Mr. VEST. According to the argument that is made on the other side of the Chamber it has.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But according to my friend's argument?

Mr. VEST. I am now arguing against the proposition advanced here that we must put ourselves absolutely under the gold standard because the great nations of the world are on it except the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not arguing the question; I am trying to get information. I want to know whether the Senator thinks that the difference between the bullion value, as we call it, of gold and silver has anything to do with the question.

Mr. VEST. I think that so long as we degrade silver by limiting the coinage it will never be worth, commercially or otherwise, as bullion, as much as gold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that of any consequence so long as it is worth a dollar in gold when it is coined.

Mr. VEST. That, so far as this country is concerned, may be true, but we can not tell what changes may occur in the future. I understand that the arguments upon the other side are based distinctively on the assertion that silver is not intrinsically worth as much as gold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But as I have not made any argument on the other side and am hunting for information, I want to know the Senator's view, as he is making a very powerful appeal to us, whether the foreign state of the case or the bullion state of the case is an element in the question. It is, I should be glad to have him solve it in some way. If it is not, if he will only say so, then I shall know where I am so far.

Mr. VEST. I have stated what I meant. I know the Senator from Vermont understands it, and I also know that he needs no information on the subject. I have stated as plainly as I could that until you give us free coinage the value of the gold and the silver bullion will never approximate to each other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should they, if one dollar is just as good as the other?

Mr. VEST. For the simple reason that you degrade one as a money metal; you do not give it its full value as a money metal. You make it a commodity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has repeated in answer to my question, and repeats it again, that the silver dollar is at this moment just as good as the gold dollar. What is the consequence, then, about the bullion value so far as the people are concerned who want the dollars to pay their debts with?

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, that is simply caviling. It is true that so far as the purchasing power of the silver dollar and the gold dollar to-day is concerned in the United States they are the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the degradation, then?

Mr. VEST. But our friends upon the other side declare to us that if we continue the coinage of the silver dollar the time will come when it will drive gold out of the country and make silver the only standard. As the Senator from Iowa says, it will be a cheapened metal, it will be a cheap currency. I say if you want to bring silver up to gold, give it free coinage. You can not possibly help silver as long as you keep it a tail to the gold kite.

So long as we say to the whole world, "We recognize gold as a money metal, but when it comes to coinage we limit the supply of silver," just that long will we find that silver will be depreciated relatively to gold in this country and abroad also. If our friends want to avoid what they consider the great disaster of gold leaving the country and our coming to a silver basis, the sooner they give us free coinage and allow silver a fair and equal chance in the monetary marts of the world the sooner will they avert this disaster.

Mr. President, something has been said in this debate about the contraction of the currency. I did not intend to argue the question, but I happen to see in the RECORD before me, prepared by a distinguished Republican, and himself, I believe, a national banker, a statement of the circulation per capita in the United States from 1854 to 1890. In 1854 it was $17.04; in 1856, $15.68; in 1858, $13.27, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that currency alone, or does it include the whole outstanding obligations of the United States?

Mr. VEST. It says "we had the largest amount of circulating medium." I suppose it means all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator suppose it means merely currency?

Mr. VEST. I do not know; it says "circulating medium," and that would include all of it, currency, gold, silver, etc.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it would.

Mr. VEST. In 1864 we had $58.72; in 1866, $52.01; in 1879, skipping from 1866 to 1879, we had $17.02, and in 1890 we have $21.66 per capita.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, if my friend will pardon me right there, he is perfectly aware that that includes undoubtedly, as it is obvious, although I have not seen it, every description of obligation of the United States that was outstanding except time bonds, and an enormous depreciation of paper money, gold and silver both, any kind of coin, being at an enormous appreciation above the currency; or to state it the ordinary way, paper of every kind was below the other.

Now, then, I call my friend's attention (for I will not take up his time) to the fact that we have diminished down and down and down on that basis of circulation, without a disturbance to the prosperity of anybody, and with a continual lowering rate of interest to anybody who wished to borrow money and had anything to put up for it. If I go to a bank and have nothing to show, or to a private person, or to my friend, and wish to borrow a hundred dollars and have no security to put up, it is not easy to get it; but to anybody who has anything, be it land, or notes, or promises to pay of any kind, or suretyship, my friend perfectly well understands that through all that time of diminution of apparent circulation per capita, not only the public debt of the United States and the various States has gradually and steadily diminished, but the rate of interest has diminished also. Where, therefore, is the great difficulty about what is called the scarcity of money?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not care to go into the statistics, and I do not propose to do so, as to the condition of certain interests in this country at the present time. I have read statements that the agricultural interests in the State of Vermont were not in a flourishing condition; that there were abandoned farms there; and that people were engaged now in an attempt to introduce immigrants for the purpose of taking up their abandoned agricultural lands. Speaking for my own section of country—and it is as prosperous as any other agricultural State in the Union—I simply desire to say that within my personal observation the agricultural interests of Missouri are to-day depressed out of all proportion to the other interests of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, may I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean to take the Senator's time, but only to ask a question, and he has referred to the State of Vermont, also. I wish to ask him whether, according to his knowledge and information, the farmer in Vermont or Missouri can not borrow money on fair average security such as in all the history of this country has been considered good, as cheap, if not a great deal cheaper, in this present year than he could fifteen years ago.

Mr. VEST. I will make answer to that question in two ways. In the first place, a prosperous farmer owning his own land, unless there is something abnormally wrong in the administration of public affairs and the legislation of the country, ought not to be compelled to borrow at all. In the second place, the fact that money is abundant in the banks and in the hands of one section of the country to be loaned to the other is no argument against the one I am making, that there is an abnormal and extraordinary condition of affairs as to the agricultural interests of the United States.

All over my part of the country there is abundance of money. In the city in which I live there is one sign after another, street after street, "Money to lend by Eastern capitalists;" "Money at 8 per cent., interest to be taken out in advance." It is so all over the West. But there is no farmer loaning money; and the farmer to-day who, although of good habits and a safe, sensible, prudent business man, who is educating his children, and with no mortgage on his farm, and coming out even year by year, is an exception to his class.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but I can not tell now which way my friend has explained the question, whether the farmer on the average and ordinary fair security of fifteen years ago and to-day can not borrow money cheaper to-day than he could then, if he needs to borrow it at all, as I hope he in general does not, but I am afraid he does.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that that is true. I hardly think it is true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh my!

Mr. VEST. But I do not see that my answer to that would settle this question at all. I say here is a country with the greatest resources of any upon the face of the earth. We have a continent. We have the most remarkable people in the world, so far as energy and business talent are concerned. We have a diversity of climate and of production. We are to-day raising more agricultural products than we can consume at home. And yet the class that are producing really the substantial wealth of the country are complaining more than they have at any time in the last quarter of a century. What is the reason of this? What is the cause of it? The conviction is settled with the people of the West (and I speak of my own section, with which I am acquainted) that the monetary system of the country is wrong; that there is a determined effort to bring this country to a gold standard in the interest of the money-lenders, the income-holders, and the bankers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would that compel the farmer in Missouri and Vermont to sell his butter or wheat at any less price for cash now on that account?

Mr. VEST. The trouble is he is bound to sell.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, he is bound to sell.

Mr. VEST. If money is high and scarce, as a matter of course its purchasing power is increased.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true.

Mr. VEST. And if he owes a debt it takes more of the commodities which he raises upon his farm to discharge that indebtedness.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is another thing altogether. Take the farmer the Senator is speaking of, who keeps mortgages off his farm and makes his ends meet somehow or other—

Mr. VEST. There are very few of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In Vermont a man has a thousand pounds of butter to sell and in Missouri another has a thousand bushels of wheat to sell for cash. Now, I should like to know, if money is so plentiful that it can be borrowed on good security for 5 or 6 per cent., as it can for less than 5 in Vermont, and probably 6 or 7 in Missouri—because always in some way or another the price of money is higher in the West than it is in the East—with the fear that gold is going to be the destroyer of all things and silver the panacea, how is it that he can not get the same price for his wheat in the one State, or his butter in the other, that he could if all this question were solved? That is what I wish to get at.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Vermont wants me to give him information as to the effect of a decrease of the currency of a country, his case is a hopeless one. I say that no proposition is or ever can be better established than that decreasing circulation produces hard times; and, when you strike out one-half the circulating medium of the country in the shape of silver money, as a matter of course you contract it to that extent and you increase the purchasing power of the other metal which is left. If that proposition is not a true one, I am at fault in regard to all my ideas about the money question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly it is true that as you diminish a currency, the quantity of things to be had in the way of money, you increase its purchasing power and diminish the price of wheat in Missouri and the price of butter in Vermont. Now, I am talking about the cash coin; I am not talking about debtors at this moment.

Mr. VEST. I am talking about all of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The farmer in Missouri having sold a thousand bushels of wheat for 50 cents a bushel, instead of taking as his money in hand to buy his shoes and his wagons and the clothes for his family and to make his contributions to church and to do all the things that well regulated people do, is that money worth any more when he has got it than double the amount of it would be if he had got a dollar a bushel for his wheat? Not a bit. He has to submit to the same law after he has got his money that he does before, does he not?

Mr. VEST. If I owe a thousand dollars and I have a thousand bushels of wheat with which to pay it, and that wheat is worth a dollar a bushel, I can go and pay all that debt and discharge the obligation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the point I am asking the Senator about now.

Mr. VEST. That is the point with the people of the West in whose behalf I am speaking, that under this system, which has gone on for years, the capital of the country is in one section. Why is it that in Vermont money is worth 2, 3, or 4 per cent. and in Missouri it is worth 8 or 10 per cent. per annum?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will pardon me (and I will not interrupt him any more, because I know all interruptions are tiresome, as they prolong debate), the topic that I was asking him a question about was in relation to that class of farmers whom he spoke of in Missouri and in Vermont, if he alluded to Vermont, who are not in debt, but who make their ends meet, though I admit it is hard enough. It is about them that I am asking the question. When we come to people who owe money, as I owe myself, if I can get something cheaper to pay it in it is for my personal interest to do it. That is quite another question. Whether wise or not, it is to be considered later on.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator confines his question to farmers who are out of debt and who are making both ends meet, to use that expression, there is almost an infinitesimal portion of that class.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not the case in Vermont.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the question is not answered which I put to the Senator from Vermont, why is there the difference in interest?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I asked the Senator why it was that money in Vermont is 2, 4, or 5 per cent., while in Missouri it is worth 8 or 10 per cent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an extremely difficult question to answer, for the fact that there is a great disparity between new and growing communities, where there is great speculation in lands, and booms, and all that, and people are willing to pay higher prices for money than people who had the same experience fifty or a hundred years ago and have gotten over it, is a very curious thing in the law of society, I admit, and it admits of no explanation that I know of except the foolishness of mankind, that money in a new, growing country will always command a greater price than in the other, although it circulates everywhere.

Mr. PLATT. It is worth more in the State of Washington than in Missouri.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend says it is worth more in Washington than in Missouri. It may be that it is on some real-estate booms around outside of the cities.

Mr. VEST. Who says it is worth more in Washington than in Missouri?

Mr. PLATT. In the State of Washington, I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be true here, I take it, if anybody wanted to loan money on operations outside of the city; it would be pretty high here. I think it is because the lender believes that the risk is greater in lending upon an uncultivated farm or a new town lot that only exists on a map than it is on a farm or town lot in a village that has been settled, whether in Kansas City or in Burlington, and values are fixed, and security is therefore better.

On the other hand, the hopeful and speculative man (I do not mean by speculator the man who is merely making a boom to cheat somebody else and to turn the thing over out of his hands, but the man who hopes he can build up a town and build up his house there and all that) is tempted to be willing—the population is to increase and everything is to rise—to pay more for everything than the man is in a more settled community. But it does not affect this question at all as it appears to me.

Mr. VEST. It makes no difference whether the cause is one or the other, the fact remains about which the Senator from Vermont and myself absolutely agree, and that is that one section of this country does not need money like the other. It may be because the West is a new country, but the fact remains that we do want money for legitimate purposes and that contraction has a peculiarly disastrous effect upon a people in our situation. It is true that in the newer regions of the country interest is higher because the country is being developed, there is more demand for money for improvements, the opening up of farms, making homes, establishing new plants; but the salient point of my argument is that the money is needed, and that is the reason why the whole West is in favor of the free coinage of silver.

We want more money. We are the sufferers if we do not get it. In an old established community like Vermont they do not need money except as a sort of daily medium for the small wants of life. The people are in grooves; the statute of limitations has run against a new enterprise; they are living as their fathers lived, and their children will live as they live. The country is finished, as the French say it is un fait accompli; it is the end of it so far as any development is concerned. That is true in ideas, in opinions, in physical life.

It is not so with us in the West. In the West we must have an increasing circulating medium because our country is increasing. The State in which I live is to-day the fifth State in the Union. But a few years ago it was a comparative wilderness.

Then look at the great imperial States to the west of Missouri. They want more money; they must have it. Yet it is proposed now to treat one part of this country like the other, and to bring us to a gold standard, for it is practically that, decreasing the currency of the country in the face of the absolute necessity for more money in certain sections.

I was astonished to hear in this debate, the other day, the Senator from New York say that there had been a surplus of production of agricultural products in this country, and that was the cause of depression. If I had time I should like to show that that is not true. I can show by the official reports that in years when the wheat crop was smaller than in others the scarcity or the diminished supply did not bring about higher prices, but on the contrary the depression continued.

The Senator alluded to one thing with which I happen to be familiar, and that is the cattle supply of the United States. The prices of cattle have been and are abnormally depressed. Cattle that were worth $5 and $6 a hundred have gone down to $2 and $3, until in my State the returns do not pay for the grass and labor that we put in cattle when sent to the Chicago market. We have heard this same story that there was an overproduction of cattle. The committee recently appointed to examine the meat product of the United States went to the bottom of that question, and they found out to an absolute mathematical certainty, if there is anything in the reports of living men, that there had not been an overproduction, but that population had increased in a larger ratio than the cattle supply of the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. All the statistics, the most reliable that are to be obtained, fix as the minimum of the cost of the alcoholic-liquor trade of the country, $900,000,000. Now, does not the Senator think that if this country would put that amount of money into the consumption of useful articles there would be an end to this growling about overproduction and underconsumption?

Mr. VEST. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. BLAIR. I should like the Senator's answer on that point. Would not $900,000,000 of money, put into good, healthy, hearty food, proper clothing, and the real, actual necessities, rather than the poisons, of life, relieve this country of the difficulty about overproduction and underconsumption?

Mr. VEST. If my friend from New Hampshire could invent a law that would pump into every American citizen just what he considers healthy articles of food instead of whisky he could bring about the millennium he is talking about. My opinion is that they will have whisky, although wheat is worth $5 a bushel and corn $10, and you must eliminate the appetite for alcohol before you can do anything by sanitary legislation. I have some ideas on that matter, but I do not care about elucidating them just now.

Mr. BLAIR. May I make an observation, with the Senator's consent, out of his five minutes?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will just say, if they will drink whisky and poison themselves, why should they growl when they are poor?

Mr. VEST. I do not think the people of the West are ruining themselves drinking whisky.

Mr. BLAIR. But there is this $900,000,000 going into poison, and the poison is getting into the people, and the people are growling about overproduction and underconsumption.

Mr. VEST. Seriously speaking, I believe there is a great deal of humbug about the amount of alcoholic stimulants consumed; but I believe there is a great deal more humbug in any attempt to rectify that thing by coercive legislation.

Mr. BLAIR. I was not talking of coercive legislation, but was just stating the fact.

Mr. VEST. If my friend from New Hampshire would construct some sort of an educational system that would teach people what he says, that whisky is a poison and they ought not to drink it, and make his education effective, it would be a great discovery.

Mr. BLAIR. I am trying to do that, and I began by trying to teach people to read and write, so that they might get this information, but the Senator from Missouri balked it off.

Mr. VEST. The trouble is—

Mr. BLAIR. Now, I hold the Senator to the point. Here are $900,000,000, or, if you please, $700,000,000 or $500,000,000 of money, earnings of the people of this country, going into the alcoholic-liquor trade, which, to say the least, is not a necessary of life. It may be rather a necessary of death, which it seems to produce, but it is not a necessary of life. If this money, which these people thus consume, were put into healthy, legitimate commodities, would it not relieve the country of the difficulties under which it is now suffering in an industrial way?

Mr. VEST. I have no doubt that a donation of $900,000,000 would help any sort of an institution, even the people of the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. A penny saved is a penny gained, the Senator will remember; and if we did not pay this sum out in this way we would save it to expend in some more useful method.

Mr. VEST. If I could do anything by vote or example to help the cause of temperance and prevent the disastrous use of alcoholic stimulants, I would do it. But, if I were disposed to argue the point seriously, I could call the Senator's attention to the enormous amount of money that is thrown away in this country upon fashion, upon luxuries, upon expensive equipages, upon houses, useless except for show and ornament, upon a hundred different things that are the inevitable results of a high degree of civilization. If we are to go into the homes of the people and take charge of their diet, and then of their raiment, and then of their mode of living, and regulate all these things we will have the most extensive statute-book on the face of the earth.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will allow me, my question is not a suggestion that we do any of those forcible things as against the will of the people. This is a matter which they can regulate themselves. If they should see fit to economize in the way I have suggested, would they not be relieved so far as suffering for the actual necessities of life is concerned? I quite agree with the Senator that there is an immense waste in the direction of extravagance in all that appertains to fashion, in the dwellings of the country, and all that, which is equally reprehensible in my belief.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not care to follow the Senator into a discussion of that subject.

Mr. BLAIR. I thought this might be an agreeable episode.

Mr. VEST. But it is not pertinent. However, I have not the slightest objection to the Senator giving his views upon the subject and his arguments in favor of any legislation he deems proper.

What I was proceeding to say is this, that the reason why we want free coinage in the West is because we want no contraction of the circulating medium, but want an expansion of it. I read from a table prepared by a Republican and a national banker to show the enormous decrease in the circulating medium of the United States per capita in a few years, a decrease from $50 per capita to $17 and $18, and to-day $21.

Now, what is the effect of contraction? I happen to have here, not for the purpose of this debate, but for another purpose, a compendium, which I think is correct, as to the effect of contraction in this country, which took place under the resumption act authorizing the sale of five-twenties to retire currency. I am not attacking the necessity for that contraction at the time, but I am simply showing the effect of it.

The failures in 1866 were 520; in 1867, under this contraction, 2,386, with a loss to creditors of $86,218,000. In 1868 $473,000,000 in currency was retired. The failures in that year were 2,608, with a loss to creditors of $36,774,000. In 1869 there were $500,000,000 retired; the failures were 2,790, and the loss to creditors was $75,054,000. In 1870 $67,000,000 of currency was retired; there were 2,915 failures, and the loss to creditors was $88,242,000. In 1871 $35,000,000 was retired; there were 2,915 failures, with a loss of $85,250,000. In 1872 $12,000,000 of currency was retired; there were 4,609 failures and a creditors' loss of $121,058,000.

In 1873, the year of the panic, there was $1,609,000 of currency retired; there were 5,783 failures, with a loss to creditors of $228,499,000. In 1874 there were $75,484,000 of legal-tender certificates retired, $85,760,000 of Treasury notes, and $3,000,000 of fractional currency. The failures were 5,832, with a creditors' loss of $155,239,000. In 1875 the currency was contracted $40,817,418; the failures were 7,740, with a loss to creditors of $201,060,000. That was the price we paid for contraction.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator brought that table down to the present day?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; only to 1875.

Mr. HOAR. Let me look at it, please. [The table was handed.]

Mr. VEST. I copied it from statistics I believe to be reliable.

Mr. President, it has been stated here that the silver dollar was driven out of the currency by Mr. Jefferson, and there have been divers statements about it. Here is the letter which was written by the Secretary of State, May 1, 1806, to Robert Patterson, esq., Director of the Mint:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, May 1, 1806.

SIR: In consequence of a representation from the directors of the Bank of the United States that considerable purchases have been made of dollars coined at the Mint for the purpose of exporting them, and as it is probable further purchases and exportations will be made, the President directs that all silver to be coined at the Mint shall be of small denominations, so that the value of the largest pieces shall not exceed half a dollar.

I am, sir, etc.,

JAMES MADISON.

ROBERT PATTERSON, Esq.,
Director of the Mint.

The history of that transaction is very simple and well known.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator one question, if he will allow me, about the table which he is just passing from. There is either a mistake in the figures—

Mr. VEST. It is very probable. I copied it hurriedly.

Mr. HOAR. For the time of contraction is the time of the smallest number of failures.

Mr. VEST. That is very easily accounted for. If I had time I should have alluded to it. As a matter of course the amount of disaster that came from contraction was not in proportion to the amount retired for any one year.

Mr. HOAR. It seems very curiously to happen that in the period of the largest contraction there was the smallest amount of failures.

Mr. VEST. The effect of contraction would, as a matter of course, continue beyond the specific year. It is impossible to make any mathematical ratio as between the amount of contraction and the amount of failures.

Mr. HOAR. I also want to ask the attention of the Senator, if he will pardon me—I do not think I ought to interrupt him, speaking in a warm room so long—but in 1869 it appears, according to this table, $500,000,000 of currency was withdrawn, and in 1868 $473,000,000, making a diminution of our currency of $1,000,000,000 in two years. Are those figures correct?

Mr. VEST. I do not pretend to say that the table is entirely accurate. I copied it from a statement in a monetary review, and compared it to some extent with official reports, but not altogether, for I did not have time to do it. Whether it be mathematically correct or not, I have simply to say that we know what was the effect of contraction. We know the effect of it upon the country during the number of years when it was carried on. We know that it produced disaster all over the land. I simply cite that to show that the inevitable effect of a contraction of the circulating medium of any country is to bring about commercial depression.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator must have had his attention called to the fact that this was before what he calls the demonetization of silver, and took place while silver was a full legal-tender money.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon; 1873 was the year when silver was demonetized.

Mr. ALDRICH. But 1868 and 1869, the years to which the Senator from Massachusetts alluded, were three or four years before the silver demonetization, when the largest contraction took place.

Mr. VEST. I was unfortunate if I did state, but I certainly never did, that the demonetization of silver produced the contraction of the currency. The contraction commenced in 1866, when the resumption act was passed that authorized the sale of the five-twenties to retire the currency. That is the time contraction commenced in this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then it was not due to the demonetization of silver?

Mr. VEST. I never said the demonetization of silver precipitated the contraction of the currency.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The transaction to which the Senator refers was simply the conversion of 7-30 bonds running for three years. They were called Treasury notes, but they were bearing interest at the highest rate ever paid by the Government since the beginning of the war. They were not in any sense a currency, although I believe the face of them was a legal tender to pay debts, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it was.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any rate they were money, but they were on interest and never circulated a day after they were issued. They were put in that form so that the people of the United States could get ready access to them, and partly under the administration of the Treasury Department by Mr. McCulloch and a part of the time under Mr. Fessenden they were refunded into the 5-20 bonds which have since been paid. They were not currency in any sense of the word.

Mr. VEST. The Senator may be right, but it has been my information that they did circulate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told never after the first day. A single day's interest would make them more valuable than money, and they would therefore be retired. I know the history of those 7-30 bonds. They were only running for three years, and I knew very well that after the war was over, as a matter of course, we would never pay such a rate of interest as 7.3 on bonds, with the right to redeem the bonds with five-twenties. The seven-thirties ran for only three years, and at the end of that time they were at once converted into 5-20 bonds, I think erroneously. In that particular I agree with the Senator. I think Secretary McCulloch did not fully appreciate the reviving credit of the people of the United States, and he ought not to have converted them into 5-20 bonds.

Mr. ALLISON. They were not convertible in terms?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in terms. The seven-thirties were converted because there was a measure pending in 1866, on which I made, I know, quite a lengthy speech advising their conversion into what were called 10-40 bonds, which would be redeemable in ten years and bear only 5 per cent. interest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What year were they issued?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think in 1864.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I take it for granted that whatever the details may be the fact remains that there was a contraction of the currency during those years.

The Senator from Rhode Island has alluded to the demonetization of the silver dollar in 1873. It is very true that under the order issued by Mr. Jefferson, and which I have read here, the silver dollar had not been in circulation practically to a very large amount in the United States for more than twenty odd years. That is true, but the fact still remains—and there is the salient point in this whole argument, and I want to use it to enforce what I said to my friends on the other side a few minutes ago—which is that just as soon as you put the brand upon silver that was put upon it by striking out the silver dollar, whether in circulation or not, you degraded it as a money metal; you put the badge of inferiority upon it, just as it is proposed now in this House bill, when you treat silver as a storage commodity.

The highest value of silver is its value as money, and when you say that there shall be a limited coinage of silver or when you say that it shall be deposited as bullion with the discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury and pay out any other thing than silver or gold, you put the badge of inferiority on it and say to the whole world, "We recognize the difference between gold and silver, and gold is the great standard and silver is not."

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator consider that the fall in the price of silver, which has taken place since 1873, is owing to the demonetization, as he calls it, by the United States?

Mr. VEST. I would not undertake to say that; but I have no sort of doubt that the demonetization of silver, as it is termed, the acts of 1873-'74, have resulted in the loss of millions upon millions of dollars to the American people. I have no doubt that it has caused a settled distrust in the country as to the monetary system.

I do not take issue with the Senator from Ohio as to the manner in which that was done. I never cared anything about it, whether it was done in one way or another. It was done, and when the people of the United States waked up four years afterwards to the fact that the silver dollar was struck out of the coinage, although there had been very few of these dollars in circulation, there was a popular reaction in this country such as has never been seen on any financial question before or since.

It is a remarkable history. I make no charges; I take the record as it is; but I call attention to the fact that the striking out of the silver dollar was regarded by the people as a triumph of the moneyed interests of the country over the producers and the consumers. It was regarded as a part—no matter how effected—of the scheme of the national banks and money-lenders to bring us to the gold standard and make us subservient commercially to Great Britain.

I have spoken longer than I intended, and I apologize to the Senate for having done so.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not propose to prolong this debate, but the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has made some statements which, I think, need a little attention.

The Senator stated in general terms that because of the improper ratio between silver and gold in the earlier history of our country we had gone on to a silver basis, and that later, because of the improper ratio, we had gone on a gold basis. Now, Mr. President, the terms used by the Senator are calculated to mislead. There is a wide distinction between a country being on a gold basis and a country not having gold or silver in circulation.

The Senator repeated also what has been repeated before, that we are now on a gold basis. That I deny. We shall never be on a gold basis until by law we so declare; but we have never been on a gold basis, as I stated the other day, save in the time between 1873 and 1878, which I need not repeat in detail.

Mr. ALLISON. What I meant to say—I may have been unfortunate in my phraseology—was that during the period from 1792 to 1861 we passed from free coinage; that, although by law the mints were open to the free coinage of gold and silver all the time, by a mistake in the ratio during the first period gold was the standard and during the second period silver was the standard. I did not mean to say that we did not have a basis of both silver and gold by law, as we always have had. I expressly stated that we had, but that by an overvaluation of one or the other metal one vanished and the other came in.

Mr. TELLER. I understood perfectly what the Senator meant, and I have no idea that the Senator designed to make any improper impression, but this loose way of speaking on economic questions has led to a great many fallacies among the people.

When the Senator says we were on a gold basis he simply means that at one time we had more gold than we had silver. When he says we were on a silver basis he means that we had more silver than gold. And yet all the time the Mint was open to both metals. That kept the relation between them at least partially, if not completely. Whenever the silver was worth a little more in France than it was here, it went to France. When France had too much of it, if she ever had, she sent it somewhere else.

Mr. President, there is an error as to our condition, which has been repeated over and over again, that up to 1834 we did not have any gold. That is not true. There was no time between 1792 and 1804, when we changed our ratio, that we did not have a considerable amount of both gold and silver in circulation.

Mr. MORRILL. Foreign gold.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was legal tender, if it was foreign.

Mr. TELLER. We had foreign gold and we had American gold. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] shakes his head. I will show from the coinage tables that we had American gold.

There is not a Senator here who is as old as I am who does not remember when the English sovereign was in common circulation in this country. There is not a Senator here as old as I am, and there are several who are quite as old, who does not remember that we had all sorts of foreign gold in circulation, as I stated the other day, made legal tender by law.

I will take ten years before the change of ratio and show from the coinage tables of the United States Mint, that we coined, in 1822, $83,980 of gold, and we coined of silver, in the same year, $95,806.50. We coined a little less the next year of gold and a little more of silver. In 1825 we coined $156,385 of gold, and we coined that year $1,564,583 of silver. In 1829, we coined $295,717.50 of gold, and the next year, $643,105 of gold; the next year, $714,270 of gold; the next year, $798,435 of gold, and in 1833, $978,550 of gold.

During all that time we had a considerable amount of gold in circulation. I do not pretend to speak of that time from memory, for I know nothing about it personally, but that is historical. We had considerable gold in circulation at that time.

Now, let us go back and see how much silver we coined during that time. We coined in 1825 $1,564,583 of silver. I think I gave that before. The next year we coined $2,002,090; the next, $2,899,200; the following year, $1,575,600; in 1829, $1,994,578, and in 1830, $2,495,400. The next year we coined $3,175,800; the next, $2,579,000; and in 1833, $2,759,000.

The difference between gold and silver in circulation in those days was not sufficiently great to say that we were upon a silver basis in fact, as we were not in law. Then we changed the ratio the next year, 1834, and the mints commenced coining more gold, yet not any considerable amount of gold was coined until up in the forties. In 1834 we coined $3,954,270 in gold; the next year, 1835, we coined $2,186,175 in gold; the next year, $4,135,700; the next year, 1837, $1,148,305; the next year, 1838, $1,809,765; in 1839, $1,376,847.50; in 1840, $1,675,482.50 in gold.

In silver dollars during that time we coined in 1834 $3,415,002; the next year, $3,443,003, or more than was coined of gold. The next year we coined $3,606,100; and the next year $2,096,010; and then we began to run down a little. Then there was a time after 1845 when we coined more gold than silver, and after the discovery of gold in California there were many times more gold than silver coined, and, as suggested to me by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], the gold fields of Russia were opened in 1830, and we got a portion of that gold.

So the statement made so frequently, not merely by the Senator from Iowa, but by others here, is not correct. We were not absolutely on either a silver or a gold basis at any time in our history, except that it might be said we coined a large amount of gold during the war in proportion to the amount of silver we coined; but neither gold nor silver was in circulation during the war.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I, of course, have not at hand the data which will prove the correctness of the statements I make, but I submit to the Senator from Colorado that the coinage of silver or the coinage of gold does not show the amount in circulation, because until 1873, when the new mint act which we had under discussion was passed, the coined gold and the coined silver were then not in circulation; so that as soon as the gold was coined at the mint it went out and the silver remained. It was overvalued, and since 1873 and up to this moment those who export gold prefer to export the twenty-dollar gold pieces rather than to export gold bars; so that although we may have an enormous coinage of gold here it goes out if it is preferable to the exportation of gold bars.

Mr. TELLER. The gold put in fine bars would be put in fine bars by the silversmiths of the country and sent across in that way, and the same is true of silver. There is no advantage in shipping coin abroad, but the fact is there is a disadvantage in shipping coin. If it is intended to be bullion, the man who ships it prefers bullion for two reasons: first, that it is safer to ship bullion than coin; it costs less to ship bullion from this country to any portion of the world than it does to ship coin, infinitely less, by freight; and, second, he has it in a shape to be presented to the mints in a foreign country to be coined without reference to the alloy, which in this country is of a different character from what it is in many other countries of the world.

Mr. PLATT. What does the Senator suppose became of the gold and silver coined during the war?

Mr. TELLER. The gold coined during the war was insignificant compared with the demands of commerce upon it.

Mr. PLATT. What became of it?

Mr. TELLER. It went first into the hands of the Government to pay duties on imports, and when it got there, by this very same system of finance, of which I have not time to speak to-night and no patience to speak of at any time, by which we repudiated our own paper, our own legal-tender money, and declined to give it legal-tender functions, and demanded gold for duties on imports, the Government sent it abroad to pay the interest on the bonds that were held abroad, and the Government was bound to pay it not in bullion, but in coin. That is why it went abroad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Government was bound to keep its obligations.

Mr. TELLER. Nobody objects to the Government keeping its obligations. Does the Senator mean to insinuate by his remark that anybody here does not want the Government obligations to be kept? If he does, I am quite ready to meet him on that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. The trouble is that the Senator and his friends did not keep the Government obligation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I did not mean to insinuate, if my friend will pardon me, anything at all, except, without insinuation, to express my opinion that my friend is laboring under an immeasurable and incurable delusion.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Vermont and other Senators who agree with him think they can sneer down this question, and whenever it is presented they will put some supercilious inquiry that does not touch it, so that the public may think there is something back of it. The Senator stated that the Government kept its obligation or he used words to infer that somebody did not want that. In 1862 the House of Representatives sent to the Senate a legal-tender bill for what is called the greenback, with legal-tender quality for all purposes on the face of the earth. It was good for everything; it was good for the Government and good for private parties, and the Senate seized that and struck out of it the legal-tender clause and said it should be a legal tender for everything except that the Government would not take its own paper. That is why I said I had no patience with that kind of finance.

The Senator then thinks I wanted something, I suppose, to pay the interest on the debt better or worse than that—something cheaper. The Government had agreed to pay its interest. How? In lawful money: its bonds in lawful money and its interest in coin, and that is the way it made the contract. It had to have coin, and if it had to have coin it could have bought coin as merchants bought coin. If it had received the greenbacks for import duties, the greenbacks, in my judgment, would never have parted with gold. If we had not issued more than $400,000,000 we could have maintained the parity between greenbacks and gold, but when we made an artificial demand for gold and declined to receive our own paper, then, of course, there was a divergence between the greenback and the coin.

I will not speak of a later transaction when we changed the obligation to pay the bonds, which obligation was in paper, in greenbacks, so that that was to be paid in gold, thus increasing the demand for gold in this country, thus deferring indefinitely almost, as appeared at one time, the resumption of specie payments.

In 1868 we coined $19,371,387.50 of gold and we coined $1,074,343 of silver. We coined the next year $1,266,143 of silver; the next year $1,378,255.50, and the following year $3,104,038.30; the next year $2,504,488.50. We were coining largely at the time the demonetization of silver took place in this country. Whether we coined a dollar or not, every dollar that we produced in the mines went out into the commerce of the world and was put into coin and thus relieved the gold of the world from the obligation that it was under to do money duty.

So it does not make any difference whether the mints of this country were open or not—I mean practically open—when all other nations were coining it. Then it went into money and did money duty everywhere; and if we had had our mints open in 1873, when France felt that she could take German silver, she would have been willing (and that is the consensus of opinion upon that subject abroad) to join with us and take Germany's $400,000,000 of silver, and we should have maintained the open mints of the world if we had not shut ours; but I do not care about pursuing this subject further.

The Senator from Iowa says we can not go to free coinage. So the Senator said in 1878, and so a great many other men said in 1878. I do not believe there is an intelligent political economist on the face of the earth who does not believe to-day that we could safely have gone to free coinage in 1878. I know an innumerable number of men who did not believe it then who say now we could have gone to free coinage.

The Senator says France will send us over $700,000,000 of silver. What will France get in place of that $700,000,000? Where will she get gold? They have ransacked the world for gold, and gold has appreciated 30 per cent. because of this struggle for it. Does the Senator suppose that France is going to sell her silver and do her monetary work with the gold alone that she has got? She has got to reach out to get gold. She can not get it without disturbing all the relations of commerce in the world, and she knows it, and so ought the Senator to know it. Everybody who has given attention to this subject ought to know it.

We have been told several times that Roumania is going to sell her silver. I was taken somewhat by surprise when Germany was brought in here and I was told that Roumania had twenty-five or thirty millions of silver. I do not believe it. Roumania has not got five millions of silver. Roumania is on a paper basis, and not on a silver basis in fact. She does propose, I understand, to dispose of what little silver she has got and not attempt to have any metallic money, but to go upon paper money without any metallic money back of it, and we are frightened and shiver when it is said that Roumania will send us five millions of silver. If she sent us a hundred millions it would not affect our market.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not frightened.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says he is not frightened. I am glad to hear that, but some people seem to be frightened.

Then we were told that Belgium had five and a half millions. Why, Mr. President, for thirty-eight months we put out of our Treasury and we coined more than $7,000,000 each month of silver, and for what we have coined and what we have accumulated we put into the markets of the world silver to that extent.

There is not any danger of Belgium's silver or Roumania's silver if it should come, admitting that it will come, and there is not any danger of France's silver coming, because the French are too good financiers; they know too well what is necessary for their commerce, a commerce that is extending and increasing every day of the year. They will not abandon silver, but should they attempt to abandon it they would find the disturbance so great that they would be compelled to do what Germany has been compelled to do: suspend the sale of silver because of the disturbance of her financial affairs.

Germany has suffered immeasurably more at the hands of the gold monometallists of Germany than she suffered at the hands of the French Government; and France will not make the mistake which her enemy made. There is no danger of it, not a particle.

The Senator speaks of Mexico. He says Mexico is on a silver basis. True, yet Mexico has had a period of prosperity for the last ten years that she never had before in her history. She has brought out and produced commerce that was never thought of. I commend to the Senator from Iowa and others who are talking about a silver basis and the prices we shall get when on a silver basis the statement made by Mr. Romero before the Pan-American Congress, which was in session here recently. He shows that the financial condition of that country is better now than it ever has been heretofore.

It is better under the silver basis than it would be under the gold basis, infinitely better.

The Senator calls attention to the fact that silver certificates were at a premium somewhere. The silver certificate is equal to gold. That is why it is at a premium. It is equal to gold because it will settle balances not only here, but anywhere in the world.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] the other day said that we could not use our silver coin; that it was not as valuable when it got abroad as bullion. That is not correct. A financial circular sent out from one of the great banks of New York the other day made the statement that the 83-cent dollar, as they call it, when it went abroad was not treated as money, but was treated as bullion. That statement is not true either. If any man on this floor or any bank official had a million silver dollars in London it would mean to him a million dollars in gold, less what it would cost to get it to New York. He would not take $830,000 for that million. He would take and send it over and draw against it here. He can do that on a silver certificate; he can do that on any money that will circulate in this country.

I want to ask, because I do not wish to detain the Senate by reading it, that a portion of Mr. Romero's speech may be incorporated in the RECORD, and I want Senators to look at it and see whether it is such a frightful thing to get on a silver basis! They are infinitely better off in Mexico proportionately than we.

I only rose to correct some of what I thought were the points in the speech of the Senator from Iowa that were liable to be misunderstood; of course I knew the Senator from Iowa understood them. I am aware that he knew we had never been on a gold basis legally. I thought he was mistaken as to the circulation of silver and gold in this country before 1834 and subsequent thereto. If I have permission to insert this in the RECORD without reading it, I shall not read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The paper is as follows:

As the conference is aware, said Mr. Romero, Mexico has been the largest producer of silver in the world. Two-thirds of all the silver now existing has been produced by my country, and although in the last few years the annual production of that metal in the United States has exceeded that of Mexico, I have the conviction that when the Mexican mines attain their full development, which I believe will take place before long in view of the rapid manner in which railroads are being constructed there, our annual production of silver will exceed that of the United States. The production here has attained its largest development, while with us it is now only commencing to be developed. When our production is fully developed we will occupy again, as we did many years previously, the first rank in the world in the production of silver.

Notwithstanding its mining wealth, and very likely on account of it, Mexico has not suffered as much as might be expected from the depreciation in the value of silver. The Mexican monetary system is based upon silver coin; the wages, salaries, house rent, and the value of all services and productions in Mexico have not been subject to the fluctuations caused by the depreciation of silver. Foreign merchandise only has been affected by that. The enhanced value of real estate in some parts is due to the development of the country, and not to the depreciation of that metal. As Mexican mines are generally rich, the depreciation in the value of silver has reduced their profits more or less; but this is hardly perceptible in a business subject to so many contingencies as mining, and I have no information that a single Mexican mine has been abandoned on account of the low price of its productions caused by the depreciation in the value of silver.

For a Mexican who has never left his country or who is not aware of what takes place in the monetary centers of the world, silver has now the same value as it had twenty years ago; and if he could detect any difference at all it would only be in the lower price of foreign merchandise, which has almost been balanced with the price that they now command in comparison with what they had twenty years ago. The Mexican Government is the greatest sufferer on account of the payment in London of the interest of the Mexican foreign debt; but the elements of wealth of my country are so large that that difference is hardly perceptible, and to us it is equivalent to a higher rate of interest.

So far as Mexico is concerned there is no special interest, therefore, and much less an urgent one, which might induce it to take extreme measures to obtain an increase in the value of silver, although it is apparent that any increase in that value would be advantageous to us. The depreciation of silver has produced in Mexico a result which seems almost paradoxical, and notwithstanding it is a real one. It has established a bounty equal to the amount of depreciation in the value of silver, which is now about 33 per cent, in favor of the exportation of other Mexican products, and this cause has increased considerably the production and exportation of such other products.

For many years, and principally on account of the great expense of transportation on the Mexican roads, as a consequence of the uneven ground, and on account of our lack of large lakes and navigable rivers, the only Mexican products that could pay the expense of transportation were precious metals, because in small volume and weight they possess a greater value than other articles; and the Mexican exportations before the railroads were built consisted only of gold and silver. This condition of things prevented the development of the other sources of wealth of the country in whatever was not absolutely necessary for the local consumption, which was in itself quite small.

Before the depreciation of silver, which coincided with the beginning of the construction of railroads in Mexico, the exportation of Mexican products, besides precious metals, was really insignificant. That depreciation coincided—as it was natural, for the reasons stated—with the increase in the production of other articles for export, because these articles had a heavy bounty, equivalent to the amount of the depreciation in silver. If a Mexican merchant has to send $1,000, for instance, to New York or London, he has to use 1,333 Mexican dollars in silver; while, if he sends coffee, vanilla, or any other articles of national production, as this is sold by gold in New York or London, he saves that loss. If the price, for instance, of coffee in New York or London is $20 per 100 pounds, its price in Mexican national coin would be $26.65, less freight, insurance, commission, and other small expenses.

With this view, it is therefore clear that the depreciation of silver has produced, in a great degree, a decided benefit for Mexico, because it has encouraged the production of other articles of as much value as the precious metals, and for the production of which Mexico has great elements of wealth and very favorable conditions with which nature has bountifully supplied her.

This plain explanation of the actual condition of things in Mexico will show the conference that so far as my country is concerned there is not any great necessity, and much less an urgent one, to propose or adopt any extraordinary measures with the view to restoring the value of silver, and that we can wait as long as it may be necessary to see the old ratio of 1 to 15½ restored; and this, in my judgment, will take place before long.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MORRILL. We have already passed beyond the point that was agreed upon when this bill was to be considered with the amendment, and debate confined to five minutes. I give notice now that I shall to-morrow, at the earliest moment I can after the morning business, insist upon the bill being completed to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. Complete it to-night.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] rises to a question of order.

Mr. VEST. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine rises to a question of order. The Chair will first hear the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. As I remember, by a fair and fully understood agreement, an hour was fixed, agreed to by everybody, when the bill was to be considered upon the amendments with five-minute speeches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair whether that rule is not now in force, unless in special cases it is waived?

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be general. It ought not to be waived.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator. The Senator from Missouri appealed to the Senate that he had not spoken and asked permission for an extension of time, and that was given to him, and the Senator from Colorado then addressed the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I did not speak five minutes.

Mr. HALE. The Senator spoke over five minutes. It seemed very short undoubtedly, but I think it was rather more than five minutes. I wish to give notice that from this time forward, if possible, debate shall be continued under the five-minute rule without exception. A great many Senators here have refrained from taking part in the discussion. It is not because they do not feel interested in this bill, but they feel that it has been thoroughly discussed up to the present time, and if the Senate is ever able to come to a conclusion now is the time; and it is not, so far as the voting is concerned, any harsh or arbitrary rule, but a fair and fully considered agreement, unanimously entered into by the Senate; and after the time comes that that agreement should be put in force it seems to me that it is not the fitting thing that more time should be asked than what has been agreed upon; and, for one, I give notice that I shall endeavor to have the rule enforced hereafter.

Mr. INGALLS (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The Senate knows I have been engaged for the last month in discharging the duties of the Chair, and I have therefore been unable to participate in this debate. I had intended to-day before 3 o'clock to ask the attention of the Senate for perhaps fifteen or twenty minutes, but the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] continued his remarks that were begun on Friday, and he was followed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who spoke until almost 3 o'clock, after which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] took the floor, and continued for something over an hour. I respectfully ask that the rigor of the rule may be conditionally waived in my favor to-morrow, in case at any time between the close of the morning business and 2 o'clock I shall wish to ask the attention of the Senate for a brief space.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope permission will be granted to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HALE. I should not propose to seek to enforce the rule in the case which has just arisen in the body. If the Presiding Officer, who has not spoken upon this subject, desires to speak as a Senator, I think all of us will agree that it is proper that he should have the opportunity of doing so.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the circumstances certainly nobody will object.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, when I addressed the Senate I supposed I would be within the five-minute rule. Of course, unless we are called down, we never know how long we speak.

My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is not present, desires to address the Senate, and would have done so to-day if he had seen any chance, for about fifteen or twenty minutes, and I shall bespeak for him, as he is a new Senator, that privilege. Aside from him, I do not know of anybody else who wishes to speak.

Mr. HALE. Let us consider the rule in force, and when individual cases arise the Senate can deal with them as they arise. Let it be understood in that way.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Maine that, while it is desirable that these agreements should be kept in the very strictest manner, there is no order made, and it can not be enforced, and, of course, it is left to every Senator whether he will speak or not, and if a Senator has not abused the privilege of speaking often

I do not think there ought to be an objection to allowing him to be heard if he did not get in his speech in the time limited.

Mr. HALE. The Senate, as everybody knows, is very generous about these things, but still the force of a fair agreement entered into unanimously and thoroughly understood at the time when it was agreed upon ought not to be lost to the Senate. We are not likely to make any error here in the Senate by not talking enough, and when such an agreement is made I believe it ought to be the spirit of the Senate to carry it out, except in cases, such as arise occasionally, where personal exceptions would be recognized.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I simply want to make a statement in justice to myself. I have never asked for an extension of time under any rule and would not have done so to-day, for I did not anticipate that I should say a word a minute before I spoke. I spoke in reply to some statement of the Senator from Iowa. But the other day the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] having charge of the bill informed me that there would be no vote upon the bill or amendments until to-morrow at 3 o'clock, and I supposed that was the understanding on the majority side of the Chamber. Therefore, when I asked to proceed for a few minutes beyond the five minutes it was with the understanding that there had been a change of the rule by consent of the majority.

Mr. CULLOM. Do you mean to-morrow or to-day?

Mr. VEST. Tuesday. I was so informed by the Senator from Nevada having charge of the bill, or else I never would have asked for a minute. The Senate, I am certain, will acquit me of ever having infringed upon any rule or ever having asked any special favors.

Mr. DAWES. There never has been any agreement as to when the vote shall be taken, but only as to the manner of debating, that hereafter the debate shall be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. VEST. I only mean to say that the Senator from Nevada, when I asked him if we were certain to take up the bill and debate it under the five-minute rule, said, "No, not until Tuesday," that there were three or four Senators who wanted to speak upon the bill. That was my understanding, and that was the reason I went over the five minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope, in view of what has been said on the floor, that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], the Presiding Officer, will have an opportunity of speaking to-morrow at such length as he desires, and also the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is absent, and that at some time to be named now, I do not care whether it is 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock—

Mr. SHERMAN. Say 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. That we shall agree to go on with this bill and vote upon the amendments, debating them under the five-minute rule, of course, and complete this bill to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. You can not get an agreement such as that.

Mr. COCKRELL. You could not read the amendments and make a five-minute speech on each one in that time.

Mr. ALLISON. The firmness with which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] makes his statement admonishes me that it is not possible to secure any agreement of the kind I intimated.

Mr. HALE. Why not let us go on under the present agreement? All that is needed is to insist upon the rule, and nobody will object to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] and the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] addressing the Senate, and I think the Presiding Officer will enforce the rule.

Mr. SPOONER. The agreement, as I understand it, is that all Senators shall be confined to five minutes, except those who desire to speak longer. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think we shall have no difficulty about making an arrangement in respect of this matter, whereby, say at 3 o'clock to-morrow, the debate shall be confined to five minutes on the part of each Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. I think that is the standing agreement, except so far as the Senate has within the last few moments made exceptions to it.

While I am referring to that particular phase of the question, I do not quite agree with utterances on the floor and I think once from the present occupant of the chair and from the Chair that one of those consent agreements is not within the power of the Chair to enforce. I think that one of these agreements, made by unanimous consent of the Senate, is within the power of the Chair to enforce, and I think it is his duty to enforce it, except so far as the Senate may make exceptions to the consent rule by its consent action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It never has been so held.

Mr. COCKRELL. I differ materially with my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. I do not think that the Senate or the Presiding Officer has any such power.

Mr. HARRIS. We adopt rules by a majority of the Senate, the standing rules of the Senate, which the Chair does enforce; and, now, when every member of the Senate consents to a rule that shall apply to a particular case, I can not quite see why it is not within the power of the Chair and the duty of the Chair to enforce that rule; but I simply give that as my own opinion.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not a mere question as to the form of doing it? I suppose nobody questions that what is known as the eighth rule is enforced by the Chair, although that is a rule for a Senator speaking five minutes only; and I suppose it can be enforced in a matter of this kind, when it is in the form of an order of the Senate, and then the Chair would enforce it; but when it is put like this, merely in the form of an understanding by members, and so announced by the Chair himself, it is not the custom of the Senate, so far as I am aware, to treat it as an arrangement which the Chair can enforce.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall endeavor to confine my observations to five minutes. I wish merely to say a word in reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

In the observations I submitted a while ago, which I agree with the Senator from Colorado were rather loosely made, for the reason that, owing to the pressure of the committee business in which I have been engaged, I have not had the opportunity which other Senators have had to prepare with great accuracy statements to be submitted to this Senate, I meant to say, and did say, that although silver and gold from 1792 to 1873 were upon a par as respects their coinage in our mints, because of a mistaken ratio, the gold gradually passed out of our country until 1834, when there was practically no gold in it.

I shall be able, if it is necessary, to bring to the attention of the Senate information which will show, from the best statements of those who get statistical information in their minds, that at the time when the act of 1834 passed there was practically no gold in the United States.

Now, it is perfectly well known that after the passage of the act of 1834 silver gradually passed out of the United States, and the act of 1853 was made necessary because of the gradual passing away of silver and in order that we might have fractional silver here with which to conduct our business.

I made no comment as respects Mexico. I say this in justice to myself, because it might be inferred from what the Senator from Colorado said that I was depreciating the prosperity of Mexico. I made no comment upon that subject; neither did I make any comment upon what would be the condition of our own country if we had all silver rather than all gold or rather than both silver and gold. I made no allusion to either of those topics. My allusion to Mexico was simply to show that we were here upon the basis of gold as distinguished from silver in our daily transactions, although we have a limited coinage of silver, and that Mexico on the contrary had a silver standard exclusively, and that there was now a difference between the paper and coin money of the two countries varying from 25 to 28 per cent. I only alluded to that for the purpose of showing that if we open our mints to the free coinage of silver it will, in my belief, be necessary to bridge over that chasm of 25 or 28 per cent., and I expressed a fear that the free coinage of silver would not accomplish that result, and I do not believe it will.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I was about to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator yield to me to present a conference report?

Mr. VEST. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry about the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. VEST. I should like to know the exact status of the question now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is upon the first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, which will now be stated by the Chief Clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 8, after the word "notes" where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to strike out "shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate by a previous order agreed that the bill of the House of Representatives should be substituted for and take the place of the Senate bill.

Mr. VEST. Is it in order now to move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not until after the amendments proposed by the committee have been considered.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask if there is not an amendment which I offered to this bill now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate bill has been laid upon the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I offered it to the House bill as reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not yet in order, because the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance have not been acted upon.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment is pending to the House bill reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order whenever the proper parliamentary stage arises.

Mr. FRYE. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FRYE. I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. I will withhold my report until to-morrow.

Mr. VANCE. I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and ordered to be printed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I offer certain amendments to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and also an amendment to the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that these amendments be printed in the RECORD as well as printed separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed, and also printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. VANCE's amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after enacting clause and insert:

That so much of the act approved February 28, 1878, as provides for the limitation of the coinage of silver bullion to $2,000,000 worth per month is hereby repealed.

Mr. BLAIR's amendments are as follows:

Amend the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PLUMB by adding at the end of the first section the following:

And after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1900, there shall be no legal-tender in the United States except gold and silver coin.

Also add at the end of the second section the following:

Nor shall the amount of silver coined and issued from the mints of the United States be more than four and one-half millions of dollars for each calendar month.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

From and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase and coin, in execution of the provisions of the act of February 28, 1878, silver bullion at the market price thereof worth $4,000,000 monthly.

Mr. FRYE. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 17, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 16th day of June, 1890.

UNITED STATES CONSUL.

Joseph Edward Hayden, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United States at Breslau, to fill a vacancy.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Ordnance Department.

First Lieut. Henry D. Borup, to be captain, June 15, 1890.
First Lieut. Lawrence L. Bruff, to be captain, June 15, 1890.
First Lieut. Charles H. Clark, to be captain, June 15, 1890.
First Lieut. William Crozier, to be captain, June 15, 1890.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 16, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.
The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

RELIEF AND CIVILIZATION OF THE CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. COMSTOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9952) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota."

The bill was read at length for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk has read. Is there objection?

Mr. PEEL. I do not see the chairman of our committee present.

Mr. COMSTOCK. I will state to the gentleman this is the bill that was recommended by the committee the other day.

Mr. PEEL. I simply want to ask the gentleman who calls the bill up if my recollection of the bill is right that it was all stricken out and that an item provides that the amount appropriated is to be reimbursed to the Government.

Mr. COMSTOCK. It was all stricken out and an amendment was reported by the committee, and I ask the passage of the bill as amended.

Mr. PEEL. I think the bill ought to pass. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I shall object until we know something about it.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order so that the gentleman who called it up may explain the bill for which he asks the consideration of the House.

Mr. COMSTOCK. I will explain, Mr. Speaker, to the House that the Fiftyeth Congress passed a bill entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota." Under the provisions of that bill and by virtue of a treaty with these Indians, they have ceded 4,000,000 acres of land to the Government. This bill provides for an appropriation for surveying and an allotment to Indians who take some of the land in severalty, and for the removal of the Indians to two of the reservations—Red Lake reduced and White Earth.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Does this bill involve an appropriation?

Mr. CRISP. May I ask my friend why was this not provided for in an appropriation bill?

Mr. COMSTOCK. This bill was introduced and sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who recommend its passage unanimously, and every dollar of this money appropriated for this purpose is to be refunded by the sale of the lands. The lands are to be surveyed and opened for settlement. This is a loan, and not an appropriation really, because the money is to be refunded to the Government.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. If it is a loan by the Government, it seems to me it ought to be carefully considered in Committee of the Whole, and I make objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I have two conference reports which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has conference reports which will take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BEAVER FALLS, PA.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2403) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Beaver Falls, in the State of Pennsylvania, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment, namely: Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use of the United States post-office and Government offices, in the borough of Beaver Falls and State of Pennsylvania, the cost of such site and building, complete, not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

"Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said borough of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the day specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

"Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be mailed and addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of such examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

"If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, to be composed of an officer of the Treasury Department and two other persons, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by any statement, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected. The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

"No money shall be used or applied when appropriated for the purposes mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Pennsylvania shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"The building herein provided for shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys."

And the House agree to the same.

S. L. MILLIKEN,
DANIEL KERR,
THOS. J. CLUNIE,
Managers on the part of the House.
M. S. QUAY,
G. G. VEST,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. MILLIKEN said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the formal part of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the formal part of the report? The Chair hears none.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The effect of the report is to strike out the appropriating clause and conform its form to that hitherto adopted by committees of conference on bills from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The report was adopted.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALINA, KANS.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I present the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows, namely: Strike out all of the bill and amendments, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Salina and State of Kansas, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

"Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

"Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plans, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

"If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary, and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plans, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

"The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

"No money shall be used for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Kansas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys."

And that the House agree to the same.

A. L. MILLIKEN,
HERMAN LEHLBACH,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN C. SPOONER,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

During the reading of the above report, Mr. MILLIKEN said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the formal part of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine? The Chair hears none.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The effect of the report is to reduce the limitation of expenditure from one hundred and fifty thousand to seventy-five thousand dollars, to strike out the appropriating clause in the bill, and to conform the form of the bill to that adopted by conference committees of the Senate and House from the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the votes by which the reports of the committees of conference were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PEUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 856) to amend section 1 and section 9 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1886;

CONFEDERATE AND OTHER FLAGS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio, obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following memorial, without the names; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

HEADQUARTERS OLD GUARD POST, No. 23,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Dayton, Ohio, May 30, 1890.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The undersigned, ex-soldiers and sailors, would respectfully call your attention to the propriety of enacting a law that will prohibit the use, sale, manufacture, and importation of any banner or flag purporting to be, or resembling in any way, the so-called "confederate flag" or the red flag of the anarchist, or any other so-called flag or banner of any society or class of people whose principles are at variance with the Constitution or laws of this country. Also to prevent the sending of matter through the United States mails the wrappers or outside covering of which shall contain any such representation, device, or emblem.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BURROWS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes consideration of the appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Pacific Branch, at Santa Monica, Cal.: For maintenance of six hundred members, at $150 per annum each, $90,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 84, after line 23, insert: "For farm, including same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For laundry, $7,500; in all, $222,500.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that that paragraph be amended by striking out on page 85, line 5, the word "twenty-two" and inserting "thirty-two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Marion Branch, at Marion, Ind.: For maintenance of six hundred members, at $150 per annum each, $90,000.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 7, page 85, the word "eight" in lieu of the word "six," and by inserting the words "one hundred and twenty" in lieu of the word "ninety" in line 8, so as to make the paragraph read:

"For the maintenance of eight hundred members, at $150 per annum each, $120,000."

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, although I may in part repeat on the separate amendments I intend to offer to this bill, I desire to now submit some remarks generally on the appropriations for the Marion Soldiers' Home.

On June 5, 1888, during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, the House of Representatives passed the bill (H. R. 8391) introduced by my distinguished predecessor, Hon. George W. Steele, establishing a branch of the National Soldiers' Home at the city of Marion, in Grant County, in the State of Indiana. That bill was passed without a dissenting vote; and, by that action, not only the then Representative of the Eleventh Congressional district of Indiana, but also that House, earned and received the hearty gratitude of the citizens of that locality.

When later, during the same session of that Congress, that bill passed the Senate of the United States and received the approval of President Cleveland, both the Fiftieth Congress and the President earned an enduring place in the memories of the people of that district.

No people ever felt a greater degree of pride in any trust than do the people of the district I represent in this splendid public institution, known as the "Marion Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers." I am voicing the sentiments of my constituents when I declare that we do not want the Marion Home in any way belittled or limited.

We want it made a home indeed for the gallant veterans who seek its benefits in their declining years. These veterans come from far and near. This Marion Branch is not a mere local affair, but is a national institution in which the pride and interest of the whole nation mingle.

The board of managers, of which that gallant hero, General William B. Franklin, of Connecticut, is president, has taken great interest in this new branch, and has made a recommendation as to its absolute needs, which I desire to now incorporate in my remarks at this point, and which is as follows, to wit:

Marion Branch (800 members).

Maintenance	$120,000
Hospital	50,000
Mess-hall and kitchen	30,000
Commissary and quartermaster's store-room	20,000
Officers' quarters	16,000
Headquarters	10,000
Laundry	7,500
Two additional barracks	46,000
Pumping station	4,000
Chapel	7,500
Total	311,000

This board of managers has had great experience in the control and management of the different branches of the National Home, and their recommendations ought to have great weight.

The bill under consideration reduces some of the amounts recommended by the national board of managers and omits some entirely, as will be seen by that part of the bill which I here incorporate in my remarks, and is as follows, to wit:

At the Marion Branch, at Marion, Ind.:

For maintenance of six hundred members, at $150 per annum each, $90,000.

For hospital, $30,000.

For mess-hall and kitchen, $15,000.

For company and quartermaster's store-rooms, $10,000.

For laundry, $7,500.

For two additional barracks, $46,000.

For pumping station, $4,000; in all, $202,500.

Mr. Chairman, this Marion Branch is located in one of the finest sections of the United States, upon a splendid and fertile farm of 211 acres, with good railway facilities, abundant good water and pure air, and in the midst of an intelligent, high-minded people, who are very proud of the home and want this institution provided for as liberally as any other branch.

In addition to what I have already said as to the natural and other advantages surrounding the Marion Branch, it is important to remember that the farm I have mentioned not only belongs to the United States and that jurisdiction has been properly ceded in usual form to the Federal Government by an act of the last General Assembly of the State of Indiana, but that these grounds are traversed for a half mile or more by the Mississinewa River, an important tributary of the Wabash River, and is in the heart of that great gas belt within whose bosom the mighty engines of old Mother Earth belch up great streams of heat-giving, light-producing natural gas, that element which has dispensed with the necessity of ashes and coal smoke in that region.

This mighty natural force is of incalculable advantage to the United States and was the great consideration that induced the selection of a point within the natural-gas belt for the location of this home.

Within a radius of a few miles from this home scores of great manufacturing industries are driven day and night by smokeless fires fed from the exhaustless fountains below, and thousands of homes and business rooms, as well as the great avenues of the city of Marion, are lighted and heated from the same source.

Upon this farm every want of heat and light is supplied from wells which pour their gas into every stove, fire-place, and jet where light or heat is necessary.

It is no wonder, then, that the people of Indiana, the people everywhere who understand the situation and advantages of this home, are opposed to the growth of any sentiment in this or any other Congress that the Marion Home is to be considered as of secondary importance and that only a few hundred soldiers will ever be cared for there.

I have moved to amend this bill so as to conform to the recommendations of the Board of Managers. I do not ask any extravagance in appropriations for this home, and I know that neither the Committee on Appropriations nor this House intend to be parsimonious.

I do not mean to even suggest that this committee intends to be parsimonious by cutting down the appropriations recommended by the board of managers, but I do think the reduction was mistakenly made, and I ask its correction.

There are already six barracks about completed, with a capacity of at least eight hundred members, and all this room will soon be crowded from the ranks of worthy veterans, who, a quarter of a century ago, in camp, on the hot march and in the hotter battle, earned the right to be cared for by a grateful people, not in poor-houses, but in genuine, comfortable homes such as this one.

This appropriation ought to be $120,000 for the maintenance of eight hundred members, as asked by my amendment.

As to another amendment which I will offer, that of increasing the allowance for a hospital from $30,000 to $50,000, it seems clear to me that this amendment ought to prevail, so as to have abundant room for the care of the sick and dying.

This is not war time, when the sick or wounded might need to be almost piled upon each other, to await the saw and knife and medicine of the tired surgeon. This is a time of peace, when we are building homes for the old veterans, where even the hospital ought to savor of home comfort, and not of the privations of army life. I entreat this committee to allow the amount recommended by the board of managers.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to also urge this committee to adopt, when I offer it, my amendment for the mess-room and kitchen, being the $20,000 urged by the board of managers, as entirely necessary. Why, within a year there will be eight hundred or more old soldiers in this home, and it is not necessary to build a mess-room so small that they must be divided into reliefs as they march to their morning, noon, and evening meals. There ought to be no "Fall in, second relief!" sounded in the ears of these veterans when meal time comes. The first table is none too good for any of them. The board of managers urge this matter as expedient in every point of view, particularly as to comfort and health.

I desire now to call particular attention to another need, particularly since all appropriation therefor is omitted, namely, for headquarters and for officers' quarters. I have visited these grounds myself more than once, the last time in company with Colonel Brown, of Dayton, Ohio, who is inspector-general of all these homes under direction of the board of managers. On that visit we found General A. F. Devereux, formerly of Cincinnati, in charge.

What kind of accommodations do you suppose they have there for headquarters and officers' quarters for this great United States institution? A rather small house that looked to me to be about forty years old and in no respect very comfortable.

In front of this little house, high in mid-air, was floating the Stars and Stripes, emblem of the strength and dignity of 65,000,000 of people, and if it had not been for the starry banner floating there in the chill fall wind no one would have dreamed that the United States had any headquarters there.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation offered by my amendments and recommended by the board of managers in these particulars ought to be made. I am sure that not a member of this committee would vote against these amendments if he had visited these grounds, as I have done, and seen the absolute necessity for these improvements.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the last amendment which I will offer, namely: For a chapel, $7,500, no appropriation for which is provided in this bill, although recommended by the board of managers in the sum I have named. It seems to me there can be no earthly ground for refusing this, and I do not believe the members of this committee will refuse.

Although this home has been opened but a few weeks, already one of the old comrades has been mustered out of the thinning Grand Army below into the growing Grand Army above. He has answered his last roll-call.

Many more, increasing with mournful rapidity, will soon answer "Here!" no more in this life. Ought not these men to have a peaceful place, the gift of the nation they gave so much for, in which to listen to the message of hope, peace, and forgiveness from Sabbath to Sabbath during the few years yet left them? Should they not have a peaceful altar where their remains might be carried when the battle of life is over with them, and where kindly faces might stoop over the silent face of the sleeper and drop the sympathizing tear for him who may have left neither kith nor kin to pay the last sad tribute of affection?

Mr. Chairman, when we think how freely this body has given from the public Treasury for other public purposes, let us not hesitate to give enough for so worthy an object as this worthy monument of a nation's appreciation of her soldier poor, the Volunteer Soldiers' Home.

Mr. Chairman, I desire now to call the particular attention of members of the committee to the first amendment. I felt upon an examination of this bill that there must have been a misapprehension as to the number of barracks which were already completed at Marion and as to the capacity of those barracks, and on Saturday last I received a telegram in response to one which I had sent asking information on the subject. I had dispatched inquiring as to the number of barracks completed, and here is the reply:

General Devereux reports six barracks completed.

HOUCK & WRIGHT.

General Devereux is in charge as superintendent of the Marion Branch of the Soldiers' Home, and from the information he gives it turns out that there are six barracks completed instead of four, with a capacity for the accommodation of seven hundred and fifty or eight hundred members. From the large number of old soldiers now unable to support themselves and distributed among the poor-houses of the land, I am sure the members of this committee will agree with me that it would be in the interest of economy to have all the space that is now ready for their occupancy utilized, and I am sure that long before the completion of even half of the coming fiscal year there will be accommodation for eight hundred of the old soldiers at that branch, if proper provision is made by this appropriation bill.

For these reasons I have moved to strike out "six" and insert "eight" and also strike out "ninety" and insert "one hundred and twenty," making this an appropriation of $120,000 for the maintenance of eight hundred members. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this branch is one which has been constructed under the provisions of the act of July 29, 1888. That act passed this House without a dissenting vote and was passed in like manner by the Senate, and I am sure that the old soldiers, not alone of Indiana, but wherever they need the benefit of such a home, feel deeply indebted, not only to my distinguished predecessor who introduced the bill, but to the Fiftieth Congress for the passage of that bill.

The people of my district take a peculiar pride in this institution, and now that it is thus far completed they take great interest in seeing that it shall be utilized to the fullest extent. The home is located upon a farm of 211 acres upon the Mississinewa River, near the city of Marion. Upon the farm itself a large number of gas wells have been sunk, and are now supplying all the light and heat that are needed for the institution. I hope that the members of this committee will feel that instead of being extravagant it is in the interest of economy to make this additional appropriation. If these barracks will accommodate 800 members why should we make an appropriation for only 600 and none for the additional 200? I feel that this is a very important matter, and I have tried to do my full duty in relation to it in connection with the Committee on Appropriations. Early in the session I introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee felt that it belonged more properly to the Committee on Appropriations and it was referred there. I sought out the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations repeatedly, but, through no fault of theirs, and yet through no fault of my own, I was never able to have as full a consultation with them in regard to the items of this bill as I desired. I think the subcommittee in recommending an appropriation of $90,000 for 600 members at the Marion Home acted under a misapprehension as to the number of barracks completed, under the impression that there were but four of those barracks and that they could not accommodate more than 600.

In this connection I want to call attention to this fact: At the time General Franklin, the president of the board of managers of the national homes, was before the Committee on Military Affairs, but four of these barracks had been constructed, though two more were fast approaching completion. Since that time those two have been completed, and, as I understand, are now ready for occupancy. I hope the amendment I have offered will meet the approval of the subcommittee on appropriations, and also of the chairman of the committee, with whom I have not been able to have the conference I would have liked.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if I can have for a moment the attention of members of the Committee of the Whole and of my friend from Indiana, I think I can satisfy them that this amendment should not be adopted. The five old homes, to say nothing about those at Marion and Santa Monica, have capacity for 10 per cent. more inmates than we have appropriated for. This perhaps is proper enough; but we have for the coming year increased enormously—over double—the ordinary increase at the soldiers' homes. For instance, the average number of inmates in 1888 was 10,681; in 1889, 11,727. In 1890 we appropriated for 13,200. In this bill we provide for 15,500. It will be observed that the increase is extraordinary. We have increased the appropriations for soldiers' homes proper to the amount of $605,000 and over. In addition to this, we provide for 4,000 inmates at the State homes at $100 apiece under the legislation of 1888. So that I may say the provision recommended in this bill for soldiers' homes is nearly double the ordinary increase heretofore.

One word further. We gave very great attention to the appropriations and recommendations touching the soldiers' homes. We had before us time and again General Franklin and other members of the board of managers. Let me read from the evidence of General Franklin:

The CHAIRMAN. You have four barracks at Marion now; or is it six?

General FRANKLIN. It is four.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any others under contract?

General FRANKLIN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any appropriated for?

General FRANKLIN. No, sir; there is no appropriation for any. The completion of those four exhausted the appropriation. They are completed and occupied.

The CHAIRMAN. That gives you room for seven hundred men?

General FRANKLIN. No, there is not room for that number at Marion, but only room for five hundred. There is room for one hundred and twenty-five to each barracks.

General Franklin further says:

I ought to say that you appropriated $40,000 for maintenance of the inmates of the branch from January until June of this year, for the four hundred men that are there now. That was done by a special act, and that is now becoming exhausted. The men are living on that fund, and have been since the bill passed.

The CHAIRMAN. How many people have you there?

General FRANKLIN. Three hundred and seventy men.

Then there was a long examination following, from which it appears that they have the four barracks and four only; they have no hospital, no kitchen or mess hall, no building for quartermaster's stores. For these buildings we recommend appropriations in this bill. But it will be time for the snow to fly, and probably longer, before those buildings are completed; in the mean time these barracks have to be occupied in part by these officers.

We have recommended appropriations for two additional barracks and then we make provision for six hundred inmates, far more than there can be for half a year. But it was supposed that upon the completion of the two new barracks the number of inmates would average six hundred, taking the year round, less than six hundred for the first six months and more than six hundred for the last six months. Now, in view of these extraordinary increases which we have made, after the fullest examination, I am satisfied the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations should be adhered to and that this amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to make a few further remarks upon this subject.

Mr. CANNON. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an extract from one of the daily papers published in the city of Marion. This article appeared about five months ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SOLDIERS' HOME.

The first two barracks at the soldiers' home are approaching completion and will be ready for occupancy the 25th of this month. Workmen are now putting on the finishing touches in the way of painting and varnishing.

The third barrack is under roof and in the hands of the plasterers, and the slate roof is being placed on the fourth. The stone work is completed on the fifth and sixth, and all, except one and two, which were to have been delivered to the Government January 1, will easily be completed within the time called for in the contract.

The barracks as they are completed will be occupied. Their ordinary capacity is about one hundred and twenty-five men each, but they will be crowded by placing cots in the attic, thus giving accommodation to about one hundred and fifty men each. With the six barracks completed May 1, we will have not less than nine hundred veterans with us.

The expenses up to date will about exhaust the original appropriation, and no additional funds will be available until June 1. For the purpose of carrying on the work the board of managers has asked $311,000, and Congressman MARTIN has introduced a bill appropriating $250,000. Out of this amount, whatever it may be, a reasonable sum at least will be used for erecting officers' quarters.—Marion Chronicle.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the board of managers of the national homes recommend $120,000 as the amount that would be necessary for maintaining the members of the Marion Branch of the Soldiers' Home. On last Friday night, after the conclusion of our session here, I telegraphed to Messrs. Houck & Wright, prominent gentlemen of Marion, editors and proprietors of one of the daily papers there, asking them how many barracks had already been completed. I send to the desk to be read their reply, which I received on Saturday morning.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARION, IND., June 14, 1890.

Hon. A. N. MARTIN, M. C.:

General Devereux reports six barracks completed.

HOUCK & WRIGHT.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there certainly must have been some misapprehension at the time General Franklin was before the board. These gentlemen, whose telegram has just been read, live in the immediate locality; and while I do not mean to question at all any statement made by General Franklin, here is the statement of men whom I know personally and well, and who I know understand what they are talking about, that there are actually six barracks there about ready for occupancy. Before the fiscal year will have half run out there will be accommodations, so far as barracks are concerned, for eight hundred men.

Now, if that be true—and in that connection we should weigh carefully the recommendation of the national board for an allowance for eight hundred members at $120 each—would it be good economy to make an appropriation of only $90,000 for six hundred members the year round?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me just there?

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that there will be eight hundred members during the year.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Provision should be made for that number.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose it was. Before this is done there will be a less number than that. Now, this appropriation is available for the entire year. There may be eight hundred for a part of the year and a less number for the remainder of the year. But in making the average, and from the very best data that could be brought to bear, the committee believe that they have made an exceedingly liberal allowance.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. If the telegram just read states the matter correctly, they are ready now for the occupancy of eight hundred.

Mr. CANNON. And just there a word further. It was only last week we exhausted this whole question from the governor of the home himself, from whose report I read, and I think that it is better information than mere newspaper statements. And I submit to my friend from Indiana that with this extraordinary increase made for the inmates of the Soldiers' Home, which is sufficient, it is a question of soldiers and their relief, and not a question of how many should be had at Marion or how many at the Dayton Home.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman in this connection the further fact that if an appropriation of $120,000 is made, which is admitted will be sufficient and which I claim will be necessary, it does not necessarily expend the money if the views of the gentleman be correct. If we appropriate the money and it is needed, at the rate of $150 per member, it will be expended under the authority of law. If it is not needed, if it is not expended, then the money will revert to the Treasury. If, on the other hand, the appropriation is not made and the money is needed, then, of course, unusual and unnecessary hardships are entailed upon these people.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, according to the theory the gentleman propounds, why not make short work of the appropriations and appropriate all of the money in the public Treasury for the public service? If it is not needed it will not be used.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, this matter has been thoroughly exhausted, and in the views of the committee, after a most careful examination of the question, we have made liberal provision.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Is not the manuscript from which the gentleman is reading—the printed manuscript—the statement of General Franklin made early in the spring?

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; it was made last week.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I mean about the four barracks?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; it was made on the 3d of June, 1890.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I hope, Mr. Chairman, without occupying further time of the committee, the amendment will be adopted, and I ask a vote upon it.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have heard it repeatedly stated here on the floor, during this session of Congress, that there were more than twenty thousand deserving veterans of the Union Army in the poor-houses of this country. When I heard that statement made I did not know whether it was accurate or not, nor do I know now. But if it be true or if it approximate the truth, then it seems to me that this question about whether $120,000 is necessary to be appropriated for the maintenance of the soldiers' homes, or whether $90,000 will be sufficient, is quibbling over a matter that this Congress certainly ought not to quibble over.

If there be twenty thousand veterans in the poor-houses of this country, they ought not to be there. That is a matter we will not dispute about, because the duty of supporting them is upon the General Government, and not upon the States or the counties. They should be the wards of the Union, and not the wards of the counties or States. And I desire to say in this House here and now that from personal observation of the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans., I believe that $10,000 expended for such an institution as that does more real good and is better expended than $100,000 given away in pensions, as this House has been giving them. It is not right to stand here and inquire Will all of this money be needed during the year in these various homes? but is there likely to be a contingency arise which will require the expenditure of it? If so, it ought to be available; and if the contingency does not arise, and your appropriation is larger than needed at the time, the Government loses nothing, for it is covered back into the Treasury to be used for any other purpose during the next fiscal year. We should be safe, therefore, in making the appropriations large enough to meet every want that may arise, for there is no more meritorious measure of appropriation, in my judgment, than this.

Mr. CANNON. A single word, Mr. Chairman, at this point. I say again, as against 11,727 people provided for in 1889, that this bill provides and appropriates for 15,500 in soldiers' homes and $100 each for 4,000 more in State homes. A liberal provision, I think. I am willing to rest upon that.

One further statement and I will ask for a vote. That gentleman says it is well to provide liberally. I assent to that proposition. The committee assented to it, and we have done it. And I call his attention to the fact that last week this House adopted a conference report which will take hundreds and multiplied hundreds of these people out of the soldiers' homes, worthy soldiers, by giving them a pension where they now receive none. I am backed up in my statement by my own observations as well as by the views of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. TARSNEY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. TARSNEY. Will $96 a year take these people from the poor-houses and support them?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but that is not all.

Mr. PETERS. The average sum is larger.

Mr. MORRILL. It provides $144 a year.

Mr. TARSNEY. Six dollars a month, the minimum, would be $72 a year only, not $96.

Mr. CANNON. And $12 a month, the maximum, would be $144 a year, and no man will—

Mr. TARSNEY. Are they all going to get the maximum amount?

Mr. CANNON. No man can be admitted to the Soldiers' Home unless he is disabled to such an extent that he will get $12 a month under the new legislation; and let me say to my friend that $144 a year, given to the soldier for his support in his own neighborhood, is better than $150 a year expended for his support in a soldiers' home, better for the Government, better for the soldier, better for humanity, better for everybody concerned, and from every standpoint.

Mr. PICKLER. That is right.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 61, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, $30,000.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "fifty;" so as to make it read, "For hospital, $50,000."

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I desire now to send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the recommendations of the national board of managers as to the amount necessary for this branch of the Soldiers' Home.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, $50,000; for mess-hall and kitchen, $30,000; for commissary and quartermaster's store-room, $20,000; for officers' quarters (three), $16,000; for headquarters, $10,000; for laundry, $7,500; for two additional barracks, $46,000; for pumping-station, $4,000; for chapel, $7,500.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that with the large experience these managers of the national home have had, their recommendation of $50,000 for a hospital at this place ought to be given very great consideration, and that the amount recommended by them, $50,000, ought to be allowed rather than the amount which the committee placed in this bill, $30,000. I want to call the attention of the committee further to the fact that, while there may be reason for the same, yet it is a fact that the appropriation made for the Pacific branch at Santa Monica, Cal., for six hundred members is $90,000, an appropriation is also made at that place for the hospital of the sum of $50,000, it being a branch of the home which I understand is no larger than the one at Marion. Inasmuch as the committee have followed the recommendation of the board in the one case (and I believe the recommendations of the board were made carefully and with a full understanding of the situation), I therefore move the amendment to increase the amount from $30,000 to $50,000, which will place it just the same as the amount allowed to the Pacific branch.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman. I want to say that this recommendation for a hospital at Marion for $30,000 was after the fullest inquiry by the committee and the fullest examination of General Franklin. And General Franklin was asked, as shown by that examination, how much, for a soldiers' home calculated to take care of one thousand inmates, the reduction should be both at Marion and Santa Monica, and he said $30,000 for the hospital at Marion, and reduced to $50,000 at Santa Monica, the difference being in the location, no doubt, and in the cost of building. The committee, I think I may say, were unanimously of the opinion that the improvements should be made at Marion, Ind., at the new home there, and at Santa Monica, Cal., for one thousand inmates at each place, and recommended appropriations accordingly.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mess-hall and kitchen, $15,000.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "fifteen," in line 10, and insert the word "thirty," making it read "$30,000."

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few observations in regard to this. I know that on this particular point as well as the other the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has spoken of, General Franklin was examined before the committee. I have examined what he stated upon that occasion and I want to call the attention of the committee and of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to this fact, that he thought that the amount for this purpose should be as recommended, $30,000, and that $15,000 was not sufficient. He thought in the interest of health and cleanliness that the amount appropriated ought to be $30,000 in order that it would not be necessary to divide up the members of the home into reliefs or detachments when the bell sounded for dinner or supper. The amount appropriated in this bill, $15,000, is with the expectation that when breakfast, dinner, or supper time comes the members will be divided into reliefs, that they will have to eat as members of the first, second, and third relief, and I for my part do not think that ought to be done.

Mr. CANNON. Here is just what General Franklin did say:

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose it was the sense of Congress that you should have a mess-hall and kitchen at Marion that would require a change at least of two services at each meal instead of one service, how much would that decrease the $30,000 estimate?

General FRANKLIN. It would decrease it one-half.

The CHAIRMAN. That would leave it $15,000 for building a mess-hall and kitchen?

General FRANKLIN. Yes, sir; that would give a mess-hall and kitchen of about one-half the capacity for which we have estimated.

The CHAIRMAN. The kitchen is sufficient for one thousand men, but the mess-hall would be sufficient for only about one-half of that number?

General FRANKLIN. Yes.

Now, this hospital or barracks, the whole of this establishment, is intended for one thousand men, and the $15,000 will complete the kitchen and the mess-hall.

It will build a dining-room that will seat five hundred men at one time, and I submit that that is a large enough dining-room. It is true if there should happen to be a thousand people there (and that will not happen very often) they will be required to have a first and a second table; but down here at Hampton they have now and have had for years a first, second, and third table. It takes a little longer to dine, but I submit that we have provided liberally from every standpoint, and that it is liberal enough if you have a dining-room that will seat five hundred people at one time. Time is no object there, and it makes no difference whether they all get their meals at 12 o'clock or half of them at 12 and half at half past 12.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he recollects the statement made early in the session concerning this matter? Statement was made by the managers that there were only fifty men at that home.

Mr. CANNON. But there has been an increase since then.

Mr. McCOMAS. An increase since February, but is not the limit six hundred men at this place?

Mr. CANNON. We are laying out a plan for a thousand.

Mr. McCOMAS. They only spoke of six hundred in February.

Mr. CANNON. I believe that is so. I want to say to my friend—and I appreciate his desire in offering this amendment—we know when we get these matters in our district, that sometimes we feel this and that and the other is due to the institution. I do not complain. I have no doubt that I would do the same as my friend does under similar circumstances. But let it be recollected that this matter of soldiers' homes is for the soldiers. It is not for the locality that it be built a little larger or a little smaller.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I desire to call attention to other language of General Franklin in regard to this matter on page 100:

The CHAIRMAN. Don't you think it is good economy, as this is a temporary work and can not last over twenty-five years, to cut down so as to seat five hundred men at a time?

General FRANKLIN. That is a question for Congress to decide. If you have one thousand men it is better to dine them all at one time. If you seat five hundred men at a time, you have got to clear off the tables, or else the other five hundred men will be eating on dirty tables, and I think decency requires, when it is possible, that all should be seated at one table.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose you read all.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. You read what follows.

Mr. CANNON. I will read it:

The CHAIRMAN. This is a pretty good home at Hampton, and they do not do it there.

General FRANKLIN. It would be a good deal better if they had a dining-room big enough for all.

The CHAIRMAN. They seem to get along very well; it does not injure their health in any way.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate, I think, as fully as does the gentleman from Illinois that this home is not intended for any locality, that it is not intended for the Eleventh Congressional district of Indiana, nor even for the great State of Indiana itself, which sent nearly two hundred thousand gallant soldiers to battle for the Union, but it is an offering showing the good will of the people of the United States towards Union soldiers everywhere and they will come from far and near. I will state that those who have given much attention to this matter say that the old homes are crowded and that they are turning them away from Dayton, from Leavenworth, and from other homes. So it seems to me that in making this provision for a new home we ought to make it large enough to accommodate as many as we can.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I will read a statement which shows to the contrary. The extraordinary increase of 15,500 as against 11,000 in 1889 does not fill up all the homes by 10 per cent.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For company and quartermaster's store-rooms, $10,000;
For laundry, $7,500;
For two additional barracks, $46,000;
For pumping station, $4,000; in all $222,500.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, at the close of line 16, on page 85, the following:

"For officers' quarters, $16,000."

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Now, I desire to say a few words, and wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations particularly to this item.

Last fall, during the month of November, I visited the soldiers' home at Marion, Ind., and I found there, as is the case to-day, that although the Government of the United States is building a soldiers' home which will be for the people of the whole country, there are absolutely no quarters there worthy of the name. I found General Devereux, who is in charge there as superintendent of the soldiers' home, and the officers connected with that institution in a little old farm-house which must be forty or fifty years of age, entirely insufficient for the accommodation of the officers and entirely insufficient for office purposes, entirely insufficient in any way for carrying on the business which must necessarily be conducted in connection with this home; and I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this fact.

I indulged the hope that this had been overlooked rather than that it was intentional. I think that this bill ought to provide for the building of quarters even if all the rest of the amendments, except one more which I want to yet offer, have been rejected. We are building a great soldiers' home there, though not as large as some others. We are building it there, and yet leaving it without any headquarters and without quarters or any place for the transaction of business that must be conducted in connection with that home. I feel that this home ought to be made to look as well as other homes.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. Do I understand your amendment to be for officers' headquarters?

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. For officers' quarters and business rooms.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, the committee considered this matter, and we took good care of this whole building, as the report will show, from an economic point of view. Look here:

For laundry, $7,500.
For two additional barracks, $46,000.
For company and quartermaster's store-rooms, $10,000.

We intelligently considered it. So far as these officers' quarters are concerned, by and by, when we have provided for the soldiers, we will then take care of the officers. This amendment is $16,000 for officers' quarters. The information of the committee is that the farm-house which the officers are now quartered in is better than the average farm-house, and they can very comfortably stay there pending the time of the completion of this home. We shall, of course, make further appropriations for this home hereafter, and in the mean time the officers can be very comfortable there.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana; and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, yeas 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 85, after line 16, insert "For chapel, $7,500."

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I feel authorized to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to consent to this amendment, the last that I intend to offer upon this bill. Here is a soldiers' home where there will be opportunity for the accommodation of eight hundred persons, and yet there is no place for them to assemble on the Sabbath day or at any time for any purpose of worship in which they may desire to engage. It seems to me that this amendment, if no other, ought to be adopted without question, and that a chapel should be erected at that home. In this connection I want to say to the committee that the home is located about 2 or 2½ miles from the city of Marion, and, of course, at a considerable distance from any place where the inmates can have an opportunity of attending upon any kind of religious service. More than that, it is well known to all that the old soldiers who are sent to these homes are not in a condition of health or strength to enable them to travel even 1 mile, much less 2½ or 3 miles, and I ask the committee to adopt this amendment providing for the erection of the chapel.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman has offered that amendment, because it gives me an opportunity to state why the committee do not at this time make recommendation of an appropriation for a chapel at this home. Later, when we get the soldiers at this place under roof, where they can be kept warm, and can get something to eat, and have wherewithal to be clothed, I think it very likely that it will be the sense of Congress to make an appropriation to build a chapel. But, Mr. Chairman, on this general question, I doubt the wisdom of the erection of a chapel at any soldiers' home that is near to a center of population where there are churches. If there is any one thing that can be justly said against soldiers' homes it is that the old soldiers are there isolated to a great extent, and that there is not sufficient contact between them and other citizens. That criticism has been made. I do not make it myself, but it has been made, and I think it would be strange if there was not justice and force in the criticism. Let me read in this connection an extract from the report of the inspector-general touching the home at Togus, in Maine, and I may add that he says he found the same state of things at the other homes. I read:

During four days' general observation of the members of this home I was deeply impressed with the irksome idleness of over one thousand men. A large number of them would leave their quarters in the morning after breakfast and wander listlessly forth hither and thither over the grounds and surrounding fields and along the roads, without purpose, like withered leaves in a languid and fitful autumn wind. Many others would lie on their beds all the day. With this long-continued lack of occupation their physical strength must dwindle and their mental powers decay. Conversations with the surgeons and officers and with some of the members confirmed this opinion.

That is the criticism the inspector makes. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have entered upon this work, but I think it would have been far better if we had given attention earlier to legislation that would have taken every one of these men out of these "homes" and surrounded them with real homes and friends; and I want to say again that, in view of this condition of things, I think their condition will be far better if they have to go out once a week, in response to the call of the church-bell, to mingle in worship with the citizens of the community at large.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has overlooked one fact in connection with this matter. As I have already said, in order to get to any church these crippled old soldiers will have to leave the home and, without other means of travel than walking, go a distance of 2½ or 3 miles to reach church, and it seems to me that ought not to be required of them. Those who have been in the habit, as many of them doubtless have, of attending divine service from Sabbath to Sabbath, ought to have an opportunity to continue to do so.

Although this home has been opened only about sixty days, already one of the old veterans has answered his last roll-call, has gone to join the great army beyond, and when he breathed out his life at that soldiers' home there was not a place on the premises where his remains could be taken for religious service and where his companions could gather about him to pay their last respects. It seems to me that if there is an item in connection with this bill that I ought to insist upon and that the Committee on Appropriations ought to concede it is this appropriation for a chapel.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana; and the Chairman stated that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, yeas 40.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana, and Mr. CANNON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, yeas 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In all, $2,601,765.45.

Mr. CANNON moved to amend by striking out "one," in line 19, and inserting "eleven;" so as to read: "$2,611,765.45."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the clause which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Board of Managers for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall hereafter consist of eleven members, and the following-named persons be, and are hereby, appointed managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, that is to say: Edmund N. Morrill, of Kansas, for the unexpired term of office of John A. Martin, deceased; Alfred L. Pearson, of Pennsylvania, for the unexpired term of office of John F. Hartman, deceased; and William B. Franklin of Connecticut, John C. Black of Illinois, Augustus B. Farnham of Maine, and George W. Steele of Indiana, for the terms of office commencing on the 21st day of April, 1890, to fill vacancies occasioned by the expiration of terms of office and by the increase provided hereby.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In what particular does this change the present law?

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I might make the further point that the proposed legislation is unconstitutional. That is a point which ought to be made by the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to which I hope there will be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 20, on page 85, add the following:

"That the following-named persons be, and are hereby, appointed Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to wit: Edmund N. Morrill, of Kansas, for the unexpired term of office of John A. Martin, deceased; Alfred L. Pearson, of Pennsylvania, for the unexpired term of office of John F. Hartranft, deceased."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. This amendment provides simply for filling vacancies now existing by reason of death.

Mr. BREWER. For the purpose at least of getting some information, I make a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be allowed by unanimous consent, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] a question. I understand there are now two vacancies in the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. In reply to the gentleman's question, I will say that Mr. Martin, of Kansas, who was local manager for the soldiers' home at Leavenworth is dead; and this House, the beginning of April, passed a bill naming the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Martin, and also naming General Alfred L. Pearson to fill the vacancy from the State of Pennsylvania occasioned by the death of General Hartranft. It is important that these vacancies should be promptly filled; and the Committee on Military Affairs have agreed on the selection of these two gentlemen.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The bill which we passed is in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. It is; but it has not been acted on, and we do not know when it will be.

Mr. SPINOLA. These are the two names agreed upon by our committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Ohio. They are.

Mr. BREWER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. I do not make any point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. That this is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inquire where the appointment of these officers now lies.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, it lies with Congress. I am speaking from general recollection. I know that from time to time the Committee on Military Affairs have reported resolutions making appointments or changes in the management of this board. My understanding from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] is that there are now two vacancies, and that in view of this fact the Committee on Military Affairs recommended the appointment of our friend from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] for the Kansas vacancy and General Pearson for the Pennsylvania vacancy. I know this mode of appointment has been the practice, but I have not examined the law. Gentlemen of the Committee on Military Affairs, I suppose, can speak as to that.

Mr. PETERS. I think this amendment does not change existing law at all. It is simply a provision for filling vacancies.

The CHAIRMAN. The appointment of these officers, as the Chair understands, is vested by law in Congress.

Mr. CANNON. These appointments, I have been informed, are made by Congress.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I do not see how they can be.

Mr. BAKER. These appointments are recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question being taken, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. BYNUM)—ayes 50, noes 36.

Mr. BYNUM called for tellers, but withdrew the demand.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Back pay and bounty: For payment of amounts for arrears of pay of two and three year volunteers that may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1891, so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in the fourth and fifth lines the words "so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated" and insert in lieu of it "$350,000."

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, in charge of this bill, in his opening remarks gave to the committee as the amount that the bill carried the sum of $27,975,143.22. It occurs to me that in making his aggregate he did not take into consideration or include in the sum total of the appropriations recommended the expenditures which are contemplated by the item under consideration and also by the three items which follow.

The policy suggested by the majority of the committee, as it appears in this bill, reverses the policy which has existed heretofore in regard to this character of appropriations, and which has been pursued in the framing of these bills for the last sixteen years. We are called upon now, instead of making a definite appropriation, to give to the accounting officers of the Treasury authority to disburse money without regard to a supervision by Congress as is now provided by law. It seems to me that this is a most unwise policy. In my judgment it is not a proper system of framing an appropriation bill, and would be unwise for the House to adopt. I think the better plan would be to adhere to the policy which has obtained since 1874, and make this a definite appropriation, as it should be. We are informed that the estimated amount which would be required for this item is about $350,000 for the next fiscal year, and adhering to the policy heretofore pursued, it will be better and wiser to insert the actual amount in the bill, and also definite instead of indefinite sums, as is proposed in the three following items.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire, in accordance with the understanding had with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to speak without limit. I will not occupy any considerable time, but prefer this request, as I may desire to occupy more than the five minutes allowed under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman will proceed without limit.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the minority of the committee object to the indefinite appropriation provided in this bill and found on page 86. Instead of appropriating a specific and definite amount for back pay and bounty the bill carries an appropriation in the following terms:

So much therefor as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

The committee will remember that this new departure in respect to appropriations for the payment of this class of claims was inaugurated when the urgent deficiency bill was under consideration at the beginning of this session, and that the change led to some considerable discussion. At that time a point of order was made against a similar provision in the deficiency bill for the reason that it changed existing law. After a somewhat protracted discussion the chairman of the Committee of the Whole waived his right to pass upon the question and gracefully referred it to the committee, where, by a bare majority vote, it was decided that the form of the appropriation was in order under the rules. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the law relating to this class of claims. The law provides that—

It shall be the duty of the several accounting officers of the Treasury to continue to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of all claims under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of said section (section 5), and the Secretary of the Treasury shall report the amount due each claimant at the commencement of each session to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Presiding Officer of the Senate, who shall lay the same before their respective Houses for consideration.

Mr. Chairman, that is the language of the law which was enacted June 20, 1874, and the policy of definite appropriations has continued from that date until the beginning of this session. These back-pay and bounty claims have first been audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury and then certified under this act to Congress for "consideration." Of course, Mr. Chairman, the language of the statute, "for consideration," necessarily carries with it the right of approval or of rejection. The word "consideration" can mean nothing else, and such consideration must of necessity precede payment. For sixteen years that was the construction of Congress under all administrations. When the urgent deficiency bill was being considered the minority of the committee earnestly opposed the change then made under the circumstances to which I have already adverted. The issue then presented is the same issue involved in the items under consideration.

Our contention is not as to the propriety of the payment of meritorious claims, but that the law which requires the supervision of Congress before payment should be adhered to, whilst at the same time a definite appropriation should be made for the payment of this class of claims, after the "consideration" required by the statute. The act of June 20, 1874, was prepared by the Treasury Department under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and its intent was to provide an additional safeguard for the Treasury. These indefinite provisions, found on page 86, in fact repeal that provision of the law which requires "consideration;" and therefore the certification to Congress can only be for information, inasmuch as it would be entirely profitless to consider these claims after they had been paid.

No one on this side of the House, Mr. Chairman, objects to the payment of any claim which shall have been found under the statute to be meritorious, but we simply insist that the law, which has received the approval of every Secretary of the Treasury since its enactment, shall be maintained in its integrity. Its operations have been wholesome and have heretofore prevented the payment of unauthorized and fraudulent claims. Some few years since, as gentlemen will remember, over $100,000 of what were called "insurance claims" passed the auditing officers of the Treasury, and but for the safeguards of this statute these fraudulent claims would have been allowed and paid.

Mr. Chairman, if the law which has heretofore required the supervision of Congress is to be ignored and disregarded, I shall at least insist upon the continuance of the policy of making definite appropriations. The people are entitled to know the exact amount of their Governmental expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], a few moments since, invited the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the amount reported carried in this bill, as found on page 97, is $27,926,000, when in fact it is very much more than that total. To speak plainly and come directly to the issue involved I will say that the effect of these indefinite appropriating clauses in the urgent deficiency bill and the bill now being considered is to conceal and take from the aggregate of the appropriations for the current fiscal year, and until after the November elections, the sum of $1,092,000.

According to the estimates of the Treasury Department there was concealed in the urgent deficiency bill $390,000. There is concealed—and I use the word in the sense that it does not appear in the total—there is concealed in this bill, for payments of arrears of pay for two and three year volunteers, $350,000; there is concealed in this bill for the amount due for bounty to volunteers $300,000; there is concealed in this bill under the bounty act of July 28, 1866, $30,000; there is concealed in this bill for commutation of rations $22,000.

These amounts are the estimates of the Treasury officials and are more likely to be under than over the actual expenditures. There is, therefore, concealed on page 86 of this bill, which amount does not appear in the sum total of the appropriations for the next fiscal year, $702,000. In other words, instead of this bill aggregating $27,926,000, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the aggregate ought to be stated at $28,628,000, or $702,000 more than it is.

So that, Mr. Chairman, the effect of these indefinite clauses is to withhold from the people of the United States until after the elections information showing that the aggregate expenditures are $1,092,000 greater than they purport to be on the face of the bills. I know, Mr. Chairman, that the exigency of our friends on the other side is somewhat great, and I sympathize with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in his efforts to stay the tide of extravagance and prevent an unusual increase of appropriations. We have all witnessed how day after day, in that aisle over there, he has protested against the extravagance of his own party, and it is in view of his economic loneliness that I have been coerced into a measure of sympathy; but I can not, Mr. Chairman, go to the extent of following him when he proposes to conceal by indefinite legislation the appropriation of $1,092,000 of the people's money. We have witnessed, Mr. Chairman, not only the economic stress of my friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON], but we have been lookers on at the unusual enforced financial restraints manifested along the whole line of the Republican party.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a marked change in the attitude of that party in respect to some measures. We all remember that about eight days of the last session were occupied by the Republican Representatives in attempting to pass a bill which provided in round numbers $18,000,000 in what is known as the direct-tax bill. Yet, notwithstanding the zeal of our Republican friends on that occasion in behalf of this measure, it is a matter of great comment that not one of them in this Congress has risen to urge the passage of the bill although its importance was deemed such as to entitle it to recognition in their last national platform. This inattention and neglect of the direct-tax bill probably results from the fact that the appropriations of the present session under the most economic management will be very largely increased over the last Congress.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to estimate what that increase will be, but it is understood that it will be very great. I have referred to the direct-tax bill. There is the Blair bill also, and other bills carrying enormous sums of money that were urged by the Republican party in the last Congress, whilst the Democratic side of the House was censured for not passing them; and yet, after seven months of the present session have passed, not a gentleman on that side of the House has uplifted his voice either in behalf of the direct-tax bill, the Blair bill, or any other of these bills that were so strenuously urged by the Republican party during the last Congress—

Mr. BLAND. The French spoliation claims.

Mr. DOCKERY. My friend from Missouri suggests the French spoliation claims. Why, Mr. Chairman, we all recollect how the present Speaker of the House, then the leader of the minority, stood on that side of the Chamber and hour after hour urged upon my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that he should consent that the provision providing for the payment of those musty, antiquated, century claims have a place in the deficiency bill. For seven months the Republican party has exercised arbitrary control over this body, and yet no member has insisted on the payment of these French spoliation claims. We all understand the reason for this inaction—a wholesome fear of the people. I apprehend that our Republican friends are just as anxious as they ever were to pass those old, questionable claims, the direct-tax bill, and the Blair bill; but, confronted as they are with rules which permit an uninterrupted passage-way to the Treasury, the leaders of that side have been intimidated and coerced by the strong probability of a Treasury deficit, and have therefore reluctantly consented that some of those measures should go over to the short session of Congress which will be held after the fall elections.

Mr. McCOMAS. Do I understand my friend from Missouri to be indicting the Republican party for extravagance, and sustaining his indictment by a list of appropriations that they do not make?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think my friend does not misapprehend my position. I am arraigning the Republican party for hypocrisy upon these public measures. [Applause on the Democratic side and cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand, then, that you are going to relieve the Republican party from the charge of extravagance.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish that I could relieve the Republican party from the charge of extravagance, but their record forbids such generosity and leniency. It is true that no attempt has thus far been made to pass the direct-tax bill, the Blair bill, or the French spoliation bill—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Or the subsidy.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the subsidy is with us. It will be passed shortly. But even deducting the enormous sums embraced in those measures, the appropriations will still be very burdensome, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] in his frank and honest way will doubtless so state when he gets the floor.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does my friend take into that amount the enormous deficiencies that have come to us as a legacy from the last Administration?

Mr. DOCKERY. I know of no deficiencies that were made by the last Administration that are unusual or extraordinary. I trust that the gentleman does not refer to the deficiencies that come to this Congress that were made by bureau officers in violation of law and which have led to their removal.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will take occasion soon to recite to my friend a list of the deficiencies that came to us as a legacy from the last Administration. I will recount to my friend and bring them to his memory a little later.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; I hope my friend will explain some of these deficiencies, because they require explanation. The country desires information.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us return for a moment to the item under consideration. We desire to appropriate for back pay and bounty every dollar that the Treasury Department estimates is necessary.

In this view my friend from Texas has offered an amendment providing the $350,000 that the Department estimates for pay of two and three year volunteers, and it will be followed up by other amendments which will provide the full estimate. It can not be, Mr. Chairman, that the object of this appropriation is to afford speedy payment, because the minority propose to appropriate $702,000, which is all the Department estimates is necessary.

And now, Mr. Chairman, but a single further word in conclusion. Before this money can possibly be expended Congress will be in session again, and if the Department officials find they have underestimated they can send in a supplemental estimate, so that we can amply provide for any deficiency likely to arise.

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the four items of appropriation designated and I would ask him how much he has estimated will be involved in these four items of appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. The four that are now being considered?

Mr. SAYERS. Allowances for back pay and bounty, and for the commutation of rations.

Mr. CANNON. It is estimated that it will take at least $702,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman from Illinois include that amount of $702,000 in his amount as estimated of $27,926,143.22?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. It is an addition, then?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. Chairman, I have only a word or two to say. Gentlemen will recollect that for many years heretofore items audited in the Treasury Department for payment of soldiers of the late war for back pay and for bounty and for commutation of rations have been certified to Congress. They have passed the accounting officers, and then awaited appropriations. So that frequently as much as ten or twelve months after the amount has been ascertained the soldier gets his money. Members of Congress, I apprehend, have gotten letters, just as I have, where they are informed that this amount is due them and that it can not be paid until appropriations are made by Congress.

The old soldiers write us and say: "For God's sake why can not we get our money? We have waited for a quarter of a century, after earning it in the heat of battle and on the long march. Now we are entitled to it, and we only want our money, and the money is in the Treasury." Now, in view of that fact, on a deficiency bill during this session of Congress we appropriated some of this money—an indefinite sum, sufficient to meet all that class of claims for the balance of this year, ending June 30, which is just in front of us.

This is to provide every dollar that is needed, whether it is great or small; whether it be $500,000, or $700,000, or $1,000,000, or $2,000,000—whatever is needed is made available by this provision to pay back pay, bounty, and commutation of rations, as the accounting officers of the Treasury shall find it due. The very moment they find it due, if we enact this law, whatever may happen, the soldier will get his money.

Now, the gentleman from Texas criticises this provision. It was settled after a determined contest that this was right, and I only ask the House to do on this bill for the coming year what we have done for a part of this year in the deficiency bill in this exact language.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Whose fault is it that these accounts have remained unadjusted for twenty-five years—the gentleman has said that they have been pending for a quarter of a century?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend in part by the fault of Congress and in part by the fault of the soldiers, because the soldier, like everybody else, must make application for that which is due him before it is paid. I will say it is not worth while to endeavor to say whether the most of the fault lies in Congress or not. I have no desire to do that. I think that in the Second Auditor's Office some years heretofore the appropriation for the clerical force has not been as much as it ought to have been.

Mr. SPRINGER. These accounts embrace pay of soldiers and bounty provided for under the act of July 28, 1866, and accounts for commutation of rations.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me that Congress is at fault for allowing these claims to remain unpaid for a quarter of a century. I do not know how much of the fault lies with the soldier for his failure to make his claim; but it does seem to me very strange that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department have not been able to adjust these accounts during these many years. Many of the persons have died in the mean time and will never get the benefit of what is due them. I do not object to making this appropriation, but what I complain of is that they ought to have been paid at least twenty years ago. There ought to have been something to stimulate a man to make his claim, and there ought to have been a statute of limitations requiring him to make it within five years, or he should thereafter be forever barred. These cases are coming in now every day, and while the work is going on it seems to me that the gentleman can not do better service than require that all these cases be filed within a certain time in order that there can be an end to it some time in the future.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, in reply I will state I am not anxious for any statute of limitations for the men who earned this money in the Army a quarter of a century ago, or to their legal heirs. Now, I am glad to welcome my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] as a recruit in favor of this provision of the bill. It is not necessary to say at this time whose fault it is that those claims were not paid before, paid when they were audited, as they were not this year until we made the deficiency appropriation. But it would be my fault and the fault of my colleagues if every dollar of these claims that are audited during the next year was not to be paid as soon as audited, and if this provision stands they will be paid. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I want to say in favor of this provision. I think the House understands it. It has been fought over and settled very fully on the deficiency bill.

One further word. I do not design at this time to speak in reply to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], my colleague upon the committee. I thank him very heartily for his, in the main, hearty and earnest co-operation in the preparation and passage of this bill so far, and I have the same to say of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. I want to thank them both for the substantial support that they have given to me and to this side of the House in the passage of the bill through this Committee of the Whole up to this time, because, when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] and various other gentlemen on that side have offered amendments increasing the bill, and I have resisted them as best I could, my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] have stood up and voted with me. They did it because they knew it was right, but they were awfully lonesome on that side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Will not the gentleman go further and state that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] proposed in committee to reduce the amount of this bill much lower than it is now?

Mr. CANNON. I think not. I think there has been no difference of opinion between the two sides of the Committee on Appropriations except upon these items, and possibly one other that is to follow, and the criticism on the other item, as I understand it, is that we have not made it large enough.

Mr. SAYERS. Were not the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and myself always found voting in committee for the lowest appropriations?

Mr. CANNON. I understand that as to the appropriation for the Public Printer my friend claims that it is not large enough.

Mr. SAYERS. When we get to the Printing Office item we will talk about it.

Mr. CANNON. But I will say of my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that he has done his work conscientiously in connection with the preparation of this bill, and he and I have not disagreed seriously about it. He has done his work well and has done it from a non-partisan standpoint. But, Mr. Chairman, I was calling attention now, by way of reply to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], who has been rather severe in his criticism, to the fact that I felt disposed to thank him for his personal attitude in this matter, and I repeat that I have been thankful to him from time to time and also to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] for the support which they have given me in carrying the bill through this Committee of the Whole, especially because, as I have already said, they were quite lonesome upon that side of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois has shared somewhat in that sense of loneliness. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. No, I think not. I think my friends have stood by me pretty well, including the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that it always will be the case that members of Congress will have to be industrious and vigilant and firm to see that the public money when it is taken from the Treasury shall be appropriated for legitimate objects and in proper amounts. We have had to do that this session, we have had to do it in every session that I have served here, and I have no doubt that it will always have to be done. We are here for that purpose, to appropriate for worthy objects, to refuse to appropriate for unworthy objects, and to make economical appropriations. I think that when this Congress adjourns we shall be able to say that we have not made extravagant appropriations. It looks to me that way now. So far there is not much that can be complained of, and I believe the majority of this House will so work it out to the end. When it is all over and the curtain is about to ring down upon this the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, then it will afford me great pleasure to meet my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and post books and see what we have done.

Mr. DOCKERY. We are keeping accounts.

Mr. CANNON. In the mean time I would be glad to have this amendment voted down.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this amendment because of the principle involved, and I regret that it arises out of an appropriation which makes an appeal to a sentiment which may obscure the real principle involved. I do not think there is any duty or power imposed upon or granted to this House more important than its supervisory power over the action of executive officers prior to the payment of the claims found due by those officers. The power of the purse, primarily given to this House, and its power of supervision over the action of the Executive Departments, constitute the largest ordinary duty and the most important that is given to it. I say "ordinary," because there are times of extraordinary emergency when the permanence of the Government and the maintenance of our institutions may be involved; but in the daily routine of work, in the ordinary exercise of our duties, there can scarcely be a more important function than the exercise of control over executive officers, that the condition precedent to their expenditure of the public money shall be our warrant. It is not merely, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] suggests, the question of definite or indefinite appropriations, but, in addition, it is the surrender of the power of supervision over the claims to be paid by the executive officers; and if the question arose upon any other matter than a payment to the soldiers of the late war, I venture with great respect to suggest the observation that there would not be a gentleman of this House who would cast his vote for this bill in its present shape.

But there seems to be a feeling on the part of many gentlemen here that if we touch any question connected with those who served in the late war it immediately becomes exceptional, and when the precedent is once made it may be applied to many other matters. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] of course has not examined this question very carefully or he would know that the statute of limitations had long since been applied to certain of these classes of claims and had been removed, and is now temporarily suspended under the provisions of the act of August 13, 1888.

During his term of service here, and, so far as I know, without any opposition from him, the statute of limitations as to certain of these claims was enacted, and afterwards was suspended for a period of only three years.

But this does not really touch the issue involved in this amendment, which is, shall Congress supervise the action of the auditing officers of the Government? I urge that we ought to do it in all cases, and the objection I have to this amendment is that it does not go far enough. It makes the appropriation definite instead of indefinite; but, if we could have carried that proposition, it ought to have gone one step further.

The other objection urged by my friend from Missouri is, of course, one which ought to receive the consideration of the committee. This is a mode by which appropriations are made without being estimated and revealed in the act making them; it is a mode by which appropriations are enacted and the amount concealed—a mode by which executive officers are granted authority to pay out the public money without the people knowing the extent of the authority thus granted. We ought never to pass an appropriation bill that does not bear on its face, not only the object of the appropriation and the nature of the expenditure, but the amount to be expended, so that this may be clearly understood by those whom we represent. Of course there are permanent appropriations which, within certain narrow margins, are indefinite; but they are comparatively few, and the margin within which they are indefinite is small. For instance, the permanent appropriation for the payment of the interest on the public debt, which is a mere matter of calculation, and that for the payments into the sinking fund. These two items make up more than $90,000,000 of the permanent appropriations of $101,000,000 or $102,000,000, and in the main the other items are substantially of a character easily ascertained. These matters of indefinite appropriation ought to be reduced to the narrowest possible limit; they ought to be made as simple, as direct, as distinct as possible.

There is room for practical reform here, for careful and wise legislation. It is possible that there is necessity for certain permanent and indefinite appropriations; but they ought to be very few, the necessity therefor clear, and even then Congress ought to require strict accountability for their proper expenditure. It is, perhaps, unfortunate that we do not more carefully examine and scrutinize these permanent appropriations, and I do not doubt that they could be materially reduced to the betterment of the public service.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation here proposed is in line with the abdication of the powers of the House which has been going on during the whole of this session. It would seem as though our friends on the other side want to impair every dignity and power of the House, as far as lies within their power, whenever our prerogatives come in conflict with the functions of any other branch of the Government. Who would have expected to see two of the most eminent Republicans on this floor justify votes for measures which their consciences condemned and their judgments disapproved, because they look to the Senate to repair the wrong, the want of wisdom, the folly, and the despotism of this House?

Who could have foreseen that the great question of currency would have been decided by this House upon the avowal, openly made, that the judgment of the House was not the judgment of the people; that the enactment of the House was not in accordance with wisdom, but that the dictates of a party caucus required that the measure pass the House that it might be corrected by the judgment of the Senate? Who could have expected to see a great measure involving the raising of revenue—taxation in the name of the tariff—passed in this House by the vote of gentlemen who openly admitted that it was not in accordance with their best judgments or with their sense of statesmanship, but that they united with the majority because they hoped it would be so amended in the other end of the Capitol as to make it endurable?

Now, when we have presented to us the question of making the Executive Departments observe the law, when we are passing an appropriation for the purpose of having these executive officers spend the money under our control, we propose on the very face of the enactment to abdicate to these executive officers the power of supervision of expenditures as we have abdicated to the Senate the power of deliberate legislation.

One of my friends on the other side speaks of deficiencies. Mr. Chairman, it has not been assigned to me until this session of Congress to study with particularity questions of appropriation. I do not profess yet to understand them. I have voted with great reluctance during my term of service for certain deficiency bills. I shall, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, try to be just and liberal as to such measures, no matter by what officers the deficiencies may have been made, for, whoever may be in power in the administration of the Government, this is my Government; and its honor, its integrity, the payment of its debts of every sort, are as dear to me as if the officers charged with executive duties belonged to my party.

But I want to say that I think this whole question of deficiencies runs along with this very species of appropriation. We permit the law to be violated by executive officers. We undertake to measure in our appropriation bills the amount that shall be expended, and that should be the measure of the manner in which the executive officer discharges his duties. In the teeth of the law, in defiance of the action of Congress, the officer makes these deficiencies. Whether he be Democrat or Republican the case is precisely the same in my eyes. It is in violation of the spirit of the law.

The excuse that he could not do the duty assigned him without creating the deficiency is an excuse which simply means that he feels he is above Congress and his judgment higher and wiser than the law of the land. And I listen to appeals for deficiency bills, I confess, not only with a certain spirit of reluctance, but with some spirit of responsive indignation; and these deficiencies, whether created under the last Administration or under the present Administration, are simply arguments in favor of our putting into this bill and other bills of like character limitations upon the power of the executive officers instead of extending their powers and giving them greater authority and concealing the amounts involved.

I presume, sir, as a matter of fact that there will be in the future as there have been in the past deficiency bills required. Some of the items embodied will be just. Some have already been passed that met my approval; as, for instance, certain appropriations for the Printing Office, where the preceding estimates can not well be made, and there must be some degree of flexibility about such appropriations. But in the larger number of cases the claims presented have been simply deliberate violations of law by the head of a bureau or the chief of a Cabinet Department who expects us to supply that deficiency because of our sensitiveness to the honor of the Government that the debts which it has created shall be promptly paid.

I take it for granted that under this Administration the same thing has gone on that we have seen under other Administrations for the last thirty years. I am not speaking in the spirit of the partisan only. I am a partisan, and I do not put on any airs about it. I do not pose in the attitude of a Liberal who is almost a Republican. I never was near unto being a Republican in my life, and what I have witnessed during the last seven months would have utterly obliterated any tendency which I might possibly have possessed in that direction. [Laughter.]

But what I mean is this, that ever since the war, if not before, and notably in the last twelve or thirteen years when these things have been carried on with rather more than ordinary indifference to the law, with a completer belief that we will make it up, there have come demands upon Congress for deficiencies charged to former Administrations, and accompanied with all the excuses that we will hear or have heard in the past. But it does not change the essential principle that the House of Representatives ought to hold that power which it is abdicating day by day and which it is proposed in this bill to make another abdication of, and which it is prepared to surrender in that deficiency bill which will be reported in the next few weeks.

Take, for instance, as an illustration, that department which is the largest in expenditure and the most sensitive to criticism—that of Pensions. I heard my friends on the other side of the House criticize the last Administration because it estimated that the Pension Department would require only a certain amount when the deficiency turned out to be over $21,000,000. The last Pension Commissioner—and he is safe from any criticism of mine, except that which is absolutely official, for he who bears upon his person the pathetic marks of so much gallantry shown in support of the cause in which his heart was enlisted is sacred from any personal criticism—conceived that he had the power to use the appropriations of 1889-'90 to pay the deficiencies for 1888-'89 utterly without law, absolutely without warrant of law, simply taking the money that Congress had appropriated to one year and applying it to the preceding year, an action which was illegal and in defiance of law. The estimate which was made by the present Commissioner, who is certainly one of the most capable men who has appeared before the committee of which I am a member, upon which we based the deficiency bill for $21,500,000, has turned out to be a mistake.

He estimated before the committee in January or February that the deficiency would require, in round numbers, twenty-one and one-half millions of dollars. That amount was appropriated, and we have already passed another deficiency bill for over $3,000,000, and unless I am mistaken that amount will be found not sufficient. It ought to have been much larger and he will have to violate the law by taking out of the appropriations for next year certain amounts to pay for that which ought to be appropriated for this year.

Mr. DOCKERY. And he virtually admits it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It was virtually admitted, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says.

But the gentleman at the head of that bureau knows—and I speak it with respect to the House—he knows that the House dare not investigate the Pension Bureau. He knows that the House dare not treat that bureau as it would treat any other bureau of the Government; he knows that the House is afraid of what it supposes to be the popular sentiment upon that question. He believes he can again violate that law with impunity. He believes that his department is above the law of the land.

So he and his predecessor, and probably the predecessors of that predecessor running back for years, have not hesitated and do not hesitate to violate the law and use the appropriations of one year for the expenditure of the preceding or subsequent years, and then demand from Congress—for scarcely a word less absolute than "demand" describes the manner in which such requests are submitted to Congress—demand of Congress to make it up, with an absolute certainty that the demand will be complied with.

Now, sir, I think this ought not to be carried further. If gentlemen think that there are influences which require of them that treatment of that particular department, then confine it to that exclusively and do not let us carry it into any other department of the Government. It is not a question of party politics. It is a question affecting the right and dignity and power of the House and its relations to the Executive Departments of the Government. It is one that we can not afford to ignore.

What interest has any representative statesman—and I am not speaking now of the ephemera that appear at every election and who hold their seats in this body under a commission of their people for temporary service, with the knowledge of their people that it is to be but temporary— but speaking of the men who largely control the House, men who have been here for years, gentlemen like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who has borne the commission of his people for eight or nine terms, what interest have such men in concealing or attempting to conceal from the people what is in appropriation bills?

What interest have such men in playing the petty game of politics in the handling of the public money coming into the Treasury from the coined sweat of the labor of the people? It is a mistake, by whomsoever made, by whatever party, at whatever time. The franker we are with the people, the more open we are in our dealings with them, the more confidence we repose in their judgment, their patriotism, and their wisdom, the more they will repose their confidence in us and the greater will be their affection for us.

Why, then, is there any necessity to hide in the provisions of this bill a million of dollars? Why attempt to sugar-coat it by an appeal that it is for the soldiers who fought twenty-five years ago? Let us frankly say to the people, "These are the objects not of bounty but of justice. We promised to pay these. They have been slow in making their claims. We have been tardy in auditing their claims. We will see to it that they are paid, but we can not use these claims to make a precedent by which corrupt parties in possession of the House of Representatives may conceal appropriations. We will not use this exceptional case as a precedent to give power to bureau officers. We will not use it to impair the dignity of the House and lessen its power." And, my word for it, the very objects of the appropriation will be those who will most commend that action.

Mr. Chairman, we are now nearly at the end of seven months of this session. A remarkable and unique session it has been. Under a system of rules which gives to the minority no right of amendment on any of the great measures that have been before us, bills have been passed; not under that system of rules merely, but under a series of gag rules brought in by the Committee on Rules, governing nearly all the matters which have been considered by this House. The tariff bill, the silver bill, the bill reorganizing the judiciary of the United States, taking from the circuit courts their jurisdiction, conferring upon the district courts vast and new jurisdictional powers—that bill was passed within an hour and a half—have been passed under special rules framed to prevent amendments, to suppress deliberation, to prohibit true debate, and render representative independence impossible.

I do not complain of this. I am not saying this in a spirit either of censure or criticism; but I am using it as an argument that in this Committee of the Whole we should reserve the power of amendment, that in the action of this peculiar and ancient committee, which from the very foundation of parliamentary liberty in Great Britain has been the body where the spirit of freedom has resided when questions of taxation were under discussion, that in this body we should not abdicate our power. Do not let us, for any supposed temporary party advantage, give up our duties or surrender them to the executive officers of the Government. And so far as I am concerned, taking advantage merely of this particular amendment to utter this argument, germane to it and to every other form of legislation like unto it, I desire to ask the committee, in all seriousness, not to stoop to this particular form of evil legislation.

We are going to change the Administration. I do not mean to say that it is going to be Democratic next time, merely. I think it is more than likely that it will be; otherwise I would have a very poor opinion of the wisdom of the American people, and would have a very lofty opinion of the power of the "fat" that is "fried out;" but what I mean to say is that all these parties are in a broad sense of the word temporary. Some of us who are old enough have seen the Whig party go to destruction and have seen the Democratic party divided and lose power. We will live to see new persons in power, new questions coming into this House, new alignments of men and States and sections; but we will never see the end of a dangerous precedent.

We will see the personnel of the Government changed. We will see the alignment of parties readjusted upon new issues. We will see States break away from their sectional connections into new combinations, like the elements of a kaleidoscope, making new pictures by the turn of the hand of fate and under the power of a Supreme will; but we will never get rid of the influence of a dangerous precedent, of an admission of power in any other department of the Government. The impairing of our powers gives to the next generation who may want to belittle the House of Representatives the value of our name and the advantage of our character. When in another Congress some Representative is resisting, as I do to-day, this sort of legislation or something like unto it, he will be answered with the statement that in the better and purer days of the Republic the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], canonized then by death and sanctified by forgetfulness of all but his good qualities, did this thing, and if he could do it, they could afford to do it too. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

life, attired not only in the beauty of their present vigorous manhood, in all the gracefulness of their present eloquence, but with the added beauty which is given by that distance which lends enchantment to the view, will be described as the statesmen who, under august and earnest debate, gave their sanction to the principle that the appropriating power of Congress was not the supervision of expenditures, but was merely to hand the public money over into the hands of the auditing officers to be paid without regard to any further action by Congress.

And it has been so from the beginning. Everything ever done in this House to the injury of liberty, that hurt our institutions, that twists the nature of our Government, that gives new power where it ought not to be given and where it has not been conferred by the Constitution, is defended and justified by some former precedent, something no larger than this, but of the same nature. Therefore to-day I plead not merely for this small appropriation of a million of dollars; for what is a million of dollars in a Government that expends four hundred millions of dollars a year? What is a million of dollars? A mere drop in the bucket; nay, no larger than the dew-drop that in the morning sparkles in the sun, compared with $170,000,000 that we pay for pensions, and the millions upon millions that are crowded into other expenditures which are made at the demand of those who have selected Representatives. It is not for this paltry million of dollars that I plead to-day, but it is for the establishment of another precedent that the power of the purse does not mean an appropriation of money only, but means the supervision of the expenditure which is appropriated for in our bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I can not hope, of course, to follow the gentleman from Kentucky in his eloquence or in his elocutionary pyrotechnics. I desire, however, to call attention to one or two practical questions in connection with this amendment, and in doing so I will go back and call attention to one or two matters about which some expression of surprise has been made. One of these is that these debts, which are conceded to be debts, were not paid twenty-five years ago.

Now, there is a difference between these claims and the claims of many others that are brought before the Government officers. One main difference is this, that these were as much debts of the Government in 1865 and 1866 as they are to-day. The reason why these old soldiers did not receive their arrears of pay and bounty and commutation of rations at the time they were mustered out of the service, when they should have received them, was the negligence and default of the Government itself.

Mr. DOCKERY. Right there I hope the gentleman will be frank enough to this side of the House to state that the object of this amendment is not to refuse the pay, but simply proposes to appropriate the full amount of the estimates.

Mr. PETERS. I understand that, and will come to it presently.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If it will not interrupt my friend right there, I want to ask why pass a statute of limitations if it were not also to compel other persons who had not made their claims to file their claims?

Mr. PETERS. I conceive that it is to some extent, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, the fault of the claimant himself, because in a hundred thousand cases I will guaranty that it was not until years and years after the close of the war that the individual himself ever knew that he was entitled to anything further from the Government. He supposed when the flag of the Union became triumphant and when the soldiers were mustered out, when the accounts were settled, and the boys went marching home, that he had received his entire due from the Government, and that nothing further was due to him. It was not until years afterwards that he ascertained that the Government had failed in its obligation to him, and had failed to pay him the full amount of compensation that was due him for the services he had rendered it. And now shall the old soldier who failed to have knowledge of the wrong the Government committed against him in declining to adjust his account according to law—shall that old soldier now be held responsible by a statute of limitations or any other criticism to say, "You have not applied for twenty-five years, therefore you shall not be allowed to do so now?"

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will allow me to state right here that there is no such question as that in offering this amendment.

Mr. PETERS. That issue was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. I know that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is broad enough in his heart that beats in sympathy with the soldier, that his energetic legislative mind is too keen and too shrewd and too great to make criticisms of that kind. [Laughter.] But I want to come to this question, Mr. Chairman, that the soldier is absolutely guiltless in relation to this matter because he did not make application. If there is any fault that can attach to any one it can not attach to the soldier, simply because in time past he may have had the means with which to sustain life. He might have had money enough to buy provisions for his family and to clothe them and himself without calling upon the Government for any of its indebtedness.

That is not now the question in regard to these claims, but it is in regard to pensions. How many men are there who are entitled to pensions who from a feeling of pride did not make their application until poverty came in at the window and their necessitous condition compelled them to seek some support and seek that from the Government which was due them? Then in their extremity was it that they made application for a pension. So it is in a large number of these claims. Although they may have ascertained that something was due them from the Government, yet they did not need it, nor did they make application for it until poverty came in at the door and necessity drove them to do it. Then they make their application for this pittance which is due to them.

Mr. SAYERS. If this rule which obtains to these four classes is a proper rule to be observed by Congress, why do you place any limitation on your appropriation for pensions? Why do you not authorize the Commissioner of Pensions to pay them just as fast as he can issue the certificates?

Mr. PETERS. I will state, first, as a general proposition, that any limit, I care not what it is, to be effectual must be based on an accurate estimate, and that accurate estimate is impossible in this class of cases. And now let me say a word further—

Mr. SAYERS. Can you not make just as accurate an estimate in regard to this class of cases as you can in regard to pensions?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir. I will state—

Mr. SAYERS. Then why do you not enforce the same rule in regard to pensions that you do in regard to back pay and bounty?

Mr. PETERS. I am willing to say that so far as pensions are concerned there is no more need of a limit as to the amount to be paid out in pensions than there is necessity for it here, and why? Because no power under the sun can do anything more than guess at the number of applications that will be made for pensions, for payment of arrears, for bounty, for commutation of rations. It is the merest guesswork in the world. No executive officer can do more than guess. The Pension Office can estimate as to the amount of money necessary to pay the clerical force, as to the amount necessary to pay the running expenses of the Pension Department; so estimates can be made as to the amount necessary for the clerical expenses in the Second Auditor's Office and in the Second Comptroller's Office and so of other similar items in the general expenditures of the Government; but there is nothing whatever upon which to make an accurate estimate as to the number of applications that will be made for the payment of pensions, for the payment of arrears, or for commutation of rations. There is nothing in the books that can furnish any basis for such an estimate.

Mr. SAYERS. Then the gentleman is willing to make indefinite appropriations for pensions?

Mr. PETERS. I am willing to make indefinite appropriations for the payment of pensions, just as we make indefinite appropriations for a great many other things concerning which there is less justification than there is in the matter of pensions.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman name any other indefinite appropriations that we make?

Mr. PETERS. Why, the whole of the permanent appropriations, several hundred million dollars, are really indefinite appropriations. We make appropriations each year for the payment of the permanent appropriations.

Mr. SAYERS. But there is an actual appropriation made by existing law for each year.

Mr. PETERS. Certainly. The law as it exists provides that certain things shall be paid each year, but there is no limit fixed. Take, for example, the interest on the public debt; that is a permanent annual appropriation. There is no law which says you shall pay so much, or you shall pay only so much each year; the law simply says that the interest on the public debt shall be paid, whether it be a million, two million, or a hundred million dollars a year. And so with regard to the sinking fund.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the analogy does not hold good, for the reason that there is no opportunity there for discretion. The amount of the indebtedness is fixed and the interest is fixed.

Mr. PETERS. So is the amount of the indebtedness fixed here.

Mr. SAYERS. What fixes it?

Mr. PETERS. It is fixed by prior law, the law which put these men in the field and said to them: "You shall have certain pay, certain bounty, certain commutation of rations if you are a prisoner of war." The original law first created the indebtedness, the relation between the soldier and the Government, and you are simply auditing the indebtedness which was created by that law.

Mr. DOCKERY. That involves discretion both as to the fact and as to law.

Mr. PETERS. No, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. As to the application of the law to a given state of facts.

Mr. PETERS. It involves a discretion in the Auditor and the Second Comptroller as to the application of the law and as to the ascertainment of facts, but when the application of the law is made and the facts are ascertained the whole case is res adjudicata, or should be, and this Congress should have nothing to do with it.

Now, I do not want to take up the time of the committee too long, but I wish to call attention to one other matter in connection with this subject. Here is an indebtedness which has existed for long years, and all there is to do is for the auditing officers of the Treasury Department to make application of the law and ascertain the facts and certify the amount to Congress. The whole question raised by this amendment is this, shall we pay this indebtedness as it is ascertained by these officers of the Government, or shall we not pay it until after that ascertainment is made and we have received the ascertainment? In other words, shall we compel these creditors of ours to wait until Congress, by reason of its being in session, can look over and examine these adjudications of the officers of the Treasury Department and see that they are correct, or shall we make the appropriation now and say that whenever the adjudication is made the money shall be paid? The amendment proposes a limit of $350,000. That, I say, is the merest guesswork. The amount may be sufficient or it may be insufficient. If it exceeds the amount of $10,000 it is no limit upon the discretion of the departmental officers. If it exceeds the limit of $5,000 it is no limit upon their discretion; and, being the merest guesswork, it is really no limit at all. It is no safeguard to the Government; it is simply an injustice to the soldier. If the Government could derive any benefit from this limitation that is sought to be placed upon this appropriation, then the soldier might be content; but I submit that this simply does injustice to the soldier without any benefit to the Government.

In view of these considerations, it seems to me the proper way to make appropriations for all claims of this class as to which an estimate can not be accurately made is to make the appropriation indefinite, just as we do in all other matters where similar considerations apply. I can see no reason why a discrimination should be made against the soldier. I can see no reason why these claims which have been due for twenty-five years should be discriminated against. I hope, therefore, the amendment as offered will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on the amendment of Mr. SAYERS). The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 59, yeas 46.

Mr. CANNON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CANNON and Mr. SAYERS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, yeas 67.

So the amendment was adopted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of amounts for bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs that may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1891, so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the words "so much thereof as may be necessary" and inserting in lieu thereof "$300,000."

Mr. DOCKERY. That is just the amount of the estimate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to do with respect to the bounties which have been due the soldiers for twenty-five years just what has been done by a vote of the Committee of the Whole, with three or four majority, touching the claims of the soldiers for arrears of pay which have been due for twenty-five years. I would be content to let this amendment be adopted, and let the question be finally settled by a vote of the House, were it not that the specious speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] seems to have made upon some minds the impression that he was contending for a great and conservative principle touching the methods of appropriation. Now, I want to say, with the highest respect for the gentleman and for his remarks touching this matter, that his speech reminded me of the sweet sound of a silver bell. I recollect they had one out in our country a good many years ago, and they rang it on all occasions. Finally somebody said, "I want to know what they are ringing that bell for? What is going to happen?" Somebody replied, "It does sound awfully sweet; I guess they are just ringing it to hear it sound." Now, my friend from Kentucky, who is always able, and whose speech sounds like the sweet tones of a silver bell, spoke from that same standpoint, because the facts here did not justify the speech; and I will in a minute show why.

The gentleman says he wants to retain with the House of Representatives the power to examine these accounts. Now, there is nothing in that suggestion, I submit to the gentleman, for this reason: What is the manner of expenditure in this country? We appropriate for the Army, for the Navy, and for other branches of the public service. The money goes into the hands of the disbursing officer and is paid out, and is not reported to Congress except in general amounts of expenditure. Why is there any more necessity for reporting the $5, the $15, the $20, or the $100 that is due to the soldier, that he earned twenty-five years ago—why is there any more necessity for reporting these matters to be scrutinized here than there is to report these other items?

Why, sir, according to the gentleman's logic the Government could never pay a dollar for anything until the amount was first audited, reported to Congress, and examined by Congress item by item.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is precisely the way it is done. The Secretary of the Treasury transmits to Congress an estimate of each particular item—so much for pay of the soldier, so much for his subsistence, so much for his transportation, etc.; and there is also sent to Congress each year a report of the expenditures of the year before; and there is a provision of law prohibiting any officer from paying out money except upon warrant of law. That is precisely the way in which the expenditures are made.

Mr. CANNON. The disbursing officer pays every man his money before the matter is reported to Congress. But while, as to the pay of the soldier now in our Army, the money is paid through the disbursing officer and reported to Congress afterward, in these cases where the soldier earned the money years ago, the gentleman would have the amount audited and let the soldier wait until after it has been reported to Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Can the gentleman inform the committee why it was that the act of 1874 was passed requiring all claims of this kind to be reported to Congress for its consideration?

Mr. CANNON. The law of 1874 to which the gentleman refers was, like many other acts, passed without consideration as to many items. That law is still in force, and the reports can still be made.

One word further in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky. It is said that this bill ought to show the $700,000 or $800,000 or $1,000,000 in the aggregate. It never showed it under your Administration [addressing the Democratic side of the House].

Mr. DOCKERY rose.

Mr. CANNON. I measure my words when I say this, and the gentleman will be satisfied when I make my statement. These amounts never appeared under your Administration until after the audited claim was reported to Congress. For instance, two years ago, in 1888, the sundry civil appropriation bill did not carry one dollar—

Mr. DOCKERY. Just there the gentleman will allow me to say that according to the Department estimates $390,000 does not appear in the appropriations for this fiscal year that ought to be there, should the gentleman desire to enter upon a comparative statement.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; but I said that two years ago this bill, the sundry civil bill, did not carry one dollar for this purpose.

Mr. DOCKERY. And why? Because we complied with the law which required the consideration of these items before their payment.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed, I will state the whole question. I say now that the sundry civil appropriation bill of two years ago did not carry one dollar for this purpose, and Congress adjourned and you did not appropriate one dollar for it. But ten months afterward you come in and appropriate by way of a deficiency. Now, we appropriate in the first instance, in place of a deficiency, enough money to do the work. That is the whole matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the gentleman from Illinois not willing to accept the estimates or statements of his own Department officials?

Mr. CANNON. No, I am not in every case.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, well, if the gentleman distrusts his own officials, of course I have no word to say.

Mr. CANNON. Because I do not want to appropriate $700,000 or $800,000 or $1,000,000, which will not be enough. But whether it be much or little, I want to appropriate a sum sufficient to pay these claims.

Then one further step, and I beg the gentleman from Kentucky to give me his attention. There are $101,000,000 every year of indefinite appropriations that have not been passed upon by Congress. All of this is of the kind of legislation to which the gentleman objects and which he criticises; and yet that $101,000,000, a part of it at least, for a school for the blind in his own State of Kentucky, is an indefinite appropriation, not scrutinized or examined by Congress and passed as this is proposed to be passed.

And yet the gentleman's silvery voice is silent as to that $101,000,000 of indefinite appropriations. But the moment you undertake to make what he calls an indefinite appropriation to pay the back pay and bounty of the soldiers, the gentleman's sweet voice is heard by the hour in denunciation, and he says it is all without precedent and proceeds to lecture this side of the House. It makes some difference, Mr. Chairman, whose ox is gored, I will submit to you and the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to say that I stated in my speech that of the sum to which he alludes now nearly $48,000,000 was the sinking fund and a large amount was interest on the public debt and various other objects which went to make up the total?

But will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him another question? He introduced a bill to repeal all indefinite appropriations. Now I would like to ask my friend if the Committee on Rules, of which the gentleman is so conspicuous a member, will give us an opportunity to vote for a reform in that direction under the lead of the gentleman? If it will do so it will not need any lengthy speaking, if he and his committee in good faith will give us an opportunity, to carry out that bill and make that much needed and most desirable reform. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. I did introduce such a bill and it has been introduced pro forma for the last half dozen years. [Laughter on Democratic side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Pro forma! So I supposed; but I knew the gentleman did not ever do anything pro forma; that he did what he did always in earnestness, and hence I had hopes that we would have an opportunity of having a vote on the bill because he introduced it.

Mr. CANNON. It was introduced year after year by the late gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Randall, and by others at different times, and has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations time and again. But the voice of the gentleman from Kentucky was not heard, like "the voice of the turtle in the land," in former Congresses begging that we might have a vote upon that bill. [Laughter.]

Now, I grant you that I do favor the principle, and if we were to start anew in the making of appropriations, in my opinion indefinite appropriations would not be made. But how are you going to avoid it when you swallow one hundred millions of indefinite appropriations, including the school for the blind in the State of Kentucky, and all along the line for almost every conceivable object? You swallow the camel without complaint, and when called upon to swallow the gnat, and pay the poor pittance of from $5 to $100 to these poor men when the claims are audited, your stomachs turn inside out because of the gnat. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As the gentleman from Illinois has now closed that sentence, will he allow an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That bill to which the gentleman has referred was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman is chairman. Has the gentleman taken any steps to have that bill considered in that committee and reported to the House?

Mr. CANNON. I referred that bill to a subcommittee, and I have been prayerfully waiting and waiting for the eloquent voice of the gentleman from Kentucky, who is upon that committee, to lift it out and ask for an early consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But I am not on the committee. The gentleman did not assign it to me. And if he had done so, he did not use the right word when he said he had been "prayerfully" waiting, for as a matter of fact he has been silently waiting. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Allow me to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I represent the minority in part on that committee, and have frequently urged upon the chairman of the subcommittee the consideration of that measure; and the fact that it has not been so far considered is no fault of the minority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, I have talked long enough about this. [Laughter.]

I want to say to this side of the House that we owe it to these men, who have waited for a quarter of a century for their money, to make this appropriation. We fought it over and settled it on the deficiency bill; and from the time the deficiency bill was passed in last February up to the close of this fiscal year, our friends on the other side having been overcome in that contest are now renewing it, and asking us to reverse the engines and refuse to do for the coming fiscal year what we are responsible for doing for a part of this fiscal year.

I trust we will not do it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to ask my friend a question before he takes his seat. The suggestion is made that this requires a careful computation and searching of the evidence before these appropriations can possibly be made. I want to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] if it is not the fact that all which has to be ascertained is, when the soldier volunteered, how long he served, and whether he was guilty of any act during that service which disqualified him from the benefit of this.

Mr. CANNON. And whether he has been paid.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And there is nothing else.

Mr. CANNON. No; and all appears of record.

Mr. DOCKERY. And $100,000 of fraudulent insurance claims would have been allowed.

Mr. CANNON. Not under this bill. Those claims were not appropriated for here.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend suggests that in the army appropriation bill there is a large amount appropriated for pay of mileage of soldiers and all that, but before that is paid there must be the ascertainment of the fact as to whether an order has been issued requiring the soldier to make a trip, whether he made the trip, whether the vouchers are regular or not. Now certainly we risk no more in making this appropriation to pay a long existing debt than we do in making an appropriation under the army bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The exact difference is the difference between the bill as reported and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. We do put in the army bill the amount which is to be paid and in this bill you do not. That very principle which is contended for is the one carried into the army bill. So much for the pay of soldiers, so much for the transportation of soldiers, etc.

Mr. CANNON. Why not so much for this blind asylum?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know anything about that. I have had no connection with that blind asylum. I confess it does seem something like blindness to try to find out what the Republican party are endeavoring to do about this.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The record in this case is made up and the facts are ascertained.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Possibly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In the other case you limit the appropriation, thereby limiting the amount of indebtedness which may be created under the appropriation in the matter of ordering this or refraining from ordering that. In one case the record is all made up and the facts ascertained and are incontrovertible. In the other you limit the appropriation because you would limit the amount of service that may be ordered under it, and there is a manifest distinction in the two cases.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not necessary.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This is under a general order for debate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, on this and the next item, if the gentleman will indicate about the time he wants, I would like to limit the debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want about five or ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose you limit the debate to fifteen minutes.

Mr. McCOMAS. I want ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Make it twenty minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I want five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Let us limit it to thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and the next be limited to thirty minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes will be allowed to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. SAYERS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, an act of Congress provides that these claims shall be reported to Congress for its consideration with a view to appropriation. It was a wise provision. It is, independent of this, a wise course of legislation any way, to appropriate in detail for expenditures out of the public Treasury. The policy of this country has been continually, from the beginning of the Government onward, in the direction of separating items of expenditure in order that they may be the more easily seen and examined, discussed, and acted upon. The early history of Congress discloses great laxity in this regard, and this statute to which I have referred, the act of 1874, coupled with many others, all point to the public necessity for appropriating in detail. It is in this way that there is brought before the House continually every item of expenditure with a view to its examination. The auditing of accounts does not carry absolute verity with it. Oftentimes error occurs, and it has happened in the past that in this class of claims errors have occurred. Therefore it is but the conservation of a wise principle in legislation that is sought to be applied by this amendment, and I trust that both sides of the House, recognizing its value, will preserve those proper methods in legislation that any gentleman disconnected with any proposition where he may have some special interest or inclination would see fit to approve.

Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says we have a great many indefinite appropriations, amounting to over $100,000,000. They are the law of the land. It is not for the Committee on Appropriations, it is not for the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], nor the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], nor any other member of the Committee on Appropriations, to come into this House and on an appropriation bill endeavor to repeal that general legislation. It is a law to us, and it has no part in this discussion. For instance, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, the appropriations for the sinking fund are common in their nature, and are made so in order to give assurance that the financial policy of this country should not be subject to the accidents of annual legislation.

So it may be said of other items. Therefore, it has nothing to do with reaching a proper conclusion here. I would not undertake, sir, to say as other gentlemen have that the subjects covered in this provision relating to permanent appropriations were not wise, and certainly it is not true in relation to the sinking fund. There is no occasion why it should be subject to the incident of annual legislation. What harm is there in it? Why should the declaration of $300,000 in the statute be omitted? Why should we not, when we read the statute, know what the amount is and of every item?

This is the representative branch of the Government. This is the place where is reposed the power first to originate appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SPRINGER. A question here. I understood that this provision was to be considered without reference to the five-minute limit of debate.

Mr. PETERS. But while you were out we agreed upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent debate was limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. But that does not change it with reference to these other amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, what reason can there be for inserting an unknown amount here? Is the object to conceal the amount of money carried by the appropriation bill? Is it simply to have its effect upon a tabulated statement of the expenditures of the Government? If it is true, is it not sacrificing a salutary rule for a partisan purpose? The gentleman certainly can not justify this. I sympathize with the gentleman from Illinois oftentimes in his work with reference to expenditures. I concede that his services have for years been of great value. I have oftentimes co-operated with him with pleasure in keeping down the rate of expenditure, but this does not touch the amount. It simply preserves a rule which is contemplated by the statute, contemplated by wise legislation, and ought to be upheld by this body and by all succeeding Congresses.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] says that there are just three or four things to be ascertained. Why, that may be said of many claims. They may turn on a single item, but because it turns on a single item are we to ignore examination? Is it to conceal anything from this House? The merits do not depend upon points entirely, but upon its correctness. The appropriating of money should be made after all opportunities for examination. The auditing officers are likely to make mistakes. They have made them in the past, and they make them in this item.

The gentleman is persuasive, because it relates to an item for the soldiers of the country. Why, sir, there is no difficulty in the spirit of this House to provide for these things. I have never witnessed it here on either side of the House. The only matter involved is to preserve the law and proper practice in the matter of appropriations. And I trust that we shall not fail in our duty in this regard on this very point. I care nothing about the amount; it is only the principle, and the gentleman from Illinois, with his fidelity to the public Treasury, ought to be one of the last gentlemen on this floor to depart from such a principle.

Mr. Chairman, I care for no further time and yield it back to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, in respect to the doctrine contended for, I heartily agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and the practice and record of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] most conspicuously accords with the same general doctrine of the responsibility of Congress to consider appropriations and its right and duty to supervise and carefully scrutinize the estimates of appropriations. That ought never to be abandoned, but ought rather to be advanced; but when I see here the case of volunteers and their widows and heirs a quarter of a century after the war, I know from a service of six years on the Appropriations Committee and four years on the deficiency subcommittee having charge of these audited claims that no Appropriation Committee has ever reaudited these claims in fact, nor can do it in fact, as the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Georgia suggest. This is one of the class of audited claims wherein you ascertain the date of entering and ceasing service and the right of the soldier growing thereout; the identity of the person and the verification of the marriage of his widow.

All of these claims are for very small sums of money, and it is impossible for a subcommittee or the House to take them up by the hundreds and the thousands and go over the track of the auditing officer. They can do no more than carry on a general investigation, and that they can do now, and do as well under this form of appropriation as in any other way. So my point is that this is the explanation that I imagine can properly be made in regard to this appropriation; and certainly when you consider that after the average length of a lifetime these claims of soldiers, their widows and heirs, have gone by and are almost coming to an end in their application to the Government and their adjudication by the auditing officers, certainly there is no dangerous precedent here, and this explanation can fairly be made, that the only possible effect in thus appropriating will be to advance for ten months or twelve months the payment of these claims which have been delayed to the soldier or his widow, who has long been waiting, long expecting that which was but justly due and which is but a pittance in thousands of the items in these payments.

But I desire to speak to what has been said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] with respect to the general subject rather than to this particular item. They have talked here of the large appropriations thus far made, but they have not given attention to deficiencies. I desire to call the attention of this committee to the difference of method between this Republican House and our Democratic predecessors when in control of this House. You have this year, by way of deficiencies, $1,000,000 for the Department of Justice, not provided for by the legislation of the last Congress. You have $1,200,000 deficiencies in the Navy Department not provided for by the legislation of the last Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCOMAS. If it is a very brief one.

Mr. SAYERS. Does not the gentleman now report, in this very bill, an appropriation for the Government Printing Office which the officers say is $100,000 less than will be necessary?

Mr. McCOMAS. When that comes up I will explain to my friend that we give the Public Printer more than was given the same official last year, and what they can get along with.

Now, the deficiencies for post-offices and post-roads was $3,000,600—

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman mean to say that the appropriation contained in this bill for the Printing Office is, in his judgment, sufficient to meet the expenditure of that office during the fiscal year?

Mr. McCOMAS. I will give my friend my view of that question when we reach it. I will ask him not to leap until we come to that stile. I am talking now of the deficiencies created by the action of the Democratic Congress, amounts not provided for by the legislation of the Democratic Congress and coming over from a Democratic Administration to ours.

Mr. SAYERS. What about a Republican Senate?

Mr. McCOMAS. The Republican Senate is here and I have no doubt will do as we have done, make up the appropriations for these deficiencies which have come over from a Democratic Administration.

Mr. SAYERS. Why did not you—

Mr. McCOMAS. Now, I trust the gentleman will allow me to proceed without interruption, or else that he will yield me some time, and then I will be glad to answer his questions. I ask my friend's attention now to the Post-Office Department, where there is a deficiency of more than three millions, and then there is the pension deficiency, which amounts to about twenty-five millions of dollars, and deficiencies in other Departments, making about $35,000,000 of deficiencies coming from all the Departments, some for expenditures under the present Administration and some under the last, but all coming over as deficiencies, because the appropriations made by the Democratic Congress were not sufficient to meet the public expenditures, and all to be taken care of by this House as deficiencies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one result of the liberal appropriations made this year, which do exceed by $35,000,000, as gentlemen have said, those of the year 1889—one result of these liberal appropriations is an increase of two millions and odd in the Navy for this year and eighteen millions more for pensions, in order that there may be no more deficiencies in this department such as we have had coming over here from the past Administration and hampering the new one in doing justice to the soldiers. There are twelve millions more for the Post-Office Department. Because of our liberal provision for these deficiencies, and for next year, we no longer hear, as we heard a year or two ago, complaints coming up from every city and every community in the country of the inefficiency of the postal service, of the want of facilities for carrying the mails, or the slowness and uncertainty of the service.

Two or three years ago, under the last Administration, the people were loud and clamorous in their complaints upon this subject, but now they are quiet and contented, because we have provided for these deficiencies and have had the courage to provide in advance $12,000,000 more to meet the growth of the country and in order to guard against a recurrence of such a condition of things as that which arose under the deficient appropriations of the last Administration.

Then as to pensions, in view of the large deficiency that has arisen in that department and in view of the outrage that it is upon the old soldiers to retard the payment to them of money which has been due for twenty-five years, this House has not hesitated, even on the verge of a Congressional election—this House, I say, has not hesitated even under such conditions to urge on and hurry up by all means possible the adjudication of pension claims, while in the Pension Office they have worked faster in order that long-delayed justice to the soldier and to the helpless widow of the soldier may be done, as, in the national convention that gave us the platform that gave us control of this Government, we pledged ourselves it should be done.

Mr. Chairman, we have done more than that. This Congress has been a virile Congress. Gentlemen have criticised it for some things that it has done and for some things that it has not done, for appropriations it has made and for some appropriations it has not made. I have, therefore, called attention to the virtue and the wisdom of these appropriations to which reference has been made. Gentlemen have talked also about certain laws that have not been enacted upon different subjects. My hope, gentlemen, is that we will have a chance yet, before this Congress comes to an end, to vote for an educational bill. I believe you will soon find it on your Calendar. One word further. For fourteen recent years you have had control of this House. We have had it seven months, half as many months as you have had it years, but I appeal to the record to show that the country has never seen a Congress with more industry than this. You have complained of the rapidity of legislation here, yet now, although we have been busy all the time, you complain that while we have done some things there are some things that we have not done. Well, gentleman, the time has been well employed, crowded with noble and courageous legislation by the Republican party.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I yield the gentleman the balance of the time.

Mr. McCOMAS. You confessed that you ought not to hamper the Supreme Court of the United States and denied it relief; but this House has passed a bill to make eight new circuit-court judges in order to give that court relief, and have sent it to the other end of this Capitol, where it will no doubt become a law.

We pledged ourselves in the last campaign to admit the new States, and already four of them have gone flying up to their places in the galaxy of States, and two more of them, Wyoming and Idaho, by the vote of this House are spinning their way toward the same destination. You have merely talked about trusts; but this House has passed a bill for the regulation and control of trusts which will soon be a law to be coiled about some of the most oppressive monopolies which burden our people.

You have wavered. We, having pledged you in our national platform that we would make "such a revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people, the production of which gives employment to our labor, and relieve from impost duties those articles of foreign production (except luxuries) the like of which can not be produced at home," have done so; we have sent the McKinley bill to the Senate in full, fair, and honest compliance with the pledge of the Republican party. We said that silver and gold should both be used as money; and we have provided by the vote of this House that all the silver dug from all the mines, refined and smelted by the labor and capital of our country, should be turned into dollars. We have given you all the inflation that any prudent man could want or ask, taking the silver of the country and issuing upon it certificates of legal-tender value all over the country, on the same footing with gold.

You in your talk for years have promised pension legislation and have given none. We, after providing an appropriation for all the pensions that can be adjudicated at the Pension Office, have passed a general bill that will lift 100,000 widows from penury and want, which will take 200,000 soldiers from distress, some of them from the almshouses of the country—a bill which has already passed both Houses of Congress, has gone to the President for his signature, and will soon afford great, much-needed, but by you long-delayed relief to the soldiers of this country and those dependent upon them.

This Congress has made these exhibitions of its patriotism and courage. After all these years we have achieved more than any Congress since the Thirty-ninth Congress has achieved. We have marched up to the platform of the party, which I hold in my hand; we have taken its pledges one after another, and discarding your "stale, flat, and unprofitable" excuses for doing nothing, we have taken up these great questions with which you gentlemen did not care to grapple. We have passed upon them. And I believe we shall soon pass upon that other great and important question; we shall soon bring forward a measure whereby those who represent this great nation on the floor of Congress shall have a right and title which can be sifted in the light of public discussion, and to the contentment of the public mind be approved, when this Congress shall have had the courage to march up and by a wise and prudent extension of national legislation see that there shall be an honest count of a fair ballot safely and honestly returned, and a certificate which, undergoing the scrutiny of both State and national officials, shall be a double title to credence when any man takes his seat upon this floor. We have been busy; we have used our time, and used it with important results, used it with courage, nobly, and well. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has seven minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, one might well imagine from the remarks just delivered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] that he was upon the stump after the adjournment of the session, before his constituents, expatiating upon the very many great things that the Republican party had done for the country during the present Congress and the very many bad things which the Democrats did while they had control here.

Now, the gentleman knows just as well as he knows anything that the deficiency in the matter of pensions, of which he complains, is not to be attributed to the failure upon the part of this House in the last Congress to appropriate all sums of money which were estimated and asked for by the Commissioner of Pensions. The records and proceedings of Congress show the statement which I make to be true.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the gentleman allow me half a minute? Perhaps I ought to be more explicit.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will make amends to this extent: Perhaps the reason you did not pass any pension legislation in the last four years your party had control here was that you were kept so busy in sustaining President Cleveland's vetoes of pension bills that you had not the time. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SAYERS. Well, sir, the country will pass upon the merits of what you and your party have done and may do during this session upon the matter of pensions; and the country will decide whether you and your party, thrusting your hands into the public Treasury, shall be commended and indorsed for taking out during each fiscal year more than $50,000,000 of the people's money upon the demand of the Grand Army of the Republic; and this, too, notwithstanding we are paying out more than $100,000,000 annually to pensioners under existing laws. The issue in that respect has been made, and upon that issue both parties will appeal to the constituencies.

The gentleman talks about the appropriation bills of this session being swollen on account of the failure of the last Congress to pass the necessary amounts. Sir, was not his party in control of the Senate; and could any appropriation bill have become law without the consent of that body? Why, then, throw the entire responsibility of a deficiency (if a deficiency has really occurred for which Congress should be held responsible) upon the House?

The gentleman and his party may pass their election bill; they may enact such legislation as they please, but let me tell him it will not add one member to the other side of this Chamber.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why not?

Mr. SAYERS. Because the people will declare themselves utterly opposed to any such policy, and will repudiate your candidates at the polls in the North as well as in the South, in the East as well as in the West. That is the reason.

But, Mr. Chairman, we should not forget the proposition involved in the item under consideration. It is this and nothing more: Sixteen years ago, as I am informed, the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman, advised and urged upon Congress the enactment of a law which would furnish a safeguard against the reckless expenditure of money in matters of the kind before us. In response to that advice the act of 1874 was ingrafted upon the statute-book. Congress after Congress has met, deliberated, and adjourned, and yet that law has been faithfully observed until now. Since 1874 all claims like these under consideration have been referred to Congress for review and none have been paid without the proper appropriation, made in due course of procedure.

This policy, however, which has worked so well and which carries with it a responsibility by the Executive Departments and officials of the Government to Congress, is to be reversed and the same authority which adjudicates the claim is to be invested with the power of payment without the intervention of the law-making power. In this particular Congress is to surrender the key to the Treasury and to yield up its most important function. This is the issue, nothing else. It remains for Congress to decide whether it will adhere to the policy of sixteen years past, or whether it will relinquish its own high authority and confer upon executive officials an unlimited and irresponsible power not only to adjudicate, but also to pay claims of the character we are now considering.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the committee the debate was limited and the time has been exhausted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was not aware that a limitation had been placed upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 66, noes 72.

Mr. SAYERS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. SAYERS and Mr. CANNON were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of amounts of bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, that may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1891, so much therefor as may be necessary is hereby appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. In view of the vote just taken on the preceding paragraph, I will not offer a similar amendment to this item or to the one succeeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent and incidental expenses, Territory of Alaska: For rent of offices for the marshal, district attorney, and commissioners; furniture, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, $500.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 12, on page 89, the following additional paragraphs: "Public building in the Territory of Oklahoma: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to construct in the city of Guthrie, Territory of Oklahoma, a public building suitable for the accommodation of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Territory, the sum of $50,000, provided an equal sum of money is furnished by the people of said Territory and placed in his hands to be used in the construction of said building."

Mr. CANNON. As to that amendment, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order, but will allow an explanation as to the necessity for this.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the gentleman making an explanation, but still I must make the point of order. The gentleman can make any statement he sees proper to make in regard to the matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman will withdraw the point of order after hearing the statement.

Mr. CANNON. No, I will not withdraw the point of order; but will be very glad if my colleague will make his statement. I am always very glad to hear my friend talk; he says so little on the floor of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been listening to my distinguished colleague all day with so much pleasure and interest that I can hardly summon up courage enough to take the floor in the brief time I shall occupy it, because he can do the work so much better.

Mr. CANNON. Thank you.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I desired to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have recently organized the Territory of Oklahoma, appointed a governor and other officers who have gone there for the purpose of transacting the public business, and there is not a building in the Territory in which they can perform the business required of them by the law. This proposition is based upon the condition that the citizens there will furnish an equal amount of money with the amount appropriated by Congress, namely, $50,000 for the construction of this building.

Now, if I can have the attention of my colleague and as the gentleman has an opportunity of addressing the Speaker oftener than anybody else, I hope he will not consume the time of the committee for that purpose, as I see he is engaged in conversation with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I am listening.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wanted to call his attention to one fact, that the public officers in that Territory are required to perform their duties without having any place furnished therefor, and, if you will allow this appropriation to go in, the citizens residing there have agreed and stand ready to furnish an equal amount by private subscription, and put it in the hands of the Secretary to build a substantial and suitable structure for this purpose.

There is already an acre of land reserved there by the Government, and a land office has been erected, costing, I believe, only $800, a wooden building which has been placed upon this vacant lot. If, therefore, this appropriation is made the Government gets the benefit of a $100,000 building for the expenditure of but $50,000; and I think in the interest of economy, especially as the interest on $50,000 will not equal one-fourth of the rents the Government must pay for the offices of the Territorial government there, this amendment ought to be adopted. So it is a matter of economy as well as public necessity.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Illinois any statute which authorizes this construction?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair understands very well that I do not submit any statute authority.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point of order is made that there is no existing law.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; that is correct. There is no law.

Mr. BURROWS. So the gentleman misapprehended the question of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. The law does not authorize the construction of the building, but it authorizes these officers to perform and requires them to perform certain duties, while it furnishes no place in which to do them. Now, if they must perform their duties, they must have some office in which to perform them. I desire it also to be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that I hold in my hand an obligation on the part of the citizens there to subscribe an equal amount with the amount appropriated by the Government for this building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies, $675,000: Provided, That not exceeding $400,000 of this appropriation may be advanced to marshals, to be accounted for in the usual way, the residue to remain in the Treasury, to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856, Revised Statutes.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I move to amend this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 90, strike out "four hundred thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I understand that amendment is approved by the Treasury Department. I have a letter from the First Auditor of the Treasury, dated March 10, 1890, which was transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I take it for granted the Secretary of the Treasury approves the amendment. The Auditor inclosed to me some extracts from a report that was made to the Secretary of the Treasury not long since by a commission appointed by the Secretary in regard to the payment of the expenses of United States marshals, and I send these extracts forward to the desk, and ask that they be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Earliest attention is called to a practice which has obtained for years of advancing money to United States marshals for the appropriation of "Fees and expenses of United States marshals." Upon the qualification of a marshal, and before he has entered actively upon the discharge of his duties, it is the common practice to advance to him large sums upon the requisition of the Attorney-General, thus practically paying the marshal his fees before they are earned and his expenses before they are incurred.

This is the only instance known in which compensation is advanced before it is due, and in the absence of any reason for the exception we think it is an unsatisfactory business, in a measure demoralizing and often resulting in loss to the Government. The basis upon which it rests is that the marshal must have the money to meet the expenses of deputies in serving processes, etc. But it is believed that in the majority of cases, if not all, the marshal, upon the receipt of the funds, takes what he supposes he may earn in the ensuing quarter and deposits the remainder to his official credit to be drawn upon at option.

Generally the deputies bear their own expenses, and nothing is paid to them by the marshal until the accounts are settled at the Treasury. Thus, after paying himself in advance, he has remaining on hand, sometimes for months, very large sums, tempting him to misapplication. The books of the First Comptroller's Office show that the larger portion of balances remaining outstanding against United States marshals is on account of this appropriation, and caused by disallowances made of fees and expenses charged in excess and illegally paid by the marshal to himself or deputies. The loss and delay in making settlement with this class of officers could be to a very great extent avoided if no money was advanced to them except upon rendition and settlement of their accounts.

If this was required no balance would appear against a marshal in this class of accounts, and only the amount actually found to be due him would be remitted after settlement. The present practice of remitting in advance causes balances to appear, necessitates demands for deposits to close accounts, and very often entails actual loss of money and tedious suits by the Government. That the existing practice should be discontinued, and only sufficient sums advanced to meet the current necessities of the service, appears to be both just and proper. We can find no warrant of law for this present practice, but, on the contrary, section 859 of the Revised Statutes seems clearly to indicate that the fees and expenses of all court officers are reimbursable and only payable after settlement of the accounts therefor.

In the last appropriation act passed by Congress was incorporated a provision wisely prohibiting an advance of more than $300,000 of the $675,000 appropriated for these services for the year 1890.

We are of opinion that nothing should be advanced; but if the practice is to be continued the sum of $100,000 would be ample to meet all emergencies, and this, judiciously distributed, would perhaps insure the Government against loss.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. The paper just read is also contained in Report No. 3, special session of the Senate, submitted to the Senate by Mr. COKKRELL, March 28, 1889, from the Select Committee to Examine the Methods of Conducting Business in the Executive Departments (page 58).

I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will accept that amendment. It seems to be approved by the Treasury Department.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a paper without date and so far as I can see it is without signature.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I have here the letter of the First Auditor, Mr. George P. Fisher, dated March 10, 1890, transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Treasury, in which letter that paper is inclosed. The First Auditor says:

I inclose for your consideration a copy of the report bearing upon the accountability of marshals and clerks, and suggesting some changes in the present practices of the Department, which was prepared in my office some time ago and transmitted to the Secretary for his appropriate action. I shall be glad to render any further service in my power either to yourself or your committee, to the end that some measures may be adopted to correct an evil which has become a national scandal.

The letter of Mr. Fisher, the Auditor, was first transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and then by the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted to me, so I got it through the regular channel.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems that the Auditor who has the first guess at auditing the accounts, but who does not have the last guess—the Comptroller has that—has written a letter. Now, I do not understand that it is in the shape of an official document which has ever received the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. And, if it is, these are appropriations for the Department of Justice, and I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that last Congress we went into this matter fully, and we did include the proviso that there should not be more than $400,000—

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Three hundred thousand dollars for the year ending June 30, 1889, and $400,000 this year. I would like to know why the gentleman has increased the amount $100,000 this year.

Mr. CANNON. I think it was $400,000 last year. I will see in a moment. Yes, it was $400,000 last year. My friend is mistaken.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I have not looked at the statute, but I took it for granted that the report was correct. The report says it was $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. This proviso is exactly the same as was passed in the last Congress. We inquired about it, and, while it was not recommended, the official who came up from the Department of Justice said it seemed to him that a continuation of the provision might result in economy and closer administration. Therefore we put it in; but they insisted that the $400,000 ought to go on if they were to proceed without very considerable embarrassment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I want to know if the gentleman is positive that this has not been increased from $300,000 to $400,000.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; there is no doubt about that. The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of United States commissioners and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $100,000. And no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, or other fees in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless the prosecution has been commenced upon a sworn complaint setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant, or upon sworn complaint by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or revenue agent, setting forth the facts upon information and belief and approved either before or after such arrest by a circuit or district judge or the attorney of the United States in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed or the indictment is found.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 3, page 22, the following:

"Provided, That in each case where such prosecution has been approved by the district attorney, as herein required, he shall make out a written statement of the grounds upon which he rests such approval, and shall send a copy of the same to the Attorney-General."

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that that changes existing law.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I hope the gentleman will allow me to explain the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. It is getting late; still if the gentleman desires to do so I will allow him to make his explanation.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. All I want is to put upon record the opinion of the Attorney-General in favor of this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I must insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Then I ask leave to print the statement of the Attorney-General.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing that should be done, and I do not want to shut off the gentleman's statement if he wishes to make it; but I notify him that I must make the point of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. This is approved in express terms by the Attorney-General in a letter dated April 20, 1890, from which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The second section, I think, is right, but I would make one further provision, and that is that in every case where the prosecution has not been approved before the warrant issues, but is approved by the district attorney afterward, he shall make up a written statement of the grounds upon which he rests such approval, and send a copy of the same to the Attorney-General.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Now, bearing upon that subject, I want to quote from the report of Attorney-General Miller to the present Congress, and I will ask the Clerk to read what the Attorney-General says right there.

The Clerk read as follows:

From a number of judges, as well as from other sources, comes the information that very great abuses arise out of the action of commissioners of the circuit courts in the amount of fees they make and charge for themselves, as well as those which they assist the marshals, and, in some cases, district attorneys, in making. Whether it is practicable to eliminate entirely the excessive charges in the enormous bills of expense in proceedings had before these commissioners is perhaps doubtful; but certainly Congress, by enacting a clear and definite fee-bill for such proceedings and by providing that no prosecutions shall be commenced, except in an emergency shown in an affidavit, until the district attorney shall have approved of the commencement of such proceedings, and by prescribing severe punishment for any violations of the laws so enacted, can do much to repress these abuses and relieve the treasury from illegal exactions.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just one remark further. I want to have read the opinion of the First Auditor on this same question, which will be found in the letter dated March 10, 1890.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 2 of the bill, requiring the approval of the district attorney of all warrants in internal revenue cases, is already embodied in the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, and although no perceptible diminution of the number of internal-revenue cases has resulted by reason of its enactment, I have no doubt that it is a wise and wholesome restraint and should be retained.

I would, however, recommend the amendment of the existing requirement and also of section 2 of the bill, so as to provide for the approval of the district attorney or his assistant, in writing, of all warrants issued by United States commissioners before the arrest, except in cases in which the delay in obtaining such previous approval might result in the escape of the supposed offender, which last fact should be clearly shown by the commissioner. It seems to me a very useless requirement to make of the district attorney, to approve the issuance of a warrant, after the party has been arrested and, in many instances, after he himself has earned his fee in the case.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I hope the point of order will not be insisted upon, as I know by experience that unless this amendment can be adopted now the legislation desired will fail. It is conceded that the amendment is in the line of good legislation, but it is insisted upon that it ought not to be tacked on to this bill. I do not know how else to get the proposition agreed to. For more than five years I have been diligently striving, in season and out of season, to secure favorable action by Congress upon many measures which I have formulated and devised for the relief of the citizen from injustice and oppression and to protect the Treasury from spoliation.

This section of this bill which the Clerk has just read is the latter part of section 2 of a bill—H. R. 5931, first session of the Fiftieth Congress—which passed this House on my motion on February 7, 1888. The whole of said bill was made a part of the Mills tariff bill, and was adopted by the House of Representatives when that bill passed a few months later. The Mills bill also contained a number of other provisions draughted by me and contained in other bills introduced by me, intended to repeal burdensome laws upon the tax-payer and to ameliorate and remove obnoxious and annoying features of the internal-revenue laws. The sections of the Mills bill to which I allude are 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40.

I refer also to the bill "to modify the internal-revenue system of legislation," etc., which on my motion was considered by the House on March 3, 1887, and which failed to pass, a two-thirds vote being required, although the yeas were 139 and the nays were 112. There are many other gentlemen who have been quite as earnest as I have been to secure the enactment of similar legislation. All things, they say, come to him who waits, unless perchance he is a Representative in Congress. The section under consideration would not now be a law if the Committee on Appropriations had not consented to insert it in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the amendment which I have just offered, approved by the Attorney-General and by the Secretary of the Treasury, will stand no chance for consideration in any other form by the Fifty-first Congress.

Nearly all the propositions I have mentioned have passed the House of Representatives several times. Two of them were enacted into law by the Fiftieth Congress, and one or two more may succeed in becoming law before this Congress adjourns. All the others will fail, because the business of Congress is so conducted that it is almost impossible for any measure of general importance to be safely engineered through the House and the Senate unless it is contained in some bill which is cordially approved by the Committee on Appropriations or by the Committee on Ways and Means. If either of these committees is determined that any measure shall pass, it is almost sure to become a law. I regret that the point of order will rule out my amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I only say that this may be proper legislation presented, but I do not know about it. I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken. The Clerk read as follows:

The payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, including the employment of janitors and watchmen in rooms or buildings rented for the use of courts, and of interpreters, experts, and stenographers; of furnishing and collecting evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving of records, $140,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out that section providing that miscellaneous expenses may be authorized by the Attorney-General.

I do so for the purpose, Mr. Chairman, of calling the attention of the committee to the section of the bill which gives an appropriation for the judiciary department of the Government. It amounts to $3,605,000, and of course there will be a deficiency. There always has been and there always will be and practically there is no control over this expenditure.

The Attorney-General himself can not control it under our system, and Congress will not pass the necessary limitations, as we have just seen, which this Attorney-General has asked and which his predecessor asked. We grant over $900,000 for the fees of witnesses, and over $600,000 for jurors' fees, and without any real control over it; and it is one of the means by which much injustice is done to the private citizen.

Under the internal-revenue laws it produces in a small way almost innumerable frauds, and a corruption that is growing into the very courts of justice themselves, and producing a good deal of arbitrary oppression. Now, I do not know that there is any remedy for it; but certainly it is getting worse every year instead of getting better. Expenditures grow larger; not much larger, but they are expenditures which ought not to grow any larger. There is field for real reform here, and no man seems to be willing to undertake the labor of it. A change from the fee system to the salary system would at once change the whole mode of action now in vogue in prosecutions in our courts.

Now, in cases where the Federal law is violated and there are prosecutions for it, the simple change from the fee system to the salary system would reduce the number of prosecutions probably 60 per cent., reduce the expense of these particular branches of the judiciary expenditure perhaps 60 per cent., and would relieve the Federal courts of the unjust, but very widespread suspicion that some of the court officials are in combination with marshals and other officers in making unnecessary fees in frivolous and oppressive prosecutions.

I do not desire to do more than call attention to two points: First, that there will inevitably be a deficiency in this item and, second, that this bill perpetuates all the evils of the system which have grown up, and these evils are extremely numerous. I offered the amendment simply for the purpose of calling attention to it and to express the hope that the gentleman who is at the head of the Committee on Appropriations or the gentlemen who are on the Committee on the Judiciary may, after taking a clear view of this matter from one of these committees, report some well considered bill which would change our system, a system which is so oppressive and so expensive.

I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I do not know who controls the time. Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. You can renew the amendment.

Mr. OATES. I renew the amendment.

I merely wish to say, in relation to the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky respecting the present fee system of compensation of United States court officials, that, being a member of the Committee on the Judiciary detailed specially for the purpose of investigating the abuses in that connection, I can safely assure the House that the Judiciary Committee will soon report a bill which the investigation has shown to be absolutely necessary in the way of a wholesome reform and to change the fee system, not only in respect to the compensation of the district attorneys, but of many others of the court officials—the marshal and probably the commissioners also, and the clerks of the courts, perhaps, as well. I can agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that there is no way of reforming these abuses which now exist under the system, because they are largely due to the defects of the system itself; but I think it is a thing assured that before the expiration of this Congress—if not at this session, early in the next—the House will have an opportunity to pass such a reformatory measure.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $806,000. And printing and binding for Congress chargeable to this appropriation, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing of either House, shall be so recommended in a report containing an approximate estimate of the cost thereof, together with a statement from the Public Printer of estimated approximate cost of work previously ordered by Congress, within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made (all reserve work shall be bound in sheep); and the heads of the Executive Departments, before transmitting their annual reports to Congress, the printing of which is chargeable to this appropriation, shall cause the same to be carefully examined, and shall exclude therefrom all matter, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports to be necessary and to relate entirely to the transaction of public business.

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to offer the following proviso to come in at line 9, page 95.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following after the word "business," on page 95, line 9: "Provided, That no money appropriated by this or the preceding paragraph or by this act shall be paid to any person employed in the Public Printing Office for or during any time such employé is on leave of absence with pay under existing law in excess of the pay allowed during such leave of absence, nor shall any such person receive pay for leave of absence during the time such person may be at work and receive pay therefor: And provided further, That no money appropriated under said paragraphs or under this act shall be paid to any person for work or labor performed in excess of eight hours a day, as prescribed by existing law, unless such labor in excess of eight hours a day is performed on the daily proceedings of Congress, when extra labor could not be procured in time for the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the morning succeeding the daily sessions of Congress."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, to that amendment I make the point of order that it changes existing law and is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the fact that this was one of the provisions that I had in mind when I expressed a desire for general debate, and I claim the right to the floor now for general debate under that demand.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to legislate upon this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is not legislation; this is to carry out the law.

Mr. CANNON. The law carries itself out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not under this Administration.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I must make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] has the floor.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I desire to say that this amendment does not change any existing law; it does not modify any existing law, nor does it provide for any new legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Then what is the use of it?

Mr. BYNUM. The use of it is simply to compel, as we have heretofore done upon appropriation bills, officers of the Government to obey existing laws which they are violating. That is the object of it.

Mr. CANNON. That is to say, if an officer of the Government does not obey the law, if you pass the law over again he will obey it. Is that it?

Mr. BYNUM. No, that is not it. In the Forty-ninth Congress we provided for granting a leave of absence of fifteen days to employés in the Government Printing Office, and I think that every member of this Congress who was here at the time supported that law heartily, because the clerks in the other Departments were then receiving thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay, while no leave was given to the employés of the Government Printing Office, and it was generally conceded by every one that they needed the rest more than the employés of any other Department. Therefore, fifteen days' leave of absence was granted to them almost if not quite unanimously; and then, following that, in the Fiftieth Congress, fifteen days more was granted, placing the Government printing employes upon an equality in that respect with the employes in all the other Departments.

While it is true that it was intended to grant a leave of thirty days to employes in the Government Printing Office with pay, I do not think a single member of Congress ever intended that those employes should receive double pay during the time of their "leave;" yet some of them have received it. That certainly was not the spirit in which the law was passed; that was not the purpose for which it was enacted. It was passed, first, to give those employes a sufficient leave of absence for rest during a certain season, the same as was given to other Government clerks. It was passed probably, in the second place, for the purpose of giving other persons, printers and others, who did not have employment, an opportunity to find work during that brief period. Now, the present Public Printer is not enforcing that law. Upon the contrary, he is violating not only the spirit but the letter of the law by working these employes during the time of their leave of absence and paying them for the work as well as compensation for their leave.

If that is the object of the leave, I am opposed to it. If we are not paying sufficient wages to the employes in this office, let us increase their wages; but do not leave it in the hands of the Government Printer to allow double pay for thirty days during the year to favorite employes, a thing which I am informed he has done and is doing. The Public Printer who preceded the present one held that he could not do that. When any employe approached him and said, "I desire to work during my leave of absence if you will pay me for the work and also for the time of my leave," the former Public Printer replied, "I can not do it; the law does not allow me to do it;" but when the present Public Printer is approached by an employe who makes the same request he does agree to do that, and he has, in several instances, paid the employes both for the work and for the time.

Now, this amendment is intended to put an end to that practice. It does not change existing law; it only provides that the existing law shall be carried out. And the same is true of the amendment as to the eight-hour law.

Mr. OATES. What is the language of the law with reference to this leave of absence?

Mr. BYNUM. These employes are given a leave of absence for thirty days with pay. I can not quote the language, but that is the substance of it.

Mr. OATES. Does the Public Printer violate the law when he lets them work?

Mr. BYNUM. I think he does. I think the law for granting the leave of absence means that they shall take their leave and be paid for the time; not that they shall take no leave, but shall work during the time and shall receive double pay.

Mr. OATES. Very likely the gentleman states the intention of the law correctly, but I suggest to my friend whether it would not be well to define clearly just what was intended by that law.

Mr. BYNUM. Well, this amendment proposes that when they work during the time of their leave they shall not receive double pay. It requires them to take their leave and thereby give an opportunity for some other employe to work during the time of their absence.

Mr. OATES. Your amendment is intended to make that clear?

Mr. BYNUM. Yes.

Mr. SPRINGER. The law does not require an employe to take his leave, but it says that he may have leave and may receive pay the same as if he were at work; but the Public Printer has construed that to allow him to give a man formal leave and then keep him at work and allow him double pay.

Mr. OATES. I think the principle is all wrong, but I would not single out the employes of any one Department.

Mr. BYNUM. There is no other Department in which this practice prevails.

Mr. OATES. The leave of absence, I think, is applicable to all the Departments.

Mr. BYNUM. But the employes are required to take their leave in the other Departments.

Mr. OATES. They ought never to have been given leave with pay, but I would not make the rule applicable to this particular Department when it is not applied to others.

Mr. BYNUM. I am not stopping to discuss that question. In the other Departments, as I understand, employes are required to take their leave in order to secure pay for the leave. In short, they are not allowed double pay in any other Department. Nor were they allowed double pay in the Government Printing Office until the present Public Printer so applied the law.

Now, with regard to the eight-hour law, the very same principle comes up. The law provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work. We passed a provision on an appropriation bill in the last Congress requiring the Public Printer to enforce the eight-hour law. Some complaints had been made by Mr. Benedict to the effect that it was impossible to enforce the law, and there was complaint by the typographical union, who appealed to Congress on the subject, and, as gentlemen will recollect, the O'Neill amendment was ingrafted on the appropriation bill, requiring the Public Printer to enforce the eight-hour law.

In the Government Printing Office we pay ample wages to enable printers there, even by piecework, to earn good wages during a day of eight hours. In fact, they earn much better wages when they work by the piece than when they work by the day. The typographical union has been here asking Congress to pass a law restoring the rate of wages for daily labor to $4 instead of $3.20, for a day of eight hours. But good printers working by the piece are able to earn more than $4 a day.

It is very true, as many printers and employes of that office have said to me, that there are some men in all Departments who are not content with their share. The object of the eight-hour system is first to establish eight hours as a day's labor, to carry that principle through all the Departments of the Government. And one special reason for applying this principle to Government employes is the influence which it will have throughout the country. I do not doubt that a great majority of the members here are honestly in favor of the establishment of the eight-hour system. I repeat that one important object in enforcing this system in all the Departments of the Government where it can be is because of its influence with regard to labor throughout the country.

For this reason labor organizations have come to Congress desiring the establishment of this system in all the Departments of the Government wherever possible. And they are now asking that there be incorporated in all Government contracts for the construction of public buildings a provision requiring of the contractors that all such work shall be conducted on the eight-hour basis. I heartily favor this, because I believe the Government ought to take the lead in this matter and establish wherever it can be done the eight-hour system, paying good wages for a day's work of eight hours.

And whenever an employe in the Government Printing Office earns a good salary by working eight hours a day, I say he ought to be required to stop there, and give an opportunity for the employment of some of the idle labor upon the outside. But there are men there who want to work twelve, fourteen, or sixteen hours a day, earning $5 to $8 a day, as some of them do, while a large number of working people are forced to remain idle.

The whole object of this amendment is to require these men to take their leave if they get pay for it—to require the men who are employed to work so far as practicable upon the eight-hour basis. In this amendment I have provided one exception, which I think will be found necessary. In printing the daily proceedings of Congress it is probable the Government Printer would not be able to find idle printers to be called in during the evening or night to assist in setting up the RECORD. Hence, in the amendment I have provided this exception: that in the printing of the daily proceedings, if extra labor can not be supplied, the regular employes may work more than eight hours and receive pay accordingly.

The proposition I have submitted is in accord with the sentiments of the members of the Federation of Labor, who presented to the President a short time ago a statement of the evil influences and effects of the continual violation, by the officers of the Government, of this law which has been on the statute-book ever since 1868. They have called the President's attention to the fact that in the Government Printing Office this law is violated with impunity and have asked the President to take some action in regard to the enforcement of the law.

Not only has this law been on the statute-books since 1868, but, during the last Congress, as I have already stated, we ingrafted upon an appropriation bill a provision requiring the Government Printer to enforce it. The present incumbent violated it with impunity and ignores both the law and the instructions to enforce it. I have offered this amendment, providing that no money shall be paid under this appropriation except in accordance with the provisions of law. The amendment is not open to objection, so far as the rules of the House are concerned or so far as regards the merit and the propriety of the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a word on the point of order. This provision does change existing law or there is no necessity for it. The gentleman alleges—whether such is the fact or not, I do not know; I have no reason to say it is not so—he alleges that the Public Printer employs people in his establishment during their thirty days' leave of absence. Now, the Public Printer can not do that and have his accounts audited at the Treasury Department unless there is law for it. Then, if there is a law for it, this changes it. The bare statement of the proposition argues it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Illinois mean to say that the fact that an auditor passes an account is conclusive proof that there is a law to justify the auditor in so doing?

Mr. CANNON. So far as the machinery of Congress has provided to settle these cases, yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But the bare fact that an auditor passes an account can not be conclusive proof that the auditor is infallible or that there is law for it. It may turn out that he was acting in combination with somebody else to produce an unwarranted result or his decision may involve a mistake.

Mr. CANNON. Congress has provided a tribunal to audit these accounts. Who? First, the Auditor and then the First or Second Comptroller. In practice, the Public Printer draws the money from the public Treasury and pays for this labor; but he can not settle his accounts or discharge his bond until first the Auditor has passed upon his accounts and second the Comptroller. That is the court of last resort that Congress has provided to construe the law and settle the accounts.

Now the gentleman claims that under the law as enforced to-day the Public Printer is employing people during their thirty days' leave and paying them. If that is true, the law is that way and his provision changes the law.

Again the statutes of the United States declare that eight hours shall constitute a day's work. This provision repeals that law in part, because the gentleman now proposing this amendment in the name of the eight-hour law, and professing to be the friend of labor, in the latter part of the amendment authorizes the Public Printer to employ people more than eight hours, another change of law.

Now, I make the point of order for this reason: The House of Representatives has said to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Committee of the Whole, "You shall not report—you shall not have the power to report or consider legislation in connection with the appropriation bills." My own opinion was that that rule ought to be changed, and I made an effort to get it changed, that we might investigate and that we might within certain limits legislate upon appropriation bills. But the House of Representatives refused to make the change and we have not investigated it. Now the gentleman from Indiana, and perchance other gentlemen, notwithstanding the rule of the House, want to come in here and move amendments changing existing law. Against that I protest. If the law needs a change here is the Committee on Printing, which has jurisdiction and is a privileged committee for many purposes, to which such matters should be referred. Let the committee consider and let it report what legislation, if any, is needed.

Mr. OATES. Suppose the law is silent and the accounts of the Public Printer are presented for audit in just such a case as that suggested here by the gentleman from Indiana—I do not know anything of the facts—

Mr. CANNON. Neither do I.

Mr. OATES. But in such case, if the law is silent and the Auditor sees proper to pass the accounts, seeing that they are for work honestly performed for the Government, though it might embrace payments to men for a portion of the time when they were allowed leave of absence, the gentleman from Illinois holds, as I understand him, that that makes the law?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The statute places in the hands of the Comptroller the power to construe the various acts of Congress touching public expenditures, and his construction is just as much the law as when the court construes it. He is the court.

Mr. PETERS. But he has no discretion to go outside of the law.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly not.

Mr. OATES. Then you hold that, although the law may not be specific, yet it is sufficient to authorize the payment, if the Auditor so finds. I doubt that.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. If the gentleman's statement is correct (of which, as I have said, I have no knowledge), I hold that his amendment works a change of law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood him to say that he tried to change that rule in this Congress. I do not think the report of the debates discloses any efforts on the part of the gentleman; and I would like to know where he made the effort.

Mr. CANNON. Well, perhaps I was a little too broad in the statement. I say that I advocated the change.

Mr. BLOUNT. At some other place. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. No; at this place.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, then, before some other body than this.

Mr. CANNON. I have been at all times desirous of such a change, and in this body.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a few moments on the point of order.

On the 16th of February, 1888, when the sundry civil bill was pending in Committee of the Whole, a member from Missouri, Mr. O'Neill, moved the adoption of the following amendment:

The Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the department under his charge.

Thereupon the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Burnes, in charge of the bill, made the point of order that the amendment proposed a change of existing law and was new legislation. The Chairman of the committee at that time—

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Who was he?

A MEMBER. Mr. SPRINGER. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. No, it was not, but it was a good decision, anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If it was the gentleman from Illinois, he knows all about it, for we have never had a better parliamentarian. If he made the decision I know it is a good one; and if it was made by anybody else and he indorses it I am satisfied that it must be reliable.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not happen to find the name here, but I will find it and state it afterwards. I will read, however, what the Chairman said:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Burnes] to cite the statute in reference to this matter. The gentleman seems to admit with his colleague that there is an eight-hour law applying to this class of labor.

And further on, after an interruption:

The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Burnes], in charge of the bill, to raise the question of order on the ground that the amendment offered by his colleague changed existing law. The Chair now understands him to admit that it does not change existing law, and if it does not the Chair would not feel disposed to exclude it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move the adoption of the amendment.

After some debate had been had upon the bill the amendment was adopted by the committee and reported to the House and a yeas-and-nays vote was ordered upon it; and on the 17th of February, 1888, this was adopted—yeas 182, nays 53; and in the affirmative on that amendment I find the name of my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON].

So that he voted at that time—

That the Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the department under his charge.

Now, since that proposition was passed the Public Printer has refused to enforce the eight-hour law in the spirit which this House understands that law, namely, that eight hours, as the law says, shall constitute one day's work. Notwithstanding that fact, the Public Printer is now paying perhaps half of the employees in that department by piece, and by the hour, to work from ten to twelve and sometimes sixteen hours out of the twenty-four, and they are paid by the hour for those hours.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Can he work piece hands on the eight-hour system? There is a practical printer's question, and you can get but one answer to it from Portland, Oregon, and San Francisco, to Portland, Me.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer that by saying that in the Printing Office the time required to do particular amounts of work is well understood.

Mr. FARQUHAR. You are complaining of this piece matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. So much time is allowed for each of these purposes, and the time is regulated by the office, under the office rules, and by the rules of the printers' union. But it is not on piecework that the complaint is made. It is on hour work; and will the gentleman say that under the rule the Public Printer is authorized to use this money to pay for more than eight hours' work? Will he answer that?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will answer that question. The Committee on Labor investigated this matter, and as I am not chairman of that committee I do not want to say anything about the conclusions of the committee, but there were parties who appeared before the Committee on Labor on this eight-hour matter, and, as I remember, I asked the question of the practical printers—because of the complaint that had been made against the Public Printer—if it was possible to carry out the law in respect to piecework, and every practical printer before that committee said it was impossible to do it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not in regard to piecework; but you have not answered the other question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. When you come to your hour hands you are in a different way, but this is not the city of New York, nor it is not the city of Chicago, nor St. Louis. You can not go out into your streets and get your men to fill up after your eight hours, nor you can not make a running schedule of your pay-roll. The Government is differently situated from that, and so the result is that—

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the gentleman making a speech now?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No; the gentleman is talking some genuine printer's sense.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York always says something that is worth hearing.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have no personal care about this thing at all, but I have heard a great many critics outside of the Government Printing Office criticise the present Printer, and they also criticised his predecessor, Mr. Benedict, but any practical printer who has had charge of one hundred or two hundred hands knows how impossible it is to do piecework under the eight-hour rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the hour work that I am talking about.

Mr. FARQUHAR. About the hour work there is this trouble, that you can not get your months or weeks to run even on work with the matter that you pour into the Government Printing Office, and the result is that no Public Printer can do any differently than the foreman there has done, in regulating the time of the men and numbers employed.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Did not the delegation which appeared before the committee of which the gentleman from New York and myself were both members find a great deal of fault about this very evil that the gentleman from Indiana aims at in his amendment, and did they not say that he repeatedly employed men, when there was no necessity for it, to do piecework, and that they were employed for ten and twelve hours by the hour?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not mean to criticise the general objections that were made at that time, but when they were before the committee I asked those who were most emphatic in their complaint—I asked the question positively of one of them, could he run the office any better than it was run now under the eight-hour system, and how he would regulate it, and he could not answer the question. Neither could any practical printer answer it. You have got to enact the restoration of wages bill, and you have got to put your men on a different footing in the Printing Office before you can work your eight-hour law, or else the Government work must stay behind.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Did not this same delegation, which came from the Federation of Labor in this District, say that there were plenty of printers who could be had here in this city at any time if there was any extra rush of work?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I would answer that just as Mr. Benedict and the present Public Printer, Mr. Palmer, answered it, by saying that they had not been found.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Did not that delegation say so?

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is utterly impossible to do in the city of Washington as you could do in the city of New York or in the city of Chicago. In the city of Washington there are not the number of printers to call upon.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I want you to state, as a member of the Committee on Labor, what the delegation coming from those printers said to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. CANNON. Why does not the gentleman [Mr. TURNER], who is a member of this Committee on Labor, report, in his own time, some legislation instead of trying to put it on this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. The point I wish to make in regard to this question of order is that this proposition is in order for another reason. It is there stated that no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for any time in excess of eight hours a day or paid for any time when they are getting leave-pay. Now it is in order for this purpose to limit the purposes of the appropriation. We can say for what purpose any money, under this bill, shall be appropriated, and can withhold it from any other purpose than that for which we say it shall go.

The CHAIRMAN. It provides for payment in excess of eight hours.

Mr. SPRINGER. That it shall not be paid for any work performed in excess of eight hours.

The CHAIRMAN. It provides that it shall be paid in excess of eight hours for certain kinds of work. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BYNUM. I will strike out the latter clause, if that is objectionable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the other ground.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I move to strike out the last word of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that at the time when the O'Neill matter was pending the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] denounced the Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, for failing to carry out the eight-hour law.

Mr. McCOMAS. I am in favor of it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why do you not carry it out?

Mr. McCOMAS. I am in favor of carrying it out.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but in place of the present Public Printer carrying it out, with respect to more than two-thirds of his employes he has failed to obey that law; and personally I am in favor of anything that will enforce it absolutely.

I want to state that after the O'Neill amendment was passed Mr. Benedict did obey that law and continued to obey it as long as he remained in office and that it has been violated since the present Public Printer came in.

Mr. FARQUHAR. For how long did Mr. Benedict carry it out?

Mr. SPRINGER. Until he went out of office.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It was stated by his own foreman that he did not carry it out.

Mr. SPRINGER. I state that he did carry it out.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And, more than that, I say that he could not do it if he would.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I say that he did carry it out.

Mr. FARQUHAR. For not more than thirty days.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that anybody who says he can not carry out a law of Congress should resign and not be allowed to hold such an office. It is no excuse for gentlemen to say that we can not enforce the laws of Congress. It is only for Congress to state that it must be done and it will be done.

Mr. McCOMAS. I want to say that if you ask the foreman of the Public Printing Office he will tell you that Mr. Benedict did not enforce that law.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that the gentleman from Maryland did say that the Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, did not observe that law, and that he could have observed it if he had wanted to do so. Mr. Benedict, when he first came into office, simply followed the precedents until Congress compelled him to execute the law, and he executed it until he went out of office.

Mr. McCOMAS. His foreman will deny that.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is in order for this House to say that no money shall be paid under this bill for any unlawful purpose. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to offer the same amendment with the exception stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers the amendment previously offered, but strikes out the proviso.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read, then.

Insert following after the word "business," on page 95, line 9:

"Provided, That no money appropriated by this or the preceding paragraph, or by this act, shall be paid to any person employed in the Public Printing Office for or during any time such employee is on leave of absence with pay, under existing law, in excess of the pay allowed during such leave of absence; nor shall any such person receive pay for leave of absence during the time such person may be at work and receive pay therefor. And provided further, That no money appropriated under said paragraphs or under this act shall be paid to any person for work or labor performed in excess of eight hours a day, as prescribed by existing law."

Mr. CANNON. I renew my point of order to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Upon that ruling I desire to appeal. I want simply to state that would rule that this bill may appropriate money for violating the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to debate that. I do not think it ought to stand. [Laughter.] I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to state in explanation of this amendment that it simply provides that no money shall be paid under this bill in violation of law, and the Chair by ruling out this amendment says that you can use this money for purposes prohibited by general law already. Now, as a fact, there is a law on the statute-book that says eight hours shall constitute a day's work. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] says that it is impossible to enforce this on piecework. I say that the Printing Office has certain working hours and other certain hours. The Public Printer has the key and can open the doors and close them at his will, so that those employed can go out when the eight hours have expired, and they can not stop there a moment unless he is willing that they shall stay there. The work is to be done at the Printing Office, and eight hours is to constitute a day's work.

The gentleman claims under the point of order that you can use money for the purpose of paying for sixteen hours' work performed. That not only means that when the law says he may be entitled to a leave of absence for thirty days that he may receive full pay for thirty days as if at work, but the Public Printer may allow him thirty days' leave and then employ him and let him work through the same thirty days and pay him extra for those thirty days, which is paying him double for the work done. That is in violation of law and against the spirit of this law. This amendment was simply for the purpose of saying that in reporting an appropriation of this kind no money shall be used by the Public Printer to pay a person in excess of the time when legal work can be performed, and also for time that the person was assumed to be, and legally was, on leave of absence and not at work at all.

So that under both features of this amendment, for the reason that it is to prevent this money from being used contrary to law and for the reason that it is the province of this House and of Congress to direct the objects and the purposes for which any and all appropriations are made, it is in order. And, with all due respect to the Chair, I hope this decision will not stand as the judgment of the committee. I hope that this committee will not say that the Public Printer may violate the eight-hour law and the leave-of-absence law at will and that we will sustain him in it. I hope my eloquent friend from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], who says he is in favor of the eight-hour law and who so fiercely denounced Mr. Benedict for doing what this Public Printer is now doing, will vote to enforce that law.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will vote for the proposition in another form.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I have taken this appeal, with all due respect to the Chair, for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment of the committee upon the correctness of the ruling. It strikes me that this amendment does not in any respect or any particular conflict with the rules of the House. It is in plain words and provides for nothing except the enforcement of existing laws. The present law for leave of absence certainly means that the employes shall have a leave of absence and shall receive pay for the time of the leave.

The eight-hour law applies to the Government Printing Office just the same as to any other Department. There is no exception made by the law. If the law is deficient in that respect it ought to be amended. I have before me the address made by Mr. Denham, the president of the Federation of Labor Unions of the District of Columbia, to the President of the United States on the 27th day of May last, in which, calling attention to the violation of the eight-hour law, he says:

We instance at the present time the Government Printing Office, where employes are required and allowed to make over-time.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] speaks of the difficulty of enforcing the eight-hour law with the men employed on piecework. Does not the very same difficulty arise in granting those men their thirty days' leave of absence? Yet every man who works piecework gets his thirty days' leave of absence. It is just as difficult to give a man whose work is piecework his thirty days' leave of absence as it is to require him to work only eight hours a day. The eight-hour law was enforced by Mr. Benedict when he was Public Printer, probably not up to the full extent of the law, but it was enforced much more rigidly than ever was done before or has been since his time.

I remember that Mr. Benedict did make some complaint about it, but nevertheless he went to work and enforced the law as faithfully as he could and complaints ceased, and the foreman of one of the divisions in the office told me that by the enforcement of the eight-hour law he was enabled to give extra work to a large number of men who were out of employment and who needed the work very badly; and that was one of the objects of the law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the law requires that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor and the piecework can not be so arranged as to make a day of eight hours, is it not a violation of law for the Public Printer to continue to give piecework instead of paying his men by the day?

Mr. FARQUHAR. There is a bill now before Congress to provide for employing all the men equally on the same basis, and if that bill were passed and extra compensation made for night work there would not be any trouble at the Government Printing Office in regard to the eight-hour question. No man stands on this floor who is a better friend of the eight-hour law than I am. I have been its friend since 1866. I walked in the first procession of workmen demanding the eight-hour law, and I will walk in the last, probably.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, walk in the procession here now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYNUM. This is the first time I have ever heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] assert upon this floor that the eight-hour law could not be enforced. I remember that when the amendment of Mr. O'Neill was ingrafted upon the appropriation bill the gentleman from New York was silent as to the difficulty of enforcing it, and this is the first time that he has come forward to say that it can not be enforced.

Mr. FARQUHAR. When Mr. O'Neill, with myself and others, agitated upon this floor in favor of the enforcement of the eight-hour law, it was to get the law enforced where it could be enforced, but I never said that it could be enforced in piecework, and I know it can not.

Mr. BYNUM. There was no qualification made in regard to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can not the Public Printer define the hours when the office shall be opened and when it shall be closed, and can not the law be enforced in that way?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is so much of an amateur printer that I can not well answer his question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been in a printing office and I know perhaps as much about it as some people who claim to know more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in order to give my colleague, the eminent laborer from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], and the other eminent laborer from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] a chance to "mend their hold," I move the committee do now rise. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriation for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FRANK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

- To Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, for the remainder of the week.
- To Mr. CUTCHEON, for two days.
- To Mr. CRAIG, for ten days.
- To Mr. MANSUR, till Wednesday next.
- To Mr. CONNELL, for the rest of this week.
- To Mr. COLEMAN, for about two weeks.
- To Mr. BARWIG, for this day.
- To Mr. LEHLBACH, for three days.
- To Mr. DIBBLE, for five days.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—FOREST FIRES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress, with a view to securing such legislation as may be appropriate, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the destruction by fire, carelessly kindled or left, of the timber upon the public lands. If proper penalties were imposed by law and a few convictions thereunder secured, I do not doubt that much waste of our forests would be prevented.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 16, 1890.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

A bill (S. 3982) granting to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company power to sell and convey to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company all the railway, property, rights, and franchises of the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company in the Territory of Oklahoma and in the Indian Territory; and

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 17, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BURNING OF TIMBER ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of Congress, with a view to securing such legislation as may be appropriate, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, relating to the destruction by fires, carelessly kindled or left, of the timber upon the public lands.

If proper penalties were imposed by law, and a few convictions thereunder secured, I do not doubt that much waste of our forests would be prevented.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 16, 1890.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message with the accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion to the committee. This is one of the most important subjects that they can consider. The present system of sending agents to guard the forests without having some arrangement whereby the citizens can co-operate, is exceedingly defective. It is necessary to have a more friendly understanding between the agents of the Government and the people, who are as much interested as the Government. There is great friction between them. Without discussing who is to blame for it, the result is that the forests are being destroyed by fires. It is estimated that last year more timber was burned by fires than has been cut by settlers since the first settlement of the country, and under the present system of agents it will continue. The more money you spend and the more convictions you have under the present system, the more bad feeling will be created and the great forests will be burned. It is a subject that should be carefully considered.

The forests can not be protected without the co-operation of the people. There is no reason why the Government should not act in conjunction with the States and with the local communities in protecting the timber, and some system ought to be devised whereby we can have the co-operation of all the people. The agents who are sent there get on bad relations with the communities, whether rightfully or wrongfully, and it is impossible for them to protect the timber. If you spend any amount of money it can not be done; you must have the co-operation of the people who live there; and some arrangement ought to be made and some law ought to be passed whereby the States and the local communities will co-operate with the Government in protecting the forests from fires, or we shall lose all our timber.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire what is the question before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the reference of the message of the President of the United States and accompanying papers. They will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, if there be no objection.

Mr. PADDOCK. The reference should be made to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I will state to the Senator from Nevada that several bills relating to the protection of forests are under consideration now by that committee, and the committee would be very glad to have any suggestions or any aid the Senator from Nevada, who is quite familiar with the subject, may be willing or able to give.

Mr. STEWART. That is probably the proper committee to consider it. I do not suggest the reference of the message to the Committee on Public Lands, and I should like to have it go before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the message and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will report as speedily as may be upon this subject, for it is one of the greatest importance, as I think, to the interest of the United States.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the Senator is eminently correct, and that is the view the committee entertains in respect to the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and printed, if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate for an additional force for the Pension Office; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of Naval Post No. 516, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, praying for the passage of the bill to transfer the revenue-marine service to the Navy; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER presented a petition of citizens of the State of Missouri, praying for the free coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Territorial Legislature of Arizona, favoring the passage of an act to secure to that Territory the revenue of the public lands set apart for a public school fund; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of Union Grove Farmers' Alliance, No. 17, of Whitley County, Indiana, praying for the passage of a bill against options and trusts; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Anna B. Nicoll and 10 other citizens of Baltimore County, Maryland, praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of officers and members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Washington Township, Dubuque County, Iowa, praying for an amendment to the interstate-commerce law so that no person or persons of any State or Territory of the United States shall have the right to ship intoxicating liquors into any other State or Territory contrary to the laws thereof; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Muscatine, Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill to limit the hours of work of clerks and employes in first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the East Lincoln Farmers' Alliance, of Hartley, Iowa, praying for the passage of the Butterworth option bill, so called; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Humboldt, Iowa, praying for the passage of an act providing for the payment of the claim of Miss Anna Ella Carroll; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRAY presented a petition of U. S. Grant Post, 327, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic; a petition of Dushane Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, of Maryland; a petition of Naval Post, No. 516, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York; a petition of Wilson Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, of Baltimore, Md.; a petition of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation; a petition of Thatcher Post, No. 111, Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic; and a petition of Post No. 46, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Maine, praying for the passage of the House bill for the transfer of the revenue marine to the Navy as an act of economy and for the benefit of the public service; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PIERCE presented a petition of Sherbrooke Farmers' Alliance, of Steele County, North Dakota, praying for the passage of what is known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Sherbrooke Farmers' Alliance, of Steele County, North Dakota, praying for the passage of what is known as the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2306) releasing S. H. Brooks, assistant treasurer of the United States, and his sureties on his official bond, asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1215) for the relief of Jeremiah Darling, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MOODY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3275) for the relief of John William Cable;

A bill (H. R. 7959) granting a pension to Frederick B. Sells; and

A bill (S. 1521) granting a pension to David Drumbheller.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 573) for the establishment of a light-station and fog-signal in the vicinity of Braddock's Point, Lake Ontario, New York, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

IRONDEQUOIT BAY, NEW YORK.

Mr. CULLOM. From the Committee on Commerce, I report favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10065) constituting Irondequoit Bay, New York, a navigable water of the United States for certain purposes. I ask that the bill be now considered. It is a very short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Irondequoit Bay, New York, shall, for the purpose of applying the provisions of Title LII of the Revised Statutes, relating to steam-vessels navigating thereon, be declared a navigable water of the United States; and steam-vessels navigated thereon, and carrying passengers, shall be inspected under the provisions of section 4123 of the title referred to, and subject to the penalties provided therein for a failure to comply therewith.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. AUGUSTINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. If there be no objection at this time, I should like to ask a reconsideration of the action of the Senate on Saturday last in passing the bill (S. 2865) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., for this reason: I was absent from the Senate on business, and when that bill came up I intended to ask leave to substitute for it the House bill on the same subject, which had come over to us passed by the other House. I desired to substitute that bill with a view of getting the measure through at this session. Now, the other House has passed a bill and the Senate has passed a bill, and they have crossed each other, and the action is such, as everybody knows, that I fear the measure will fail. It is a matter of local interest only, and I ask therefore that the Senate reconsider its action in order to have the House bill passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and passed will be reconsidered if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask now that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

DISTRICT PUBLIC PARK.

Mr. HARRIS. Some days ago the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishment of a public park in the District of Columbia. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], myself, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the Senate. The Senator from Michigan is necessarily absent from the Chamber, and will be for the next ten days. I ask that the Chair substitute another manager at the conference for that Senator inasmuch as the conferees desire to consider the bill, and I want all the managers on the part of the Senate to be present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in place of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] as one of the conferees upon the bill.

REPORT ON PRECIOUS METALS PRODUCTION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably, with an amendment, a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution, submitted on the 12th instant by Mr. COCKRELL, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, for the use of the Director of the Mint, 2,000 additional copies of the report on the production of precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1889.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to read:

That there be printed, for the use of the Director of the Mint, 1,000 additional copies of the report on the production of precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1889.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

INDEX OF CLAIMS.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 500 copies of the consolidated index of claims reported by the Commissioners of Claims to the House of Representatives from 1871 to 1889, now in manuscript, prepared by the Clerk of the House of Representatives under resolutions considered and agreed to by the House in the Forty-eighth and subsequent Congresses. The printed copy of said index will be delivered to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

DECISIONS RELATING TO PUBLIC LANDS AND PENSIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 90) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions, for sale, to report it with an amendment, filling the blank, and I ask its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Public Printer to print from the stereotype plates, and to bind in full sheep, 1,000 copies each of volumes 8 to 12, inclusive, of decisions of the Department of the Interior relating to public lands, and of volumes 3, 4, and 5 of decisions of the Department of the Interior relating to pensions, to be sold by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of joint resolution approved March 3, 1887, providing for the sale of public documents.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to fill the blank by inserting "ten thousand."

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the publication?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is the decisions of the Public Land Office and of the Pension Office, for sale under the provisions of the law. It provides for their sale at cost price, with 10 per cent. added. This is in accordance with a request made by the Secretary of the Interior that there is great demand for these decisions, and they ought to be on hand for sale.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 16, fill the blank by inserting the words "ten thousand;" so as to read:

And that there be appropriated $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SMITHSONIAN AND NATIONAL MUSEUM REPORT.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the years ending June 30, 1888, and June 30, 1889, in two octavo volumes for each year, 16,000 copies of each; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 4098) to promote the efficiency of the militia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4099) to reimburse the State of Kansas for moneys expended in the adjustment and settlement of the claims of citizens of said State for property captured or destroyed by the confederate forces during the late war, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KENNA introduced a bill (S. 4100) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Heiskell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 4101) for the relief of Thomas G. Mackie and the heirs at law of William A. Hyde, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3823) in amendment of and supplementary to the act of Congress approved March 22, 1882, entitled "An act to amend section 5350 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes;" which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HEARST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PARIS EXPOSITION REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to have the reports of the commissioners of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1889, or such of them as may be accepted by him for publication, printed and bound at the Government Printing Office, and that in addition to the usual number there shall be printed 3,000 extra copies for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 4,000 for the use of the Department of State, of which 600 copies shall be distributed among the authors of the reports printed.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the latest reports to the Chief of Engineers of the condition of the work for the improvement of the entrance to the St. John's River, Florida; also, the latest report of cost of improving the St. John's River, Florida; also, the latest report of the cost of improvement of Indian River, Florida; and the estimates of the Chief of Engineers based on the latest reports.

LOCATION OF THE LAFAYETTE STATUE.

Mr. BATE submitted the following concurrent resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Whereas the Committee on the Library, in their report on the resolutions of inquiry as to the location of the Lafayette monument, disavow any "share of responsibility in respect of the Lafayette statue, the selection of site, or its erection," but recognize that interruption of view of the Jackson statue must to a certain extent result from the Lafayette statue if erected on the site selected, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library (but not the committee) in the report suggests for those having the matter in charge that "if the relations of the statues to each other should prove unsatisfactory, it was thought, in the improvement of art in this country and the liberality of Congress in respect of commemorative statues and monuments, a greater and more imposing statue in honor of this illustrious soldier and statesman, as illustrative of his military achievements, might well be provided to replace or to be in addition to the equestrian statue now in Lafayette Square, and to be placed on a site more in accordance with the requirements of its position;" and

Whereas this suggestion of the committee carries with it the idea of experimenting as to perspective and artistic effect with these two statues, as it also does the contingency of the removal of the Jackson statue from the reservation in which it was appropriately located nearly forty years ago by President Fillmore, under the authority of Congress, with special reference to proximity and an unobstructed view from the Executive Mansion; and as silence now might hereafter be regarded as sanctioning a purpose to remove it: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the equestrian statue of Andrew Jackson was located by Congress on its present site because of the association of that illustrious soldier, statesman, and patriot to the Executive Mansion in which he had served the Union with abilities no less signal than those exhibited in the defense of the country; and that to obscure the view of his monument by placing another between it and the Executive Mansion would be to reflect on the distinguished patriot and soldier in a manner not approved by the American people and hurtful to both monuments.

Resolved, That it is not less artistic injustice to the monumental statue of Lafayette than to that of Jackson for them to be so located that they will be confused and confounded in outlines and figures, and that each of these grand historic characters merits a separate, distinctive, and appropriate site for his respective statue.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are directed to select a site from among the many beautiful and appropriate ones in some reservation in the city of Washington on which to place the statue of Lafayette other than the site now selected immediately between the Executive Mansion and the equestrian statue of General Andrew Jackson.

Resolved, That the work in preparing the foundation and pedestal for the Lafayette statue be suspended until another site for it be designated, and that this action on the part of Congress be in no way to interfere with the present management and proceedings in reference to the Lafayette statue, or in any way affect the contracts and arrangements already made respecting said statue of Lafayette other than the change of site and necessary cost growing out of said change.

CLERKS TO SENATE COMMITTEES.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I ask the consent of the Senate to take up Order of Business 1651, House bill 7217, a bill regarding the public buildings in New York City, which will take but a moment to consider, and it is somewhat important.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon rise to morning business?

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a list of the names of all annual clerks to Senate committees during the year ending March 4, 1890, to what committees assigned, and the salary received by each; also under what authority, and when employed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I see no especial objection to the resolution, but all the clerks of committees have been employed under what is known as the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, and they are all named in the bill now on the table, which I hope to have considered to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are also named in the Congressional Directory.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that; but I think it advisable, in order to understand just the whole situation as it is, that we should have this information in one little paper so that we can see to what committees annual clerks have been assigned and how much they are given, and can determine whether it is proper to place all the committees on the same footing or upon some similar basis.

Mr. ALLISON. That information is contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill now pending; but I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would rather have the resolution adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. It will require considerable labor on the part of the Secretary to dig out the time when the clerks were assigned or appointed under the provisions of the legislative appropriation acts. Some of them will run back forty years, I think. But I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are quite a number of annual clerks, of course, to the more important committees who have been on the list a long while, and very properly, too; but I remember, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will remember, that at the last Congress first one chairman of a committee and then another came in, and then another, and resolution after resolution was adopted, adding to the list of annual clerks.

Now, I think it is important that we should know precisely where we stand, just what committees have asked for annual clerks, so that we can determine whether it is important that they should have them; and if it is, whether there are not some other committees that ought also to have annual clerks. That is why I offer the resolution, not striking at anybody or any clerk, or anything of that kind.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

APPRAISERS' WAREHOUSE IN NEW YORK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, that order is closed. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] asks unanimous consent to take up a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7217) to amend "An act for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. HALE. What is that request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To take up for consideration the bill the title of which has just been read.

Mr. HALE. I do not object if it takes no time, but if it does I shall object.

Mr. EVARTS. I only want to say a word about this bill.

The act passed in 1888 and now on the statute-book arranges for an appraisers' store building and also for a new custom-house, and one section provided that if the Secretary of the Treasury should proceed with the two buildings they should be built contiguous. An amendment to the act has been proposed in the other House as a bill, merely relieving that obligation and enlarging the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that bill having passed the House has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds without amendment, and as will be seen it can be very easily disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read at length for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes," approved September 14, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "in the vicinity of each other," wherever the same occur, so that the Secretary of the Treasury may locate said appraisers' warehouse at any point within the collection district, north of Liberty street, on the west side of the city of New York.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALINA, KANS.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows, namely: Strike out all of the bill and amendments, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Salina and State of Kansas, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

"Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

"If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

"The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $5 per day and actual traveling expenses. Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

"No money shall be used for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Kansas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys."

And that the House agree to the same.

JOHN C. SPOONER,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,

G. G. VEST,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. L. MILLIKEN,

HERMAN LEHLBACH,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

TREASURY NOTES AND SILVER BULLION.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, there would seem to be little excuse for my fretting the time of the Senate upon the bill under discussion, even under the shortened rule contemplated for further debate, within which I shall endeavor to confine my remarks. The subject has been practically exhausted. Indeed, until the Senator from Alabama, almost at the close of the debate, disclosed so ably a fresh field and built a new bulwark for the white metal I had supposed nothing new could be said upon the question. I have the good fortune also to be associated with a colleague who almost since Colorado was admitted to the sisterhood of States has stood as the exponent of the views of an intelligent constituency upon this great subject, and who has left nothing pertinent unsaid. But when Senators opposed to the views which some of us entertain charge us who live in silver-producing States, directly and by imputation, with holding sordid and unworthy and unpatriotic opinions, and aver that the people who are demanding that silver be again recognized as a coin of the land equally with its sister metal are adventurers and speculators, and assert that they are indifferent to the true welfare of the country, I must be pardoned for feeling that I have the right to claim the attention of the Senate long enough to protest against such intimation and against such a method of conducting debate.

If, however, it were true, as it is not, that the people of the silver-producing States were governed in this matter by a desire to protect the product upon the value of which their prosperity depends, large warrant for such a course is being furnished us by some of the Eastern States. We seem to have fallen in the North upon days where politics are rated at a commercial value alone; where fealty to party depends on whether the prosperity of the locality in which the voter resides is to be best fostered by competition with other countries, or by large and prohibitory duties which shall exclude such foreign competition. The prosperity of the mountain States and Territories of the West must ever rest chiefly on the product of its mines; yet, we, who are less benefited than any other portion of the Union by a high protective tariff, are asked to stand each session by the duties which the East formulates; and when we ask that our silver shall be also protected, and have behind us the wishes and desires of the vast majority of the people of the United States, we are called speculators, and told that our ideas are those of a dissatisfied and visionary people.

I wonder how long the Republican majority in Rhode Island, for instance, would last, if the interests upon which the people depend for their livelihood were no longer fostered and protected by the party in power. The worm of Democracy seems already to have made some headway in that Commonwealth, possibly because duties are not yet high enough, and how long does the Senator from Rhode Island expect the miners and farmers of the West will continue to help protect the industries he represents, while he and other Senators who agree with him can find for us only words of criticism and denunciation?

But, Mr. President, the East is not the custodian of the national conscience, and the people of the West are governed by no sectional and selfish views. They are intelligent, industrious, and patriotic, and are neither visionary nor sordid. If they believed that the re-instatement of silver to a parity with gold meant disaster to the best interests of the country, they would no more ask its further coinage than they would ask that the iron and lead with which their mountains likewise abound should be stamped as coin and given to the world.

We are jealous for the honor of our country and the sanctity of its obligations. Vital as is this question to us and our local prosperity, we would rather see our mining camps desolate and deserted, our mining shafts and tunnels abandoned, than see the currency of the country degraded or our credit impaired at home or abroad, and would cheerfully turn our hands to other industries if thereby the fabric of the nation could be strengthened. But we have the well grounded conviction that silver is entitled to its old position as money and to the extent of its availability for that purpose; that its re-establishment is but simple justice, and that its value for coin should no more be measured by the standard of gold than the value of gold should be measured by the standard of silver. And so believing, the person who questions the motives of a great and important section of the country because it happens to be a producer of the metal must himself hold narrow and contracted views of the high duties of citizenship.

I have read, Mr. President, with some care, the greater portion of what has been said on this subject. I should have been more satisfied to have listened to the spoken words, but that has been impossible. Instead of seating the newer Senators in the front rows, where they could hear and profit by the words of wisdom and of eloquence which flow with tolerable frequency from the lips of the older members of this body, we are relegated to the rear, where we have to be content with the stimulus of gesture alone. But I have read the RECORD faithfully, and nowhere, as I can gather, is it disputed that if this country stood alone in the use of gold and silver as coin, or if our financial relations with the rest of the world need not be considered the coinage of the silver product of this country available for that purpose into coin at present standards would work no financial embarrassment.

And, sir, no intelligent man can contemplate the vast growth of this country during the past quarter of a century and not share this view. The increase in population has been unexampled, great areas have been opened up to tillage, the growth of the towns and cities has more than kept pace with the farming communities, thousands of miles of railroad have been constructed, and important mineral belts have been opened and developed. Meanwhile, although facilities for the transaction of the ever-growing business and commerce of this great nation have been extended and improved, the needed increase of the currency of the country has moved with laggard step. I believe the silver available for coinage, produced in this country, will not exceed, even if it equals, fifty millions a year, but if it were double that amount it would still be needed to carry on the business of the country, reaching over vast areas and covering an enormous diversity of pursuits.

If these things be true it might pertinently be suggested that a currency properly adjusted for our own needs might well be tried rather than that our farmers and wage-workers should see prices of farm products and wages reduced in order that our financial policy should be in accord with that of foreign countries. But the evils foreshadowed from abroad seem too dim and uncertain to be seriously considered. It is somewhat singular that the Senators who seem most fearful of the troubles to come upon us from the other side if we adopt free coinage are the same gentlemen who are most conspicuous in their advocacy of a protective tariff of such proportions that if it becomes a law our commercial relations abroad would be minimized; but their fears, though genuine, seem to have little tangibility.

The great fear seems to be that silver from abroad will be shipped to this country and find its way to our mints, and dire forebodings are indulged in if the balance of trade should ever be against us. In spite of the reduced shipments of our cereals abroad, the balance of trade continues in our favor in increasing proportions. The amount of gold produced annually available for coinage diminishes rather than increases, and keeps pace in no proportion with the growing affairs and business of the world. In view of the sensitive relations sustained by many foreign countries towards each other, it is manifestly difficult, if not impossible, to secure unanimity of action in the first instance; but if this country will take the lead, there is every reason for believing that the other nations will adopt our standards. Already every country except Germany and Great Britain is reaching out in effort to secure the establishment of silver as an international coin, and in the two last-named countries there is a growing and intelligent public sentiment in favor of the double standard.

The only other argument pressed with any earnestness is that Roumania has a few millions of silver she is liable to sell to us. Nobody seems to speak officially on the subject, and so far the awful rumor has not been confirmed. Why, sir, we could absorb her silver, and after six months never know we had taken it, and it is indicative of the absence of real objection to free coinage that such vague material should stand as argument against supplying this country with the currency it needs.

It would seem, therefore, that we may with safety resume the coinage of silver into standard dollars as it is presented at our mints, and if the measure shall prove unwise the same votes that pass it in this body will be cast for its repeal.

Yet, because the far Western States, fortified by good reason for the faith that is in them, favor the full resumption of the coinage of silver, as contemplated in the Constitution, sanctioned by the usages of all nations since the two metals were given to man, and enjoyed by this people for nearly a century and lost only in some mysterious fashion, they are charged with sinister and unworthy motives.

Before Senators charge the new West with selfishness in its advocacy of this or any other measure they should stop to consider. They should remember, sir, what our attitude has been since we have participated in the councils of the nation.

We have not within our borders—I am referring especially to Colorado—a single stream or lake to be benefited by the great annual appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors and for coast defenses. Yet we loyally join with you in voting vast sums for these purposes and contribute our share of the expense.

The interstate-commerce act, in its present condition, has wrought injury to every town of considerable size in the West; it is gradually causing the absorption of the smaller lines of railroad by the larger lines, is retarding the building of competitive roads, and must inevitably work injustice to inland communities on lines of through commerce, and far from the seaboard. Yet because the experiment must be tried, and having been inaugurated must be continued until some result universally patent is reached, we cordially second its enforcement and continuance.

Peace is in all our borders. There are no wars or rumors of wars, and no possibility is more remote than that we shall again be called upon to unsheathe the sword. Nevertheless you ask for millions for the further improvement of your Navy, and for the construction of new cruisers and battle-ships. We are 2,000 miles from the nearest sea. Few of our people can ever hope to look upon the pathless deep or to see the white sails of the stately ships they have helped to build. But, because from Paul Jones to Farragut our Navy has been manned by heroes, because we desire that other nations shall see that our country is strong and valiant and ready to protect its citizens and its interests abroad as well as at home, and, above all, because we love the flag and are proud of our common country, we willingly aid in voting whatever sum may be required to insure the supremacy of our Navy.

Colorado is less benefited by a protective tariff than any other State in the Union, yet, as loyal citizens, we have regularly voted to protect the industries of other States while our own have been neglected and ignored; and we shall probably continue so to vote under proper conditions.

In the face, then, of our record respecting public affairs, I trust that we may be hereafter spared the imputation of being either sordid or unpatriotic in any matter affecting the public welfare.

The struggles of the people ever since the demonetization of silver to secure its reinstatement, though unwearied, have been in a large degree unsuccessful; and it is doubtful if in the whole history of legislation in this country a parallel can be found to the ingenuity and disloyalty which have so far thwarted the efforts of the representatives of the large majority of the people, indorsed by the national conventions of both parties, to carry out the will of their constituents.

It is useless at this time to inquire into the circumstances under which silver was demonetized in 1873. It may have been by trick or it may have been by open proceeding. We only know that there were at that time in both branches of Congress able, vigilant friends of the double standard who did not know until it was too late that silver was demonetized, and we know that, notwithstanding all the extended statements since made by those who participated in the act, nobody has yet pretended to tell us why the silver dollar was dropped from further coinage.

Hostile as was the act of 1873 to silver coinage, it nevertheless contented itself with suspending the coinage, and it did not in terms make silver a commodity and debase it, as does the House bill before us.

When the act of 1878 was passed and the minimum was placed at two millions and the maximum at four millions a month, it was first vetoed and then carried over the veto, and it was expected that the discretion reposed in the Secretary of the Treasury was a discretion to be exercised in the interests of the whole people and not of any section, yet from that day to this, whichever party has been in power, each Secretary has traveled in the direct path of his predecessor and contracted the currency by every means at his command.

The open and avowed views of ex-President Cleveland, while they convinced nobody apparently, either in the Democracy or out of it, were yet sufficient to paralyze the efforts of the friends of silver in both political parties to secure its full recognition.

The day star of hope did not rise for us until the national conventions of 1888. Then the Republican convention declared for silver. It seems droll now to recall the enthusiasm created in the far West in the last campaign. The Republican candidate for the Presidency had been in public life, but his utterances had not been many or particularly important. The motto, in part assumed by Junius, could have been applied to him: "Stat magni nominis umbra." But we hunted up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and being ardent and sanguine, and our hearts being illumined with hope, many of us found here and there a phrase or a sentence which indicated a friendly feeling for silver. And we labored among the farmers in the valleys and on the plains and with the toilers in the mining camps in the mountain gulches and cañons with these as texts. We held up Mr. Cleveland to contumely and scorn in withering language that would make him feel very badly if he ever heard of it, and we extolled our candidate in glowing terms and assured our friends that upon his election the remonetization of silver would be speedily accomplished, and that meanwhile his Secretary of the Treasury, whoever he might be, would certainly commence coining four millions a month.

If I remember aright, we made some other predictions as to the treatment and recognition the great Northwest would receive when he became President which have not exactly materialized, but I am confining myself to the silver question. We gave handsome majorities for the Republican ticket; our hopes were high; our confidence supreme. The awakening all along the line has been somewhat rude. If the Windom recommendation, approved by the President, could have been announced before the election, it is my humble opinion that not a single State west of the Missouri River would have given a Republican majority. Not because the large majority of the citizens of those States were not and are not and will not always be true and staunch and earnest Republicans, loving the traditions of the party and true to its principles, but because they would overwhelmingly rebuke a party that selected as its standard-bearer one unmindful of the interests of the country, and disregarding the wishes of the majority of its members. An open foe is to be preferred to a secret enemy; but who can foretell the future or gather figs of thistles?

The recommendations of the Secretary, largely followed in the House bill before the Senate, strike viciously at the interests of silver. The act of 1878 is infinitely preferable to the bill before us. Under that act we can at least have two millions a month of legal tender; and the whole purpose of the House bill seems to be to degrade and debase silver, and to make it a commodity, ranking it with the baser metals, and to forever prevent its again taking its place as a standard of value. Some amendments appear to be submitted by the Finance Committee, but while they eliminate one of the objectionable features, the bullion-redemption clause, other obnoxious clauses are retained and a curious amendment is added, concerning which I hope some explanation will be made. Why is the law to cease and terminate at the end of ten years? Instead of encouraging other nations to adjust their monetary system in harmony with ours, we give them notice that this increased silver coinage is a temporary device, expiring by its own limitation, and much of any good effect of the law is immediately destroyed.

Such are some of the difficulties under which the friends of silver have labored; but though we have much to contend with, we are by no means hopeless. A bill for the free coinage of silver will some day become a law. Administrative influence is strong and far reaching; the inducements it can offer are great, very great. Its friends, when it has any, are supposed to bask in the sunshine of executive patronage; those who, although of the same political faith, can not agree with it, must sit in outer darkness. Cabinet officers with patronage, soliciting support to a Government measure, are almost omnipotent, but not quite. We do not despair. The large majority of Senators on the other side were uninfluenced by the utterances of the last Chief Executive; a number of the Senators on this side of the Chamber feel able to form their own opinions. A bill for free coinage will become a law because the country is in favor of it, and in the end the wishes of the majority govern, notwithstanding the personal desires and efforts of the Executive. The measure is of vast importance; of far greater importance than a new election law, an anti-gerrymandering law, or a tariff law. So great are the interests involved that, in view of them, party lines are obliterated and forgotten, and the South and the West meet on common ground, animated by a common and patriotic purpose. [Applause in the galleries and on the floor of the Senate.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, on page 2, line 8, after the word "notes," where it occurs the second time in the line, to strike out

"shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and;" so as to read:

And such Treasury notes shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued; and such notes when held by any national-banking association may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the attention of Senators ought to be called to the amendment which is now before us. It is proposed to strike out of the bill the words "shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private," leaving the certificates which it is proposed to issue to be receivable only for taxes and public dues. Whatever question may exist or may have existed as to the right of the Government to issue paper money, mere promises to pay—

Mr. INGALLS. It is impossible to hear the Senator, there is so much confusion in the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. REAGAN. Whatever question may exist as to whether the Government may issue paper money not based upon dollar for dollar in coin, it seems to me is not raised by the proposition to make the silver and the gold certificates a lawful tender for all debts, public and private. The certificates are simply a convenient form of circulating silver dollars; and if silver dollars are a legal tender, then their representative dollar for dollar, the mere means of circulating them, ought to be a legal tender.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I hope we shall have order. It is impossible to hear anything in the Senate Chamber, owing to the confusion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will suspend until order is restored in the Chamber.

Mr. REAGAN. I can not elaborate in five minutes the arguments in favor of making these certificates a legal tender, nor do I think it necessary to do so.

But there is another point in connection with this to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. The object of the bill passed by the House of Representatives and the object of the bill presented by the Senate Committee on Finance has been to make silver a commodity, to prevent it from being money. One of the means of degrading it is to declare that it shall not be a legal tender. Whatever draws a distinction between gold and silver in their use as money, unfavorable to silver, tends to its degradation and to preserve this degradation. If, therefore, we desire that silver shall be treated as money, it is necessary that it shall be regarded as a legal tender, and the certificate, which simply is a means of circulating and using silver, should be a legal tender the same as the silver dollars would be a legal tender if they were offered.

I simply desire to call attention to this, because we ought to know right at the start that this is the first step and the first vote to be taken which is to test the question whether we mean to degrade silver and keep it degraded and prevent it from becoming money.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to be informed whether it is or is not the pleasure of the Senate that the Chair should undertake to enforce agreements made by unanimous consent affecting debate.

Mr. STEWART. It is, with the exceptions made yesterday. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] asked that when the free-coinage measure was up for consideration he might be heard upon it. With that exception, I believe that is the desire of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will understand then that it is the pleasure of the Senate, unless special exceptions are made, that he shall undertake to enforce agreements made by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Chair understand that to be an order of the Senate for all time, or merely for the present occasion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires information for his general government. The question having come up within the last day or two and two or three weeks since, he only wishes to know what is the pleasure of the Senate, whether he shall enforce agreements entered into by unanimous consent or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. The agreement applied only to this particular bill and to this occasion, with one exception, and I hope the Chair will enforce it, and I suppose the Senate expects the Chair to enforce this order like any other order applicable to this particular occasion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In similar cases what is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Sufficient unto the day is the duty thereof.

Mr. HALE. We will cross the bridge when we reach it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment which has just been stated.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear the amendment read and I should be glad to hear it read.

Mr. TELLER. There is too much noise, and it is utterly impossible for us to hear anything in the back seats. Let the amendment be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, on page 2, line 8, after the word "notes" where it occurs the second time, the Committee on Finance report to strike out the words "shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and;" so as to make the clause read:

But no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion then held in the Treasury purchased by such notes; and such Treasury notes shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has called for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who is absent, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. SQUIRE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SQUIRE] has been temporarily called from the city and is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]; but I am informed that if present he would vote "nay," and I shall vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], but I am informed he would vote "nay" on this motion, and I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that my friend from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], with whom I have a general pair, is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa] is absent because of illness and is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] upon these questions generally, but if he were present, my colleague would vote against striking out this provision.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. FARWELL], as I understand, is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. If my colleague were present he would vote against striking out the provision.

Mr. DANIEL. I think it proper to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], but I understand that he would vote "nay" if here, and therefore I take the liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLEN. That statement is correct.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to state that I understand that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], but if he were present my colleague would have voted "nay," the same as the Senator from Indiana has voted.

Mr. PASCO. Upon the statement of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] with reference to how his colleague [Mr. FARWELL], with whom I am paired, would vote if present, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS—14.
Aldrich,	Chandler,	Hale,	Morrill,
Blair,	Frye,	Harris,	Platt.
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Hoar,

Dixon,	Hawley,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 2, line 13, after the word "reserve," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury may, at his discretion and under such regulations as he shall prescribe, exchange for such notes an amount of silver bullion which shall be equal in value at the market price thereof on the day of exchange to the amount of such notes presented.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea," so that the Senator from North Carolina is at liberty to vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I do not know how the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], with whom I am paired, would vote upon this proposition. Were he present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], but I am informed by his colleague that he would vote as I do if present, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN (when Mr. SQUIRE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SQUIRE] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If my colleague were present and given the opportunity, he would vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], but I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HIGGINS. I have a general pair on this bill with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I was informed by his colleague last evening that he expected him to return to-day; but as he is not present I withhold my vote.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is necessarily absent, and I announce his pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. It is hardly necessary for me to say that the Senator from West Virginia, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. MOODY. I wish to say that my colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW] is necessarily absent, and, as stated by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], has a general pair with him upon this bill. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the absent Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD], but I am informed by those who more especially represent him that he would vote "yea" if present. Therefore, I shall vote "yea."

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent, is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. DOLPH. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this particular question, if present, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague [Mr. PUGH] is necessarily absent this morning temporarily, and is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea" upon this proposition.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—57.
Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Allen,	Cullom,	McPherson,	Spooner,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out section 6, as follows:

Sec. 6. That whenever the market price of silver, as determined in pursuance of section 1 of this act, is $1 for 371.25 grains of pure silver, it shall be lawful for the owner of any silver bullion to deposit the same at any coinage mint of the United States, to be formed into standard silver dollars for his benefit, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837. And purchases of silver bullion shall be suspended while it is being so deposited for coinage.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who is absent.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I have information which leads me to believe that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], if present, would vote "nay," and as I would vote that way, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions on this bill with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "nay." I therefore desire to record my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. Not knowing how he would vote upon this question, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Allison,	Frye,	Morrill,	Spencer,
Chandler,	Hale,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,	Washburn.

NAYS—46.

Dixon,	Higgins,	Quay,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section [6] 7, line 2, after the word "passage," to insert "and terminate at the expiration of ten years therefrom;" so as to make the section read:

Sec. [8] 7. That this act shall take effect thirty days from and after its passage, and terminate at the expiration of ten years therefrom.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I rise to ask from the committee upon what ground or beneficial or substantial idea this amendment is proposed. It is not customary for us to limit our laws unless under some very special reasons for so limiting them, and unless I hear some good reason to the contrary I shall vote against this amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). Although paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], I shall vote "nay" on this amendment, as I am satisfied he would vote the same way if present.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am informed that the absent Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] would vote "nay," if present, upon this question, and I therefore ask to be recorded. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). Being informed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MOODY] that his colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW] with whom I am paired, if present, would vote "nay," I vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). Being assured that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] with whom I am paired would vote "nay" on this question, if present, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], but understanding that if he were present he would vote against this amendment, I vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON (when Mr. QUAY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], with whom I am paired for the present, would, if present, vote "nay." I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded; and the result announced—yeas 4, nays 64; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the first section of the bill and insert what I send to the desk.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator offers that, I should like to call attention to the part of the text of the bill which I was going to move to strike out.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out the first section and insert what I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 1 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 25.8 grains of standard gold; and the said coins shall be equally legal tender for all sums whatever. That hereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars or bars for his benefit and without charge; but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100, or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the Mint.

Mr. BLAIR. I offer an amendment to the proposed amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which is, to add at the end of the second section:

Nor shall the amount of silver coined and issued from the mints of the United States be more than $5,000,000 for each calendar month.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not in order, because it does not relate to the same section, the same subject-matter.

Mr. BLAIR. I move an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, which is to strike out. I move to amend his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in any sense an amendment to that, because it has no connection at all with it. The Senator from Kansas moves to strike out the first section and insert in place of it other words.

Mr. BLAIR. My amendment is to add other words to these.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to add to the second section.

Mr. BLAIR. I propose to add words to be inserted after the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. I propose to add words perfecting the bill, in addition to the words moved by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the Senator is quite right if his amendment is by way of addition.

Mr. BLAIR. I may possibly have misstated it. I was in some confusion as to what the Senator from Kansas had offered. What I desire to do is to amend his amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is in order as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BLAIR. Let me be understood. I move to amend the matter proposed by the Senator from Kansas to be inserted by adding to that the words which I ask may be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the amendment to the amendment be read, and we can see whether it is in order or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

Nor shall the amount of silver coined and issued from the mints of the United States be more than $5,000,000 for each calendar month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, my purpose is that, if in the end a free-coinage act should be the result of the deliberations of Congress, for the present the amount coined and issued of silver under free coinage should be limited to the amount of $5,000,000 monthly until there may be further action by Congress.

The only reason, as it seems to me, why there can be any apprehension of injury to the interests of the country by free coinage is the possibility which influences many minds that we may be deluged by the amount of silver depreciated below the value of gold which may be precipitated upon us by such an act. Now, I do not apprehend that danger myself. I believe that it is safe for the country at the present time to go direct to free coinage. I think the interests of the country would not be injured by an act of that kind. If they shall be injured it will be because of the state of mind that would be created throughout the country, the apprehension of danger which might precipitate panic to our business interests. But if that apprehension can be provided against, as it will be provided against if the amount of silver to be issued is limited to $5,000,000 a month, then I believe we can adopt free coinage with perfect safety at the present time.

The capacity of the mints is such that nobody anticipates that we shall coin more than four or four and a half million dollars a month. We can not well do it, and there is that practical limit existing, even if there were no words whatever in a free-coinage act limiting the amount to be coined and issued. But if we place in the act itself these words of limitation, there can be no ground of apprehension, and then if we do go to free coinage I believe that the public confidence will be unshaken and that the business interests of the country will stand firmly, as they do to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to take up the time of the Senate. This is only one of many modifications of the proposition for free coinage which have from time to time been discussed. It has its merits probably as well as others, and its demerits. I think the Senate would prefer to vote on the question of free coinage pure and simple, which is involved in my amendment, and I hope it will not be embarrassed by the addition of the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when Mr. BARBOUR's name was called). I beg leave to state that my colleague [Mr. BARBOUR] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired as before stated. If I were at liberty, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is away, and is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], who has been obliged to leave the Chamber on account of illness. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. PASCO. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Allen,	Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. BLAIR. In regard to that amendment, as I understand its effect, the bill, if passed, will stand in this wise: Coinage will take place as silver bullion is deposited by the individual owner, and not upon the bullion but upon that coinage certificates will be issued, as is now the case under the existing law. Whatsoever is purchased by the Government will be coined by the Government and will become legal tender, not the certificate that is issued, but the coin itself, the bullion formed and fashioned into coin and remaining on deposit; so that we shall have no legal tender by virtue of this act except the coin, as the Constitution contemplates in time of peace when there shall be no emergency.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to call his attention to the fact that the amendment does not provide for any purchase at all.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not state that it did. I stated that the individual owner makes his deposit of bullion with the Government, and the Government proceeds to coin without charge, and upon that coin, as is now the case, may then be issued the silver certificate, which certificate, like that at the present time issued, will be devoid of the legal-tender character.

So there will be by virtue of this act, if this amendment be adopted, no paper currency put in circulation which shall be made a legal tender by force of this act or any other law, and whatsoever there is of bullion deposited will be formed into coin, and thus behind the silver as well as the gold certificates there will be the actual coin, which can be had on the presentation of the certificate. Am I correct?

Mr. PLUMB. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. BLAIR. I know that must be the force and effect of the amendment from comparing it with the law.

Now, my principal objection to this whole business is that there is an undertaking to foist upon the country a legal tender which, in my belief, is unconstitutional, which can not properly in any sound discretion of Congress be issued under existing conditions in this country. We are in a time of peace and of as great prosperity as we have ever known, and here comes a proposition in the House bill as it now stands, the amendment reported by the committee having been rejected, to put one billion fifteen hundred million, $2,000,000,000 as it soon will be, of actual currency, not coin, in circulation in the form of paper, and to make that paper a legal tender. To be sure there will be on deposit either the bullion or the coin, but it is not in actual circulation, and no private citizen demanding the payment of his debt can insist upon the coin; he must take the paper; and if in the catastrophes of the future, in the uncertainties of the future, it should so come, as it has in the past, that that coin should disappear, that the property which is behind the paper in circulation shall have vanished away, then the citizen would be left in possession of nothing but the paper, the valueless, the depreciating paper, as it would be under those circumstances.

That is the precise danger which the Constitution proposed to guard against, and even under the liberal interpretation of the Supreme Court there has never been the doctrine advanced that it was possible under the Constitution to issue or to make a legal tender of anything but property, coin, gold or silver, except in time of war or of the uttermost emergency in national affairs. Congress, to be sure, has the power, because Congress has the right to judge in its discretion when that necessity arises; but, sir, it is an honest discretion that we are bound to exercise under the conditions that surround us, and not to depart from the provisions of the Constitution in taking from the citizen his right to coin unless there be desperation in the general condition of the country. We know that is not now the case, and upon my oath as a legislator here I can not say that any such emergency exists.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has leaped the stile before he has come to it. Unless there shall be some other provision inserted in this bill than the one which I have proposed, and in addition to what is already in the bill, no certificates can be issued on the basis of the coins provided for in the first section, and consequently there can be no occasion for their being made a legal tender. His fear about what may come from making a large addition of legal-tender money will come later if this amendment should be adopted, because other amendments then applicable to the case will be proposed.

Mr. BLAIR. Do I understand the Senator to say that it is his intention to offer an amendment providing for the issue of certificates upon that coin?

Mr. PLUMB. I do intend to offer such an amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. So the currency that would exist would not be a legal-tender paper currency?

Mr. PLUMB. Unless Congress shall in this act make it so.

Mr. BLAIR. By subsequent amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. By subsequent amendments.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. PLUMB. There has been some misapprehension in regard to the scope of the third section of the act of 1878, which provides—

That any holder of coin authorized by this act may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in sums not less than $10, and receive therefor certificates of not less than $10 each.

So that any coinage provided for in this bill would not be subject to the provisions of that act unless made so specifically, which is not now according to the terms of any proposition pending.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I have no intention of prolonging this discussion, but I desire very briefly to call the attention of the Senate to two provisions of this proposed amendment. One is that the coins shall be equally legal tender for all sums whatever. I shall be very glad if some friend of the amendment would tell us what that means. Equally a legal tender for what and in what way? What does it mean? What does any one mean by "sums that shall be equally a legal tender for any sums whatever?"

I want also to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this section provides for the unlimited coinage of both gold and silver without any charge for seigniorage or for coinage. In other words, it gives the holders of silver bullion a right to have their bullion transformed into dollars without any charge.

Mr. PLUMB. Yet that is the precise provision contained in the resumption act of 1875 in favor of gold. If the Senator objects to this amendment because it does not provide for seigniorage in behalf of the Government in regard to this coinage I have no objection to the addition of a provision which shall be applicable equally to gold and silver, but I have adopted the precise plan which was adopted with reference to the proportion of coinage, the circulation, and the monetary functions of gold by the resumption act following the act of 1873 demonetizing silver. If gold is entitled to be coined free of seigniorage then silver is entitled to be so coined.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for a very few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A response has been made to the roll-call. However, the Chair is informed that the Senator addressed the Chair before the Senator from Rhode Island had responded on the call, so that the Senator from Oregon is in order. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the pending amendment is one providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. It is a proposition which meets my hearty and unqualified approval, and hence it shall receive my cordial support. It shall receive my vote, first, because I believe in it, because in my judgment it is only by such a measure the great wrong of 1873, by which the silver dollar was demonetized, can be properly and fully atoned for, and silver restored to its proper place as a money metal; and, secondly, it has my support because it is, as I firmly believe, the wish of nine-tenths of the qualified electors of the State I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, irrespective of party, that I should support it.

The recent Republican State convention of the State of Oregon, which met in Portland, Oregon, in April last, adopted unanimously and with enthusiasm the following resolution as a part and parcel of the State platform:

That recognizing the fact that the United States is the greatest silver-producing country in the world, and that both gold and silver were equally the money of the Constitution from the beginning of the Republic until the hostile legislation against silver, which unduly contracted the circulating medium of the country, and recognizing that the great interests of the people demand more money for use in the channels of trade and commerce; therefore we declare ourselves in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and denounce any attempt to discriminate against silver as unwise and unjust.

The Democratic State convention of the same State, which met in the same place a few days subsequently, followed suit and adopted with like unanimity and enthusiasm, as part and parcel of the State Democratic platform, the following:

We reaffirm the position which has been maintained by the Democratic party, that gold and silver are equally the people's money, and are opposed to all measures of discrimination against silver, and demand free coinage to supply the needs of business, and that all money issued by the Government be legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

While the Union party of Oregon adopted the following resolution as expressive of the views of that party on this subject:

Resolved, That the Government establish a national monetary system by which a circulating medium in necessary quantity shall issue direct to the people; that all moneys issued, whether gold, silver, or paper, shall be full legal tender in payment of all debts, both public and private.

In the State of Oregon, therefore, Mr. President, as well as in every other State in this Union, as also in the Congress of the United States, this question as to the remonetization of silver and of an increase in the volume of the circulating medium of this country is not now, has not been for ten years past, and can not now by any attempted manipulation, caucus, conference, compromise, or combination on the part of either party, whether secret or otherwise, whether at the suggestion, entreaty, or dictation, either express or implied, of either President, Secretary, or any other agency, be tortured into a party question. It is not a party question. It is one so vitally connected with the general welfare and the common good as to rise above party, and so distinctively is it disconnected with everything pertaining to mere partisan politics, as parties are now organized in this country, as to take it out of, away from, and beyond the reach and the control of mere partisan politics.

Sentiment and opinions on this subject in this country are divided, not by party lines, but are rather in their different phases the outgrowth of that irrepressible conflict that is forever being waged between the creditor and the debtor classes, between the bondholder and the usurer on one hand, whose interests lie in the direction of a contraction of the currency and the consequent depression in the price of every commodity and every species of money, save and except bonds, notes, mortgages, and gold coin, and the great masses of the taxed and interest-paying people burdened with debt, their farms covered with mortgages, on the other hand, whose interests lie in the direction, not of inflation, but of a sufficient amount of circulating medium to meet the wants of the country, prevent contraction, and maintain at reasonable, proper, and living rates the prices of the products of the farm, mine, and shop. These are the lines, not of Republicanism or Democracy spoken of in a partisan sense, upon which the people of this country are divided on these great questions.

The late President Cleveland and his Administration sought to link the nation's fate with the gold standard. He was not sustained by his party and he perished in the attempt; and it is not an unsafe prediction that any Administration, whether Democratic or Republican, which shall hereafter strive to keep the nation's heel on silver and prevent the full remonetization of that metal, will, as it should be, when occasion presents, be hurled from power by a justly resentful and indignant constituency. I do not mean by this that a grand step, but yet one somewhat short of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, may not be taken by Congress in the direction of the remonetization of the silver dollar, and one which would tend largely to relieve the country by increasing the volume of circulating medium, and thus retard contraction and tend to increase the prices of all commodities. Upon the contrary, I believe such a measure, properly guarded, would be of much benefit, and the passage of such a measure by Congress and its approval by the present Administration would go far toward relieving those who gave it their support from the charge of opposition to bimetalism and the remonetization of silver; but what I do mean to say is that in my humble opinion, and with all due respect to those entertained by others, there is but one Congressional act that will rise to the real dignity of the occasion and which will correctly respond to the full demands of the great majority of the people of this country, and at the same time meet the real necessities of the case, and result in the absolute and complete remonetization of silver, and that is one providing for the free and unlimited coinage of the silver dollar. Anything short of this, however near to it in substance and effect the act may be, is lacking at least one step in reaching the real altitude, not only of the demand of the people, but of the necessities of the hour—the rights, privileges, and interests of the great masses of the people and of the Republic generally being considered. Believing this, and not believing that this ought to be by any possibility or arrangement a party question, I shall cast my vote freely, cordially, and hopefully for this amendment providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver, not stopping while doing so to inquire in advance as to whether the proposition is to receive more or fewer Republican or Democratic votes; and should this amendment fail, then I shall cordially vote for the next best thing proposed, provided always that the measure is free from any provision which, in my judgment, will have the effect, whatever the intention of its promoters may be, to perpetuate the demonetization of silver by treating that metal purely as a commodity and not as legal-tender money.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entitled by the rule to proceed if he wishes.

Mr. PLATT. Why?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because there is no order of the Senate against it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think in about five minutes more I can conclude what I have to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Oregon may have a few minutes longer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Iowa? ["None."] The Chair hears none and the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL. A bill compelling the Secretary of the Treasury, for instance, to purchase, say, $4,500,000 worth of silver bullion, or, what would be still better, 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion per month, as that would doubtless consume the whole American product, including Mexican silver coming through American smelters, payable in United States legal-tender Treasury notes, redeemable in coin, either gold or silver, with a provision that one-half of this amount so purchased, or at least enough to meet all the requirements of redemption, shall from time to time be coined into legal-tender silver dollars of 412½ grains of standard silver, under the existing ratio of 16 to 1, would be a measure in its practical effect so nearly akin to free and unlimited coinage as to be of immense value to the business interests of the country. And some such bill, if free and unlimited coinage should fail, shall, if opportunity offers, receive my cordial support.

But sooner than see the bill recently passed the House of Representatives become a law without material amendment, I would infinitely prefer that the law as it stands to-day, compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at least $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion each month and coin it into legal-tender silver dollars and issue silver certificates, should remain on the statute-book. The bullion-redemption feature of the House bill is one which, in my judgment, ought to stamp it as a measure not only intended, but the inevitable effect of which must necessarily be to absolutely demonetize silver by depriving it of its function as money and stamping it forever as a commodity only. Such a measure can never receive my vote. But why should Congress hesitate to provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver the same as gold? What argument has been advanced against it which has for its support any averment of fact or logical deduction borne out by anything in our past financial history or in our present monetary or commercial conditions? What argument drawn from the history of other nations or from our relations, commercially, financially, or otherwise, with other nations has been brought forward that ought to cause us to hesitate? I have listened attentively, but have failed to hear it. Every argument used now against the free and unlimited coinage of silver was used in the shape of prediction seventeen years ago against the passage of the Allison-Bland bill, and yet not a single one of the evil effects then predicted has ever come to pass.

The seers of seventeen years ago are the false prophets of to-day, condemned before the country and the world as such by the utter and absolute failure to materialize of every prediction indulged in. We were then told, as we are now told, that the coinage of $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month would drive all the gold from this country, and what is the actual fact? We have coined under that act nearly 370,000,000 of silver dollars—to be entirely accurate, up to the 10th of this month $367,166,266—and so far from gold having taken wings and departed to foreign climes, we have to-day from five to seven hundred millions more gold in this country than we had then. We were told furthermore that not exceeding fifty millions of silver could be absorbed or be by any process forced into circulation in this country; but what has been the result? Of the 367,166,266 silver dollars coined under that act all but $15,529,126 are to-day in circulation, either in the shape of the standard silver dollar or in silver certificates; there are 56,403,772 of the standard silver dollars in circulation, while 295,333,368 of these dollars are represented by silver certificates.

And so it has been with every other prediction indulged in. And now every argument in opposition to the free coinage of silver is based either upon some prediction as to the evil effects that may possibly follow the opening of our mints, or upon some fear upon the part of the objector that certain evil effects may possibly follow. And these may be summed up in a word:

First. Gold may be driven from the country and contraction would follow.

Second. The United States will be made the dumping-ground for the silver of the world, from France, Belgium, Roumania, India, and other European and Asiatic nations.

Third. It will destroy all chances of securing an international agreement.

Fourth. If the balance of trade should turn against us we would be ruined.

Fifth. If we should open our mints to free coinage at the present ratio of 15.98 to 1 and France should eventually open her mints to free coinage at her present ratio of 15½ to 1, that in such event all our silver would leave this country and flow into the French mints.

These, in brief, are the arguments—if supposition, prediction, and bald assertion can be taken for argument—upon which is based the objection to the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I submit, Mr. President, not one of them, singly or all taken together, are entitled to controlling weight. But my time has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The roll will be called on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. VEST. In order to perfect the amendment, in my judgment, I move to strike out in line 7 the word "equally," and to strike out "sums whatever" and insert "debts, public and private, except where otherwise stipulated." I do not like the expression "all sums whatever." We ought to specify the nature of the obligation. I suppose that is the meaning.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator this question, by his consent: Does he propose by this amendment to allow contracts to be made payable in gold or payable in silver, and if when so made payable in gold that they can not be paid by a tender of silver or if when made payable in silver they can not be paid by a tender of gold? Is that the view which the Senator intends to incorporate in the legislation of the United States?

Mr. VEST. If the Senator objects to the words "except where otherwise stipulated," I will leave them out and let it read "debts, public and private."

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator from Missouri state his amendment again?

Mr. VEST. The word "equally," in line 7, is utterly unnecessary. Besides, it mars the structure of the sentence; but that does not amount to so much. It will mean the same thing to say "the said coins shall be legal tender." Then I proposed to strike out "sums whatever" and to insert "debts, public and private, except where otherwise stipulated;" but I will strike out the words "except where otherwise stipulated," and say "all debts, public and private." I do not like the expression "sums whatever."

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator strikes out "except where otherwise stipulated," I am satisfied.

Mr. VEST. I will modify it by saying "all debts, public and private."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 of the proposed amendment strike out "equally," and in line 8 strike out the words "sums whatever" and insert in lieu thereof the words "debts, public and private;" so as to make the clause read:

And the said coins shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] as amended.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to add at the end of the proposed amendment:

And after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1890, there shall be no legal tender in the United States except gold and silver coin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 1 of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 25.8 grains of standard gold, and the said coins shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

That hereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same in any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars or bars for his benefit and without charge, but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100 or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I beg leave to state that I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], but understanding that he would vote for the free coinage of silver I feel at liberty to do so. I vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN. My colleague [Mr. SQUIRE] will be in the Chamber before the vote is finally taken. He is in the building.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I understand he would vote for this amendment, and as I should vote "nay" I withhold my vote.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON (when Mr. QUAY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand from the Senator from Iowa who is here [Mr. ALLISON] that his absent colleague [Mr. WILSON] would vote "nay," if he were here; and I will ask leave to transfer my pair with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD], which I do with the assent of his friends.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. COCKRELL. That can not be done.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] can then vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. The pair is easy enough to arrange. It is arranged. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and he then will stand upon the record paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. Then the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] and myself can both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. My pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] having been transferred, I vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE. I have come into the Chamber since the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] voted. I vote as he did. I vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is absent necessarily and is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], who has been compelled to leave the Chamber to-day on account of indisposition. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea" on this question, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. WASHBURN. My colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. VANCE. I am paired, as I have announced, with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to say that in conference with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], with whom I am paired, without saying how he would vote on this proposition or on others upon which I voted in his absence, we were both at liberty to vote as we pleased, and therefore I have recorded my vote when my name was called.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—43.

ABSENT—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Upon the announcement of the result there were manifestations of applause in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair admonishes the galleries that neither demonstrations of approval nor disapproval are in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add a new section as section 2, as follows:

Sec. 2. That the provisions of section 3 of "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which became a law February 28, 1878, are hereby made applicable to the coinage in this act provided for.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it in order to offer a substitute for that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is amendable.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer what I send to the desk to come in as sections 2 and 3 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a sufficient number of coin certificates of the various denominations hereby authorized to be prepared and distributed among the United States depositories to enable them to comply with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 3. That the coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be of denominations of not less than $1 nor more than $100, and such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. Section 3 of the act of the 28th of February, 1878, provides:

That any holder of the coin authorized by this act may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in sums not less than $10, and receive therefor certificates of not less than $10 each, corresponding with the denominations of the United States notes. The coin deposited for or representing the certificates shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of the same on demand. Said certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and, when so received, may be reissued.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether under his amendment, if the bill is amended as he proposes, silver certificates of less than $10 can be issued.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a provision of a subsequent act, in an appropriation act about 1887 or 1888, under which certificates of one and two dollars' denomination can be issued ad libitum.

Mr. GEORGE. Would that provision be applicable to coinage under this proposed act?

Mr. PLUMB. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to add to the bill, to come in as section 3, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Sec. 3. That the coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be of denominations of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars, and such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined from time to time so much of the bullion received under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates. A sufficient sum to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The provision in section 1 of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at the market price thereof not less than $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month of such bullion, is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out so much of the amendment as relates to the coinage of bullion, contained from lines 4 to 8, inclusive.

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined from time to time so much of the bullion received under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates.

Mr. REAGAN. There is no objection to that. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas accepts the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, and so modifies his amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish, without interfering at all with the fine symposium we are having on a subject very interesting to the people of the United States, to say (avoiding thereby, so far as I am concerned, any call of the yeas and nays) that I am opposed to the bill as it now stands and every one of its amendments, in general and in particular, and therefore that I am not to be called upon hereafter to account for having allowed an amendment to pass without calling for the yeas and nays. I am willing to deliver over to the Democratic party, whatever it may be (which is a question I have not time here to discuss), the management of the finances of this country for the time being, but I only state this in order that I may not trouble the Senate with demanding the yeas and nays upon the various ornamentations that are given to this hoodlum that is set up.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the question as to what responsibility the Senator from Vermont shall hold his people to or they shall hold him to is of course of no consequence except as between those two parties; but when he says he is going to deliver over to the Democratic party the control of the finances of this country on account of the vote just given for free coinage of silver I ask him what he is going to do with the last Republican national platform. Is he going to consent, or agree, or otherwise provide that the platform of the Republican party adopted at Chicago in 1888 shall be the Democratic platform? and, if he is, is he going to claim for the Republican party the platform adopted in St. Louis in 1888 upon which Mr. Cleveland was nominated?

Names are sometimes things. I prefer to believe, Mr. President, that in this ebullition the Senator from Vermont does not represent either himself or the Republican party. He will some day think better of this proposition to meet the reasonable and just demands of the people of the United States in regard to currency supply and the material of which it is to be composed; and, while I feel gratified at his course in declining to put any obstruction in the way of the passage of the bill now before the Senate, I am not willing that what he says shall go to the country as representing the Republican party, although, of course, if the question were between him and me as to who was entitled to speak authoritatively as to the Republican party, it would be decided in his favor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I stand by the Republican platform, to which the Senator from Kansas has alluded, fully and in all its implications; but our friends the Democrats on the other side and their deluded followers and coadjutors have poisoned that Republican platform and transformed it into a platform that no Democratic convention ever dared to make and that no Democratic Administration, that no Democratic House of Representatives ever dared to propose to do, because they knew that surely—it may take some years to do so—the people of the United States would find out that they had been deluded and misled, as people before have been in all countries, by getting up a cry of people who have something to sell and people who have something to pay, to expand, and when the expansion comes and the break comes, as it certainly will and always has, then it is not the poor and the sorrowful that we are talking about or the debtors, who profit by it, but it is the very persons that these gentlemen are now howling against so strongly who make all the money out of it. That is what all human experience has shown.

Therefore, Mr. President, standing by everything that the Republican platform says, I declare that this has turned it into a poison and a wrong, and it is not what it purports to mean at all; and let those profit by it who make their profit by and by, and explain themselves.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont makes an assertion which is directly contradicted by the record and is historically untrue. He states that no Democratic House has ever passed a free-coinage bill. The House of Representatives in 1877, with a large Democratic majority, did pass a free-coinage act, pure and simple, and it came to the Senate and was mutilated here, with the free-coinage feature taken out of it by the Republican party, and that is the record.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes, Mr. President, I had forgotten that there was a Democratic party in 1878 and 1879 [laughter]; and I will not believe there was—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind the Senator from Vermont that under the rule no one is at liberty to speak oftener than once nor more than five minutes upon any pending question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move to postpone the bill indefinitely, and I will see what I can do then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the Senator from Vermont may have unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not ask any unanimous consent. I am not yet a servant of the party on the other side.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry he is not, Mr. President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Democratic party as it is called, being the House of Representatives, or a majority of it, in 1878 and 1879, did pass a contrivance of that kind, just as they are trying to pass it now, in order to overthrow by appeals to the worst instincts and the unhappiest solicitudes of the people of the United States something that might bring them into power. They accomplished it, and Mr. Cleveland was elected; and, having been elected by their votes, Mr. Cleveland was wise enough and brave enough to tell his Democratic supporters that that sort of delusion could not be carried into practice; and the Democratic party was wise enough for a wonder—wise enough for a wonder—to be absolutely silent for four years upon that topic. I was going to make a very improper quotation from Shakespeare, but I will not make it. No patriot—I will change Shakespeare a little—no patriot opened his mouth to bark at the Administration of President Cleveland because he persistently and steadily declined, under whatever influence, and I honor him for it. In whatever way I may differ from him as to his policy and career, he was certainly a patriot in that respect. He could not be betrayed nor seduced into destroying the prosperity of the people of the United States by advising any such measure as that which we have now or as is suggested by our Democratic associates, and no man in either House—there may have been an exception, but I never heard of it—in the whole four years—and think of it, Mr. President, four years of Democratic silence [laughter]—opened his lips to relieve a suffering people from a want of the coinage of the silver dollar, when everybody who had anything to pay could borrow money, if he had anything to present for borrowing it, of his neighbor or his bank or anywhere else, for a less cost of interest than he ever could before, and when all the time in those four years the Treasury was bulging (if I may use a nautical expression) with the silver coinage that was deposited in its vaults, and where a large surplus of it still is.

I say, then, with great respect to my friend from Kansas and to everybody else, that this is the new performance, renewed from 1878 and 1879 to 1890, of the Democratic party, when it has no responsibility (and I agree it ought never to have any), again proposing to entangle the Republican party, who must look a little further than the cry of to-day, into a measure of this kind. So be it. I deliver it over to the Democratic party.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is a little mistaken when he says that no member of either House opened his mouth against the policy of the President during the last Administration. It perhaps did not attract the attention of the Senator that one hundred Representatives, members of the House, signed a paper and addressed it to the President, after the newspapers gave it out that he was opposed to free coinage or desired the repeal of the law authorizing the limited coinage of silver, asking him to suspend his judgment upon that subject until he could come to Washington and consult with the representatives of the people who elected him President. President Cleveland was hardly expected to make an answer to that, but he did make a pretty vigorous answer to it, and that answer contained in substance the statement that the coinage of silver had already treasured so far upon the supply of gold in the country as to endanger our capacity to redeem legal-tender notes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What year was that?

Mr. REAGAN. That was the year he was elected President and before the first Congress met after he was elected. A response was made to that. I had the honor to make that response and to inquire who informed the President that the coinage of silver had driven gold out of the country and to show from the Treasury reports a steady accumulation of the surplus of gold from the passage of the act of 1878 to that time. I also inquired who informed the President that the legal-tender notes were refused to be redeemed in gold. The law did not say so. I inquired also who informed him that they were to be redeemed at all, for the law of 1878 required that when paid into the Treasury they should be reissued and kept in circulation.

The Senator from Vermont is usually thoroughly informed, but evidently this morning he is somewhat out of humor, and it is not surprising that young and inexperienced men under defeat should get out of humor; and he may not recollect as well as he would under other circumstances.

Sir, there were Democrats brave enough to tell the President, who was willing to sacrifice the public interest, that they would not submit to it, just as to-day there are Republicans brave enough to tell the Administration that they can not be led to sacrifice the interest of this country, and that the interests of the people must be subserved, and not the interests of a class which seeks to get dear money and cheap labor and cheap property, to oppress the masses for the benefit of the few.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I did not happen to be invited to sign the private and confidential paper that the hundred gentlemen of the House of Representatives addressed to Mr. Cleveland, but I happen to know this, that whatever may have been the private appeals and oburgations by deluded men to the President of the United States, at that time Mr. Cleveland, he evidently denied their application and nothing came of it except a rejoinder that my friend from Texas says he or somebody else made. After that, the Democratic party at St. Louis—and there is a book (I was able to extract it like a brand from the burning from the hands of my friend from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] yesterday) containing the Democratic declaration of principles—it is rather a joke to put it that way, but that is the way it is in the book, printed so—in which they extol Mr. Cleveland's administration of the public affairs from beginning to end. They shied on the silver question because it was party tactics, as they thought, to do so. They had not beliefs enough that they were willing to express to state them, knowing what their candidate's opinion was, and they would rather live under a conservative administration of Mr. Cleveland and get the offices, if he got in, than to make a frank and explicit declaration of what my friend from Texas says was the opinion of one hundred members of the House of Representatives.

After all this, when that solemn and respectable body met at St. Louis in June, eighteen hundred and whatever it was—1888, I suppose—I repeat that they declared in the most specific language that a Democratic committee on resolutions was capable of employing (and I assume it must be complete) that the whole Administration of Mr. Cleveland had redounded to the benefit and honor of the country. It included, I take it, the wicked measures that he repressed as much as the good measures that he favored namely, free trade, or properly foreign trade, to the disadvantage of every laborer in the United States. That is where you were.

Now, your opportunity has come again when you have no responsibilities and only appeal to the cry of those who are desirous to pay their debts for less than they contracted to pay them, and the desire of those who have mines of silver to make products to sell to again make a perfectly safe declaration that you are for everything and for everybody, but when you have selected your man and put him in place I am bound to pay the homage of my respectful admiration to all of you that you would know enough not to pretend any such nonsense while he was in the chair.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont exhibits his usual ingenuity, accompanied by his usual unfairness in shirking the issue which he made himself and from which he is forced to retreat by the record. He asserted here that no Democratic House of Representatives had ever dared to pass a free-coinage bill. I assert that the record shows that the House of Representatives, in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses, both of them overwhelmingly Democratic, did pass a free-coinage bill and sent it to the Senate.

The Senator now seeks to evade his misstatement of facts by an appeal to the partisan passions of his own party. In one breath he alludes to his deluded associates upon that side of the Chamber and then turns with Parisian elegance to compliment his respected friend from Kansas, who is one of them.

But the Senator from Vermont makes another misstatement from the record. He says that no Democrat was found to protest openly against Mr. Cleveland's views in regard to silver. I assert that within ten days after the first Congress met after Cleveland had announced those views one of the most distinguished Democratic Senators in this body, our late associate, James B. Beck, of Kentucky, in a speech which attracted the attention of the whole country and electrified the West, attacked those opinions and upon this floor held the undivided attention of his brother Senators whilst he gave his reasons for differing with the Democratic President; and now the Senator from Vermont, with his usual candor, with his usual sincerity, compliments President Cleveland.

Sir, all I can say is that a great many hard things and harsh things have been said of that distinguished Democrat, but the encomium of the Senator from Vermont is the most terrible assault that ever was made upon him. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. You will nominate him again, all the same [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify my amendment by striking out the words "coin certificates" and inserting in place of them "the certificates provided for in the first section of this act."

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, my service in this body has been long enough to enable me to recall that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] uttered about the same jeremiad in 1878 that he has just uttered in regard to the provision which has been adopted by a decided majority of the Senate. If I could have him sworn on his voir dire, as we say about a jurymen, I would be willing to leave it to him whether a single one of the dismal prophecies made about the effects to follow the passage of the bill remonetizing silver in 1878 had been realized.

I am aware that in very large measure the criticism upon the Republicanism of any one by the Senator from Vermont carries very great weight. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says "in Vermont." No, Mr. President, in the United States, and I would prefer always to resolve doubts by accepting his standard of Republicanism rather than my own; but when I have no doubt I must of necessity differ with him and accept his reproaches. At the present moment I feel comfortable about the company in which I find myself, embracing so large a number of Republicans whose faith is as well attested by works as that of the Senator from Vermont, and all the more because in 1878 I voted to carry the Bland bill over the veto of a Republican President and the Senator from Vermont voted to sustain that veto; all the more because I see that what he then said was Republicanism proved not to be so; all the more because the people whom I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor put the stamp of their approval upon my Republicanism as voiced in the votes which I gave at that time against the Senator from Vermont and men opinionated like him, who then, as now, talked with a sneer about the people of the West wanting to create cheaper money with which to pay their debts and accused them of repudiation. The Republicanism of Kansas is as conspicuous, as well founded, and as enlightened as that of Vermont.

Mr. President, I might say something disagreeable about the people who want the policy of the Government so fashioned that what they contracted for shall be largely increased in value before pay-day comes. He has no word of denunciation for the people who have so managed the affairs of the Government, or have had them so managed by those who represent them in Congress, as to add 30 per cent. to the value of the metal in which the debts due them are to be paid, to the great burden of those who have to pay them.

But this is not a time for recriminations. I thank Heaven that there is room enough in the Republican party for wide differences of opinion upon great economic questions. No member, however eminent, can speak with absolute authority, and no one is necessary to the party, nor can it be held as the exponent of any locality or class. Whether he or I am on the right track now, so far as the tenets of the Republican party as to silver are concerned, I am willing to take the last national platform as meaning what the people I represent understood it to mean on that question. If the people of Vermont understood it differently that is their lookout. We shall all be wiser some of these days, and I do not doubt that the Senator from Vermont will have abundant and early occasion to recant what he has just said about the direful effects to follow the free coinage of silver.

Mr. President, there never has been an experience of human kind which justifies what the Senator from Vermont has said. There never was but one demonetization of silver in this country and that was in 1873. There never has been any disturbance growing out of the relations between the two metals except what grew out of that act. There is not a line or a syllable of human experience which can indicate to any unbiased person that this measure which the Senate has set its favorable seal upon and which it is about to perfect and pass can be otherwise than helpful in the highest and best sense to the great majority of the American people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw my motion to postpone indefinitely. The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of section 3 it is proposed to strike out the word "coin" and after the word "certificates" to insert "provided for in the first section of this act;" so as to read:

That the certificates provided for in the first section of this act, issued under the provisions of this act, shall be of denominations of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars, and such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value.

Mr. ALLISON. There are no certificates provided for in the first section.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not know that there was but one section.

Mr. PLATT. There is nothing in the first section about certificates.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas, if I can have his attention for a moment, whether any change has been made in section 2 of the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. There has not been.

Mr. GRAY. Is it intended that that shall be left to read as it now reads?

Sec. 2. That the Treasury notes issued in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be redeemable on demand, in coin, at the Treasury of the United States, or at the office of any assistant treasurer of the United States, and when so redeemed may be reissued, etc.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] offered a substitute for that section which is now pending.

Mr. GRAY. I did not so understand. Is that amendment agreed to by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. So far as I have been able to examine it, I think it is in exact accordance with the necessities which have been created by the adoption of the preceding section except so far as it relates to the question of the legal-tender character of the certificates.

Mr. GRAY. Is that provided for?

Mr. PLUMB. That is in the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendment of the Senator from Texas be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas as modified will be again read.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that it be modified so as to refer to the second section of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of section 3, after the word "certificates," insert "provided for in the second section of this act;" so as to read:

That the certificates provided for in the second section of this act, issued under the provisions of this act, shall be of denominations of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars, etc.

Mr. PLUMB. There seems to be tautology there:

That the certificates provided for in this act shall be received for all taxes and dues.

Is that the language?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask, then, that it be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That the certificates provided for in the second section of this act, issued under the provisions of this act,

Mr. PLUMB. Those last words should come out.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, they should be omitted.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the words "issued under the provisions of this act;" so as to read:

That the certificates provided for in the second section of this act shall be of denominations of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, as we have not the benefit of having the amendment in print, whether this amendment is to be a substitute for section 2 of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. It is to take the place of section 3. The Senator will understand that an independent section had been adopted at the beginning and the second section has been adopted. Upon that we propose to build the bill that is to pass, and now I propose as a third section to insert what has been read.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether the second section, which is a substitute for the one we have—

Mr. REAGAN. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. GRAY. The House bill, the one which has been amended and the one upon which we are now acting and to which we are offering amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. I had not in view specially to offer my amendment as a substitute for anything, but to offer it as a proposition.

Mr. GRAY. It is very important that we should understand the structure of this bill as it will be when it goes out of our hands, because it has already been amended very materially in the first section. I understood from the Senator from Kansas that the second section had been substituted by the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, and now the Senator from Texas says that is not so.

Mr. REAGAN. I simply offered the section for the purpose of providing for coin certificates.

Mr. GRAY. Then I would ask the Senator from Texas, if he has studied this bill, as he seems to have done, whether section 2 of the House bill which we are now engaged in discussing and amending is still in force.

Mr. REAGAN. That has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. GRAY. Unless it is objected to, I should like to have section 2, as it now exists in the bill, read.

Mr. REAGAN. There is another section 2 adopted already.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to have that read.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, if I understand what has already been done, it is this: A substitute section has been adopted in place of section 1, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has offered an amendment as a substitute for section 2.

Mr. HOAR. No, an addition to section 1.

Mr. HARRIS. It was an addition to section 1.

Mr. REAGAN. My amendment is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLATT. And the Senator from Texas has moved an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me—

Mr. PLATT. I had supposed—and I wish I might now have the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]—that the amendment which the Senator from Kansas proposed was in lieu of section 2. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. PLUMB. I have proposed a section to be section 2 of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. That is what I understood.

Mr. PLUMB. But it was not intended to take the place of section 2, which would only change the order of numbering the sections.

Mr. PLATT. I understand now.

Mr. PLUMB. But section 2 may more properly be dispensed with, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas is only for the purpose of carrying out in detail the provision which I had offered as section 2 of the bill, which provided for issuing coin certificates, and the amendment of the Senator from Texas provides the details of issuing those certificates, and in addition to that provides for an appropriation to carry out the act, and repeals so much of the Bland act of 1878 as authorizes the monthly purchase of silver.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas a question before he takes his seat. I understand he has amended the bill before the Senate by substituting for section 1 the two printed sections as one section submitted by him?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. That leaves section 2 of the bill unacted upon.

Mr. PLUMB. It leaves the section which is in the bill as section 2 unacted upon. But there is another section which follows the one referred to which was adopted, and which is now section 2 of the bill. So, if the present section 2 should remain, it would require to be numbered section 3.

Mr. GRAY. But if the bill remains as it is now before the Senate the certificates provided to be issued in section 2 will be legal tender for all debt, public and private. Is that so?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, if that should remain in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, I understand, to the amendment which has been accepted, which will become section 2 of the bill. What the Senator from Texas ought to do—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the amendment of the Senator from Texas is offered as a new section.

Mr. TELLER. What the Senator should do is to offer it as a substitute for those sections which are rendered useless by the adoption of the amendment providing for free coinage.

Mr. BUTLER and others. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. With his consent I will ask that the motion may be put in that shape.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection. My purpose was to present that, and if it was adopted to vote down the other sections, but the suggestion presented by the Senator from Colorado is perhaps better, and I will consent to accept it as a substitute for the other sections of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that it be offered as a substitute for sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6. That leaves sections 5 and 6, which were stricken out, and that leaves the section which pertains to the balance in the Treasury to stand. The amendment of the Senator from Texas should be a substitute for all of the bill except that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Except section 6?

Mr. TELLER. Except such as have already been stricken out by the amendments of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the bill as it now stands as already amended be read, and then that the amendment of the Senator from Texas be read, so that we can see exactly what its condition is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 25.8 grains of standard gold; and the said coins shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private.

That hereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars or bars for his benefit and without charge; but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100 or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of section 3 of "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which became a law February 28, 1878, is hereby made applicable to the coinage in this act provided for.

Mr. VEST. Now read the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will now be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, as follows—

Mr. CARLISLE. Section 6 of the original bill has already been stricken out by the Senate. I do not understand the purpose of the Senator from Texas to be to strike out section 6 as it now stands.

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir, I do not propose to do that. The old number 6 will be No. 6 as it now stands in the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Section 6 of the original bill has already been stricken out. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. REAGAN. The committee recommended striking it out, but we have not yet acted upon that motion.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, we have acted on section 6. The Committee on Finance reported to strike it out, and a vote of the Senate restored it. Section 6 is now in the original bill by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Then it should be included in the motion.

Mr. TELLER. There is not any trouble about this. The proposition is to strike out all of the bill that has not already been stricken out, except section 6 on page 4 and section 7 on page 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2, section 3, section 4, section 5, and section 6, as follows—

Mr. HARRIS. The whole of section 6 was stricken out by the committee, but the Senate restored it.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the following sections:

SEC. 2. That the Treasury notes issued in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be redeemable on demand, in coin, at the Treasury of the United States or at the office of any assistant treasurer of the United States, and when so redeemed may be reissued.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that there is no necessity for reading those sections as the motion is to strike them out and every Senator has them before him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make an inquiry. If section 2 is stricken out, are these notes a legal tender for the payment of public or private debts?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has offered a substitute for those several sections which makes those notes a legal tender.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before section 2 is stricken out I think we ought to have that section read which makes these notes a legal tender. However much I am opposed to this whole bill, I certainly do not desire the Government of the United States to issue notes that it will not require its citizens to take, and therefore I should like to have the provision in the section proposed by the Senator from Texas which makes these notes a legal tender read.

Mr. PLUMB. It does not make them a legal tender.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish it to be understood that this bill does not make these notes a legal tender.

Mr. PLUMB. The measure of the Senator from Texas does not make the notes a legal tender. If this section shall be adopted, some one no doubt will move an amendment to it to make them a legal tender.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before section 2 is stricken out that matter ought to be attended to.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senate has already passed upon the question of legal tender.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw my suggestion not to read the sections which are proposed to be stricken out. I think the sections had better be read so that the record will show what they are.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Treasury notes issued in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be redeemable on demand, in coin, at the Treasury of the United States or at the office of any assistant treasurer of the United States, and when so redeemed may be reissued; but no greater or less amount of such notes shall be outstanding at any time than the cost of the silver bullion then held in the Treasury purchased by such notes; and such Treasury notes shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued; and such notes when held by any national-banking association may be counted as part of its lawful reserve.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin such portion of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for, and any gain or seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the requirements of existing law and the regulations of the mint service governing the methods of determining the amount of pure silver contained, and the amount of charges or deductions, if any, to be made.

SEC. 5. That so much of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," as requires the monthly purchase and coinage of the same into silver dollars of not less than $2,000,000, nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. That whenever the market price of silver, as determined in pursuance of section 1 of this act, is $1 for 371.25 grains of pure silver, it shall be lawful for the owner of any silver bullion to deposit the same at any coinage mint of the United States, to be formed into standard silver dollars for his benefit, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837. And purchases of silver bullion shall be suspended while it is being so deposited for coinage.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That the certificates provided for in the second section of this act shall be of denominations of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars, and such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value. A sufficient sum to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The provision in section 1 of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month nor more $4,000,000 worth per month of such bullion, is hereby repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]?

Mr. PLUMB. I understand the question now is on the substitution of the amendment of the Senator from Texas for the old sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the bill. Section 6 is already provided for by the first section, and consequently is not necessary to be retained. Section 5 is covered by the amendment of the Senator from Texas. Section 4 is unnecessary by reason of the adoption of the first section, as is also section 3. It only leaves some indifferent provisions of section 2 outside of the legal-tender provision not covered by the amendment of the Senator from Texas or by what has already been adopted. When that shall be adopted, if any one thinks the certificates which have been provided for by the bill shall be made legal tender, that can be moved as a separate proposition. I call attention to the fact that section 3 of the act of 1878, which has already been incorporated by reference in this bill, provides that the certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued. I hope there may be a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether, if we pass this bill as proposed, the certificates issued under the present law or under the law which we pass will be legal tender, and whether existing certificates which have been already issued will be a legal tender.

Mr. PLUMB. The existing certificates are not legal tender, and under the amendment of the Senator from Texas these will not be legal tender. They will only be receivable for customs, taxes, and other public dues.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. "Vote!" "Vote!"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment of the Senator from Texas?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator to strike out the last section of the bill, if that was not included in the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Section 7?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it would not be wise to leave that.

Mr. REAGAN. That has been stricken out by vote of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon, the amendment was, but not the section itself. The first section of the amendment of the Senator makes it take effect from the date of the passage of the act and the seventh section puts it at thirty days.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that is correct. The section should be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. (8) 7. That this act shall take effect thirty days from and after its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on striking out section 7. Does the Senator refer to section 7 as it stood originally in the House bill or section 7 as reported from the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. Eight or seven, it does not make any difference. It is the section now numbered 7 that is to be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section on page 4?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; the section on page 5 is what we want stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. (8) 7. That this act shall take effect thirty days from and after its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all there is of the House bill that has not been substituted.

Mr. HARRIS. Except section 6.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the original section 7, changed to section 6 by the committee, has not been acted upon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, not on page 4; but all the remainder have been acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What does the Senator desire to have read—the original section 7?

Mr. BUTLER. The proposition of the Senator from Kansas was to strike out section 7 of this bill on page 5. That is the proposition before the Senate, as I understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the section which has been read. The question is on the amendment striking out section 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think that vote was understood. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to strike out the section upon page 4 of the original bill?

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. BUTLER. No; that on page 5.

Mr. PLATT. Not on page 4?

Mr. PLUMB. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. There is really so much noise in the Chamber that I can not hear one word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has made every effort to maintain order. It must be impossible for the reporters to hear remarks when made.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to keep order.

Mr. SPOONER. If Senators will be seated there will be no trouble.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators will please be seated; and those who wish to engage in conversation will please retire to the cloak-room. Order should be maintained on the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not understand that section 6 of this bill has been stricken out, but section 7, on page 5, has been stricken out. That section simply provides that this act shall take effect thirty days from and after its passage. That has been stricken out as inconsistent with the first section, which provides that any one may hereafter present his silver bullion for coinage at the mint.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair, that section 7, on page 5, has been stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I ask that quiet be restored long enough to have this bill, amended as it is, read carefully by the Secretary, so that we may understand it.

Mr. TELLER. Before that is done I wish to move an amendment:

That the certificates provided for in this act shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a lawful tender for the payment of all debts, public and private.

I offer that as an additional section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That the certificates provided for in this act shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a lawful tender for the payment of all debts, public and private.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there is the gist of this whole discussion, the important proposition that has engaged the Senate during all these weeks, and in my view it is of very little importance whether silver be remonetized or not, whether we go to free coinage now or a few months hence; but it is of the utmost importance whether we adopt a bill which carries every certificate of the country and its entire paper currency down to the degradation of fiat money.

What party platform asks that of its adherents, either Democratic or Republican? Is it necessary in order to fulfill our pledges that we unchain ourselves from the Constitution, that we abandon gold and silver and attach ourselves to this ruinous proposition of fiat money? Here in a time of peace, of unusual prosperity, and for the first time in a hundred years is made a proposition in the American Senate, in both branches of Congress, that we degrade gold and silver to the low level of mere paper—not even the ordinary promise of the Government to pay money, but simply to redeem these pieces of paper in money which once to be sure was deposited, but which time and chance, as in the case of the Bank of Amsterdam, may have carried away so that when this paper, long a legal tender, is at last brought to the test and money demanded upon it, the real money may not be there at all.

Mr. President, the financiers of the Republican party or of the Democratic party who would carry us into this abyss, the men who have led us all these years and yet come here now and advise us to vote for this proposition, might well be shamed into private life and into oblivion, as I believe, for the public good. I can go to any extent in redeeming the pledges of the Republican platform in the free coinage of silver even, because I believe it is only a question of a short time whether we shall have free coinage or not, and the country can bear it, public confidence will not be shaken by our so doing; but when we go further and undertake to say that gold and silver are no longer the only legal tender in a time of peace, when there is no emergency, no decision of the Supreme Court, and no exercise of the war power justifies it at all, for the great parties of the United States to go blindly, foolishly, heedlessly, into this abyss, is something that I think might well "give us pause." For one, I can not consent to it.

Why do our silver friends insist upon this measure? Flushed with their victory will they undertake to go so far that they will lose the whole of it? Let them well understand that the people of the United States when they are again called upon to discuss the question, as they did a few years ago, whether fiat paper is to become the legal tender and the currency of the country, will in the end vanquish them in the light of the good sense of the American people, as was the case before.

We have gone to the extreme limit of the Constitution. We have undertaken to replant ourselves where we stood before the war, where we were for a hundred years, where the fathers of the Republic were, where all the great men of the Republic before the war stood, and where most of them have stood since, yet here to-day our friends insist, having gained everything, that we cross the line of the Equator and go into the Gulf. For one, sir, I will not go there. I do not care if the Senator from Ohio says this is good policy, that he does not want anything issued as currency by the country that is not legal tender.

He crosses the line; he does a thing which under no pretext whatever should ever be done in sound discretion in the light of any doctrine that anybody has ever advanced hitherto, for there is no emergency, there is no war, and nobody has ever undertaken to say that paper should be legal tender, no matter who issues it, unless by reason of such emergency.

Now, we have $346,000,000 of paper outstanding that every honest financier has expected would be some time redeemed in gold coin or in silver coin—in coin, the legal tender of the Constitution. I have looked forward to the period when that would be called in, that as the result of this legislation we could get gold and silver—I am indifferent which—upon which being a coin legal tender we might issue a certificate and use that for convenience in circulation. With that I would be content, but not, Mr. President, with this proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], it is that the certificates which are provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Texas to this bill to be issued upon the deposit of silver coin—

Mr. TELLER. Silver or gold coin.

Mr. GRAY. Silver or gold coin shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private.

Mr. TELLER. That is all there is of it.

Mr. GRAY. These certificates, if I understand the scope of the amendment, are mere receipts for so many silver dollars or so many gold dollars, as the case may be, giving the holder thereof an evidence of ownership in that many dollars in the vaults of the Treasury, and useful, as we all know, to pass again as currency, and very useful as a currency and performing all the functions of currency without having impressed upon them this legal-tender quality, which is not at all essential to the functions they are now performing.

The Senator from Colorado, by his amendment, seeks to go a step further, and to impress upon these certificates, which are more analogous to warehouse receipts than any other commercial paper that I know of, or to the certificate of deposit that one gets for the money that he has in bank where it is convenient for him to hold it, to impress upon paper like this the quality of fiat money, if you please, the quality of legal tender which absolutely gives, whether it be paper or gold, the quality of money per se.

This, Mr. President, as I have said, is not necessary in order to utilize these certificates, because we have had experience in the last ten years that shows how extensive that use may be without taking this extreme step.

But there is a further objection, a constitutional one. The States are inhibited from making anything but gold or silver coin a tender for the payment of debts. I always believed, and believe now, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court to the contrary, that that inhibition was equally operative upon the Congress of the United States, that it was intended by that inhibition that we should be anchored forever to a metallic currency as a legal tender, and should never be allowed in our history to drift without compass and without rudder upon the fathomless sea of irredeemable paper currency.

But, Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of Senators who are inclined to be favorable to this amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the further fact that the decision of the Supreme Court made in 1883 affirming the power of the Congress of the United States to make Treasury notes a legal tender does not, in the opinion of the court delivered in that case, go so far as to include within its reasoning these coin certificates as provided for by the amendments of the Senator from Colorado. The authority to make Treasury notes a legal tender was expressly placed by the court in the opinion delivered by them upon the power given to Congress by the Constitution to borrow money and to issue for the money so borrowed the promises of the Government to pay or repay that money.

Those are the notes that were the subject of the litigation which resulted in that decision, and the reasoning of the court expressly excludes paper such as is described in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. These certificates are not promises of the Government to pay money; they are not Treasury notes; they do not come within the description of the paper that was before the court and in regard to which that opinion was delivered, but the reasoning of the court expressly excludes the paper now under consideration. In 110 United States Reports, in the legal-tender cases, the court says:

It appears to us to follow, as a logical and necessary consequence, that Congress has the power to issue the obligations of the United States in such form, and to impress upon them such qualities as currency for the purchase of merchandise and the payment of debts, as accord with the usage of sovereign governments. The power, as incident to the power of borrowing money and issuing bills or notes of the Government for money borrowed, of impressing upon those bills or notes the quality of being a legal tender for the payment of private debts, was a power universally understood to belong to sovereignty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SPOONER. I apprehend no more serious proposition was ever introduced in the Senate of the United States than that to which the Senator from Delaware is addressing himself, and I submit to the Senate that it is worse than absurd to limit Senators in discussing it to five minutes. It is a new proposition, one which has not been considered during this long debate, and I ask unanimous consent that in the discussion of this amendment Senators may speak without the five-minute limit. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I want to interfere, but we have already passed upon the question of legal tender by a very decided majority to-day.

Mr. PLATT. But not on the certificates.

Mr. COCKRELL. The legal-tender clause was stricken out.

Mr. SPOONER. I voted with the Senator from Colorado to make the Treasury notes to be issued under the bill with bullion at cost in the Treasury behind them a legal tender, but the question whether mere silver certificates should be made a legal tender for all debts, public and private, is a new question to this debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]?

Mr. HALE. There is objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Delaware may proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to any longer discussion than five minutes, except where a new motion is made. I have no objection to the Senator from Delaware proceeding, but I do not propose to set aside the rule.

Mr. GRAY. I move to indefinitely postpone the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, and I will not trespass on the attention of the Senate more than a few minutes.

As I have said, the Supreme Court in its decision has expressly placed this power to impress the legal-tender character upon paper on the authority vested in the Government by the Constitution to borrow money, and the promise to pay issued for that money is the paper and the kind of paper which they say may be invested with this legal-tender quality.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I suggest to him that the Supreme Court also rest their opinion upon the power of Congress to emit bills of credit.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Alabama kindly tell me what a bill of credit is?

Mr. MORGAN. One of these certificates is a bill of credit. A Treasury note is a bill of credit; a greenback is a bill of credit.

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand that a bill of credit differs at all in its essence and substance from the obligation to pay back money that the Government is bound to pay, as borrowed money.

Mr. MORGAN. Neither do I.

Mr. GRAY. But the court go further in their reasoning in this case, and, basing the decision upon the power to borrow money, they expressly exclude the power to make legal tender being inferred from the only other provision in the Constitution from which it could be inferred—that is, the power to coin money. You must get it from one source or the other. If the Congress of the United States may make anything but gold or silver coin a legal tender, then it must be on the ground stated by the Supreme Court, that the obligation to repay borrowed money gives them that authority, or under the power given to the Government of the United States to coin money; and yet the Supreme Court have expressly excluded that authority from coming under that category of power. They say on page 462:

The power vested in Congress to coin money does not in my judgment fortify the position of the court as its opinion affirms. So far from deducing from that power any authority to impress the notes of the Government with the quality of legal tender, its existence seems to me inconsistent with a power to make anything but coin a legal tender.

Mr. President, I have not the time nor the disposition to weary the Senate by an extended argument about the constitutionality of this proposition. But there are other reasons. We have but recently emerged from a condition of things to which an irredeemable or a supposed irredeemable paper currency had brought us. We all recollect the commercial and business disturbance that existed during the war and followed for a decade afterwards, and we all hailed with delight and joy the advent of that resumption, which has continued from the date of the passage of the act until now, that has put us in a monetary condition better than has ever existed before in the history of this country in my humble opinion.

The money of the country, its coin and its paper and its bank notes, are issued and circulate all over this continent. They are taken in Canada as well as in the United States.

No man has to subject himself to inconvenience from exchange, and when traveling from one part of the country to another he is subject to no loss by a variation of value of the paper which he has in his pocket representing money. That is the condition in which we find ourselves to-day, and where is the reason and what can be alleged as a reason for disturbing that condition in which we happily find the monetary condition to be at this moment?

There is no demand for it that I have heard. We have adopted by the vote of the Senate a free-coinage measure which, if it becomes a law, will expand largely, and dangerously, as I think, the currency of the country, but what necessity exists for the further advance in that direction and making for the first time in the history of the country, in addition to the $346,000,000 of Treasury notes which are now legal tender, these certificates of deposits, these evidences of property, a legal tender? It is reversing all the traditions of the Government, and especially the traditions of the Democratic party, in regard to this vital matter of the money of the country. It is not demanded anywhere so far as I have heard. It has been sprung upon the Senate at the very close of the debate and the voting on this question, and I think we might well pause and give the country the benefit of our doubts upon this question.

Mr. MORGAN. The legal-tender quality of these certificates was provided for in the House bill, so that that question has not been sprung upon us. We have known that it was here all the time.

Now, there are different kinds of certificates of deposit. There are certificates of special deposit.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to call his attention to the fact that the legal-tender provision in the House bill related to Treasury notes, not to silver certificates?

Mr. MORGAN. A silver certificate or a coin certificate, as it has been expressed in the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], is as much a Treasury note as other notes issued by the Government.

I was about to draw the distinction between a certificate of special deposit and a general certificate of deposit by a banker, for instance, for the Government of the United States in all these things is merely a banker and nothing but a banker. It has nothing to do with coin or finance at all except the mere coinage of money and giving to it its legal-tender value. National-bank notes, silver certificates, gold certificates, greenbacks, and whatever else they may issue, are issued by the Government of the United States as a banker would issue notes, and the Government is bound to the redemption of every one of them.

So the Government would be bound to redeem these as general certificates of deposit, not special certificates where the dollar deposited must be returned to the owner of it holding the certificate. The Government of the United States in the mean time, while it may have a million or one hundred millions of this money outstanding, if it finds it necessary to use the coin in its Treasury for any other purpose can do so, because the coin is not kept on special deposit for the redemption of these particular dollars or particular certificates, but it is a general deposit, and therefore amounts to nothing more than the express or implied promise of the Government of the United States to redeem national-bank notes or redeem greenbacks or any other money that it may issue. The obligation of the Government is an obligation to redeem.

Now, when I take $100 or $1,000 of these coin certificates and deposit them in the Treasury of the United States, I put that money under the control of the Treasury of the United States, and I have no specific right to the thousand dollars that I deposited there. I can not go and demand it as a special deposit, but I must take the credit of the Government as being sufficient at the time I claim redemption to pay these certificates in coin of gold or coin of silver, according to the option of the Government. That is money borrowed by the Government of the United States just as much as if it was raised upon the sale of bonds.

You sell a coin certificate for $100 and deposit it in the Treasury; that is money borrowed just as much as if you had sold a bond of the United States for that amount of money. And the money when it goes into the Treasury is the property of the United States, and not the property of the depositor.

Now, Mr. President, we may be able some time or other to go back to the old standard, which is quoted here as the Democratic standard, of the issue of silver and gold alone as money on the part of the Government of the United States to circulate as money. But since the legal-tender decision has been made the people of the United States have acquiesced in that policy, and I have seen no disposition on the part of anybody to go back to it now except once in a while when a sort of polemical question like this arises in the House or in the Senate; but the people do not care about going back. The drift is in the other direction. The Greenback party is still an organized party in the United States, and they are continually demanding the issue of more greenbacks as legal tender. It is quite a formidable organization in my own State, and it is everywhere.

I think it is a wise policy, inasmuch as the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that the promises of the Government are to redeem in coin for legal-tender value without reference to whether they were issued in war or in peace—I think it is a wise policy that we should attribute that quality to these coin certificates that we are about to issue under this bill if it shall become a law.

In view of that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the argument of the Senator from Delaware, I am satisfied that this is a debt of the Government and that these coin certificates either fill the office of a promise to redeem upon money borrowed or money deposited, and it becomes the general property of the United States, or else they are bills of credit, one of the two.

They are issued really upon the credit of the United States that it will redeem them, and the Supreme Court have announced their determined adhesion, so far at least, to the doctrine that that is good legal-tender money. I do not think we can go back of it, and I think it is just as reasonable to put these coin certificates under the influence of existing statutes operating upon greenbacks as it is to put any other money issued by the United States Government under the operation of them, as the greenbacks themselves.

I wish to say another word about these coin certificates—

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me, for this is a very important matter—

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Alabama said that the money that was deposited in the Treasury of the United States by one who sought to obtain coin certificates was the property of the Government. That may be, but in that special sense it must be kept there, and can not be used for any other purpose, I take it, whether the Government of the United States can use the coin deposited for the purposes of the general Government—

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired, and the Senator from Delaware has spoken once on this question.

Mr. BLAIR. Is the motion to indefinitely postpone still pending? Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I renew it. The Supreme Court says this:

Such being our conclusion in matter of law, the question whether at any particular time, in war or in peace, the exigency is such, by reason of unusual and pressing demands on the resources of the Government, or of the inadequacy of the supply of gold and silver coin to furnish the currency needed for the uses of the Government and of the people, that it is, as a matter of fact, wise and expedient to resort to this means, is a political question, to be determined by Congress, when the question of exigency arises, and not a judicial question, to be afterwards passed upon by the courts.

Is this any such exigency in a time as prosperous and as peaceful as now? This deposit is just like the old business of the Bank of Amsterdam. That was an institution established under a government:

The Bank of Amsterdam was established in January, 1609, under the guaranty of the city and the government of its magistrates. The avowed object was to afford some relief against the intolerable nuisance of worn and defaced coins, which flowed into a great commercial mart like Amsterdam from all the world. The currency made up of these coins had long been at a discount of 8 to 16 per cent.; and bills of exchange, payable in this currency, were of course at a like discount. The leading measure upon which it was founded, and by virtue of which it had a rapid rise and growth, was that all bills of exchange for sums over 600 florins were payable only at the bank. In a city where so many payments were concentrated this regulation drew daily vast sums to its vaults. Every person who had bills to pay for himself or others was obliged to open at once an account in the bank by depositing the amount of coins or bullion needed to meet his payments. These deposits were scrutinized, tested, valued, and the proceeds carried to the credit of the depositor, less 5 per cent., besides a charge of 10 florins for opening the first account.

These coins were placed on deposit and the owner of the coin was given a certificate that so much had been thus deposited. That certificate went into circulation and remained in circulation year after year, and year after year upon the strength of the belief in the integrity in the bank as guaranteed by the Government. But what was the result?

For almost two centuries the bank enjoyed unimpeached credit, performing all its functions with unceasing steadiness, and greatly to the benefit and commercial prosperity of Amsterdam. The amount of treasure amassed in its vaults has been variously estimated at from five to eighty millions sterling. If ten millions sterling be taken as a safe estimate, and it be assumed that the whole capital was moved only one hundred times in a year, its payments in that time would amount to one thousand millions sterling, or $4,800,000,000. The transfers of this enormous sum were made, during that long period, in unhesitating confidence as to the security of the deposit. The bank permitted no scrutiny into its condition, and rendered no account to the public, but merchants never doubted the validity of a security which was incessantly used in paying debts.

Who is going to scrutinize into the condition of this matter if the certificates become a legal tender and are obliged to be taken by everybody everywhere? Who is to test the condition of our Treasury vaults? Is the Democratic party to trust the Republican party, with no opportunity to investigate, and the Republican party to trust the Democratic party, for it may be fifty, one hundred, or two hundred years? By and by the time will come when we shall want to know whether the money is there. But if these are not legal tender they will be redeemed every day in a hundred places all over the country by private creditors who are demanding the legal tender, and they will be safe.

I omitted something. I will give you the result:

The bank failed, because its guardians had been unfaithful to their trust.

I take my stand right here. There is no necessity to depart from gold and silver. Put this bullion into the Treasury, coin it, and let that be the legal tender, and, if you please, distribute it over the country in the subtreasuries, put it where it will be convenient to everybody, in every bank, and all over the country, and whoever needs legal tender can go there and get it. But if you pass over this line, there is no legitimate or logical stopping point anywhere this side of all the dangers and ruin of fiat money.

Mr. DANIEL. I read from the syllabus of the decision of the Supreme Court, from which the Senator from New Hampshire has quoted:

Congress has the constitutional power to make the Treasury notes of the United States a legal tender in payment of private debts in time of peace as well as in time of war.

Mr. BLAIR. No one questions the power.

Mr. DANIEL. The syllabus continues:

Under the act of May 31, 1878, chapter 146, which enacts that when any United States legal-tender notes may be redeemed or received into the Treasury, and shall belong to the United States, they shall be reissued and paid out again, and kept in circulation; notes so reissued are a legal tender.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in a case made up for the purpose of testing the very question which the Senator from New Hampshire suggested, decided then in exact opposition to the position which he has taken.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware says that the Supreme Court has rested its legal-tender decision upon the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States, and that there must be a borrowing of money before any paper can be issued which is made legal tender. The Supreme Court in its latest opinion says this:

The constitutional authority of Congress to provide a currency for the whole country is now firmly established. In Veazie Bank vs. Fenno (8 Wall. 533, 548), Chief-Justice Chase, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"It can not be doubted that under the Constitution the power to provide a circulation of coin is given to Congress, and it is settled by the uniform practice of the Government and by repeated decisions that Congress may constitutionally authorize the emission of bills of credit."

It is to that constitutional authority to emit bills of credit from which the court in this opinion deduces the authority to make these bills of credit a legal tender in payment of debts. While the court incidentally alluded to the power to borrow money, it did not predicate the decision solely upon that power, but upon the general authority to issue bills of credit and to provide a currency for the country.

The new idea which gentlemen have suggested in opposition to this amendment it seems to me ought not to pass unnoticed. It is intimated by the Senator from Delaware that Congress proposes to launch out upon a sea of irredeemable paper money. On what authority or what fact can the Senator predicate any such suggestion? How can he contrast an irredeemable paper money with a currency which is to have for its redemption a dollar in hard money, dollar for dollar, all along the line?

Mr. GRAY. That may be sufficient to give it value.

Mr. DANIEL. That may be sufficient to give it value, but it is also sufficient to refute the value of the argument which you have attached to it.

Mr. President, it is said that there is no need of attaching legal tender to this, or less occasion for attaching the legal-tender provision to this amendment than there is to a Treasury note. The Treasury note which the Senate has to-day said should have the legal-tender attachment is merely payable out of the general balance, and there might be some objection to the attaching of a legal-tender provision to a piece of paper when you can not make sure that there will be coin behind it. The Senate has to-day voted for that—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I can not see that it is very well worth the Senate's while to go into this question of a legal tender to certificates of silver dollars as they will be, when we have not gone into that thus far in the issue of silver dollars in that quality of the silver certificates. What has happened is that we have planned a scheme by which bullion should be admitted from its owners into the Government's keeping up to a certain amount. But let us suppose it was free; we are willing to say that the bullion should not be made a legal tender; that is, no one proposes to make it as bullion a legal tender, and that therefore we would treat a certificate that could have gold and yet be tied to just so many ounces or grains of silver in bullion as were expressed in the silver certificate; that we would go to the extreme, if you please, take what should not be legal tender, although the bulk and value was in bullion in our hands, these certificates might be made so.

Now, Mr. President, the bill as it stands, and as expected to pass, has nothing to do with bullion and nothing to do with inert silver that can not be legal tender. Every ounce of silver that will go into this Treasury is to go out as a silver legal-tender dollar; and then to add to that also that for every one of them there shall be a certificate that is also to be a legal-tender dollar is making a fiat money in addition to having made a solid silver legal dollar.

On the question of law I have no doubt, and I have argued it in the original inquiries before the court, that the power to issue legal tender does not rest upon any single clause of the Constitution, but is only measured by it. It belongs to the inherent quality of a nation to determine its legal tender. There can be no other source and no other power defining legal tender except Government; and when the Constitution of the United States has not denied the legal-tender power, then the Government has it, and there is no greater fallacy and no greater folly than to suppose that this great nation of ours was launched upon the stormy sea of human affairs and could be kept afloat only so long as the gold and silver accessible for use were adequate to carry us through.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I shall be governed in my vote upon this by the understanding that the certificate proposed to be issued is simply a method of circulating gold and silver, that it stands upon a distinct, and in that respect a different ground from the issuance of notes generally payable on demand from a general balance in the Treasury, that it is a method of circulating gold and silver, saving the waste of abrasion and offering convenience in the matter of handling and transmitting this money.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] spoke of these certificates as fiat money, and the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has just used the same expression. I do not comprehend the meaning of such expressions with reference to certificates that represent a hundred cents in gold or a hundred cents in silver for every dollar that is there. I do not comprehend how the phrase "fiat money" can be applied to gold and silver which we recognize as the money of the world as well as the money of this country and the money of the Constitution.

There is another reason with me. First, because I regard it as simply a method of circulating gold and silver; and second, because I want to place it as far as we can in this act out of the power of money holders and bondholders to get advantage by discriminations against the currency of the United States. We have had enough of that, commencing with the legislation of 1869 and coming all the way down until the present time of discriminations in different sorts of currency of the United States. It seems to me that no one can be harmed, while all may to some extent be benefited, and while the harmful influence of attempting discriminations may be avoided, it is best to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his motion to indefinitely postpone the amendment?

Mr. BLAIR. There are four lines I desire to read in the extract. I ask unanimous consent to read them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion to indefinitely postpone?

Mr. BLAIR. I will withdraw the motion, but I ask unanimous consent to read four lines that I omitted in the extract with reference to the Bank of Amsterdam. ["Consent!" "Consent!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to read this:

In 1790 it was discovered that a large portion of the famous deposit had disappeared fifty years before, and that a gradual diminution had been taking place during that period, until the actual quantity remaining was small indeed. The amount withdrawn had been lent to the East India Company, the provinces of Holland, and the city of Amsterdam, none of which were in a condition to make instant restitution.

Then it goes on to give more matter of the kind and to speak of the failure of the bank. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That the certificates provided for in this act shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a lawful tender for the payment of all debts, public and private.

Mr. PLUMB. That ought to be section 4 of the bill in place of section 5. It ought to come before section 6, which contains the provision in regard to the deposits for the redemption of national circulation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be properly placed and numbered.

Mr. EUSTIS. I offer the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado: After the words "that the certificates provided for in this act," I move to insert "and all silver certificates already issued;" so that there will be no discrimination between silver certificates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the second line of the proposed amendment, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert "and all silver certificates already issued;" so as to read:

That the certificates provided for in this act and all silver certificates already issued shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a lawful tender for the payment of all debts, public and private.

Mr. EUSTIS. Insert, after the words "all silver," the words "and gold;" so as to read, "silver and gold certificates."

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will permit me, the language of the amendment is that the coin certificates provided for in this act—"certificates." Then, if he should add after the word "act," "and all other certificates heretofore issued under any other act," that would provide for all the certificates based upon coin.

Mr. EUSTIS. "All gold and silver certificates" includes everything. I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw my suggestion, in view of what the Senator from Louisiana has stated.

Mr. TELLER. I will accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado accepts the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana and so modifies his amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to modify it further by using the word "legal" instead of "lawful;" so as to read "legal tender."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to modify the amendment so as to read:

That the certificates provided for in this act and all silver and gold certificates already issued shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private.

Mr. CALL. I have been and I am in favor of the unlimited coinage of the precious metals, and I am also in favor of a liberal currency. I have no fear of the expansion of the currency, and when you make a legal tender of all kinds of certificates you guaranty the fidelity of the depository and the officers of the Government who have charge of them, and there is no part of the Constitution of the United States, no part of the economy of business of any kind that will make an obligation of an officer, which he has failed to perform, the satisfaction of a contract; and in that point of view it occurs to me that while it is entirely unnecessary to the equal value of gold and silver upon the most expanded basis that it is unnecessary to introduce this new feature into the bill making a certificate a profession, a statement that the value has been deposited, a satisfaction of an obligation to be performed.

For that reason I regret that this feature is brought into this bill. The States in my opinion alone have the power, whatever may have been the decision of the Supreme Court, to prescribe what shall be a legal tender between citizens of the State where the law is made, and there are many persons who entertain this opinion who are advocates of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. For that reason I am sorry that this feature is brought into the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] as modified.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. Has he voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. GRAY. Unless some Senator knows to the contrary I shall assume that he would vote "nay" and take the liberty of so voting myself.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Illinois, I understand, would vote for the amendment.

Mr. GRAY. I withhold my vote, then.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], or I should vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I am informed he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. On this question I resume my pair with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allen,	Dolph,	Moody,	Stewart,
Bate,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Teller,
Berry,	George,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Butler,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Vest,

Casey,	Hampton,	Pettigrew,	Vance,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pierce,	Wilson of Iowa,
Davis,	Higgins,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to insert as a new section, to come in immediately after the section just adopted:

SEC. 5. The owners of bullion deposited for coinage shall have the option to receive coin or its equivalent in the certificates provided for in this act, and such bullion shall be subsequently coined.

That is to cover the contingency that the Treasury Department may not at the time of the presentation be in condition to coin it on account of lack of proper facilities. Bullion therefore may be taken in and the coinage occur at a subsequent period, at the convenience of the officers of the Mint and of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer the following, to come in at the end of section 6:

And hereafter no funds available for the payment of the public debt, including such as are kept for the redemption of the United States notes, and excluding such as are held for the redemption of gold certificates and silver certificates, shall be retained as a reserve in the Treasury exceeding $50,000,000; and the $100,000,000 in gold now held in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes shall be available for the payment of any demands on the Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the proposition in that amendment does not logically belong to this bill, and I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. TELLER and others (to Mr. REAGAN). Withdraw the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. In deference to the opinion of friends I will withdraw the amendment, though I do so against my conviction of right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the bill as it now stands may be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill as it now stands amended will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the date and passage of this act the unit of value in the United States shall be the dollar, and the same may be coined of 412½ grains of standard silver, or of 25.8 grains of standard gold; and the said coins shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private. That hereafter any owner of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint of the United States to be formed into standard dollars or bars for his benefit and without charge; but it shall be lawful to refuse any deposit of less value than $100, or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of section 3 of "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which became a law February 28, 1878, are hereby made applicable to the coinage in this act provided for.

SEC. 3. That the certificates provided for in the second section of this act shall be of denominations of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars, and such certificates shall be redeemable in coin of standard value. A sufficient sum to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The provision in section 1 of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month of such bullion, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That the certificates provided for in this act and all silver and gold certificates already issued shall be receivable for all taxes and dues to the United States of every description, and shall be a legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private.

SEC. 5. The owners of bullion deposited for coinage shall have the option to receive coin or its equivalent in the certificates provided for in this act, and such bullion shall be subsequently coined.

SEC. 6. That upon the passage of this act the balances standing with the Treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks, and all deposits thereafter received for like purpose, shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the Treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may come into his possession subject to redemption; and upon the certificate of the Comptroller of the Currency that such notes have been received by him and that they have been destroyed and that no new notes will be issued in their place, reimbursement of their amount shall be made to the Treasurer, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, from an appropriation hereby created, to be known as "national bank notes, redemption account," but the provisions of this act shall not apply to the deposits received under section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, requiring every national bank to keep in lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of its circulating notes; and the balance remaining of the deposits so covered shall, at the close of each month, be reported on the monthly public-debt statement as debt of the United States bearing no interest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FAULKNER], who is necessarily absent to-day, is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). On this vote a pair has been arranged between the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] and the absent Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. So I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN]. We have arranged to transfer those pairs, so that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] will stand paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and that will allow the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. MOODY (when Mr. PETTIGREW's name was called). I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] on this question. If my colleague were present, he would have voted "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], and vote "nay." That will enable the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to vote.

Mr. PASCO. Under that arrangement, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Bate,	Coke,	Hearst,	Moody,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Morgan,
Blodgett,	Daniel,	Jones of Arkansas,	Paddock,
Butler,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Pasco,

Blackburn,	Dolph,	Higgins,	Wilson of Iowa,
Brown,	Farwell,	McMillan,
Carlisle,	Faulkner,	Pettigrew,
Davis,	Gibson,	Quay,

So the amendments made in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend the bill by adding a new section, as follows:

No gold or silver bullion shall be received by the Treasury Department under this act except such as shall be shown to be the product of mines within the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I observe my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] on this question. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 42, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—42.

Allen,	Daniel,	Mitchell,	Squire,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass on which the yeas and nays are demanded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. FAULKNER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FAULKNER] is paired, as I have already announced, with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). If the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], with whom I am paired, were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when Mr. McMILLAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McMILLAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], who is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], being present, we agreed to transfer pairs, so the pair stands between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], which leaves us privileged to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). Under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], I am privileged to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. WILSON], being absent on account of illness, is paired on this question with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. If my colleague were present, he would vote in the negative.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—42.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the free coinage of gold and silver bullion, and for other purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the title will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3052) for the relief of the Michigan Military Academy.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 3982) granting to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company power to sell and convey to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company all the railway, property, rights, and franchises of the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway Company in the Territory of Oklahoma and in the Indian Territory;

A bill (H. R. 75) to fix the regular terms of the circuit and district courts for the southern district of Alabama;

A bill (H. R. 1404) granting a pension to Mary Ann Lang;

A bill (H. R. 1884) granting a pension to George F. White;

A bill (H. R. 2424) granting a pension to Mary W. Smalley;

A bill (H. R. 4036) for the relief of Christian Kunzie;

A bill (H. R. 4967) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Reed;

A bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Amanda J. Delap;

A bill (H. R. 6280) granting a pension to Lawrence Dougherty;

A bill (H. R. 6601) granting a pension to Archibald F. Coon;

A bill (H. R. 6831) for the relief of Norman Cleveland;

A bill (H. R. 6913) granting a pension to Alexander G. Davis;

A bill (H. R. 7529) granting a pension to Belle Morrison, of Dillsborough, Ind.;

A bill (H. R. 7824) granting a pension to Mary F. Cochran;

A bill (H. R. 7856) granting the right of way to the Duluth and Manitoba Railroad Company across the Fort Pembina reservation, in North Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 7958) granting a pension to Christopher C. Funk;

A bill (H. R. 8152) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891;

A bill (H. R. 8560) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson;

A bill (H. R. 8910) granting an increase of pension to Clinton Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 9359) to increase the pension of B. F. Hilliker;

A bill (H. R. 10906) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions and for the expenses of the Eleventh Census for the fiscal year 1890, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 37) providing for donation of certain personal property of United States to South Dakota and North Dakota.

AMENDMENT TO BILL.

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF WYOMING.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask the Senator from Connecticut to informally lay aside this bill that I may call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 18, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 17, 1890.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALEXANDRIA, LA.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I desire to call up for consideration a conference report, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 401) "to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all of the amendment and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Alexandria and State of Louisiana, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

"Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

"Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

"If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by, or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected. The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

"No money shall be used for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Louisiana shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate as to the title, and agree to the same.

HERMAN LEHLBACH,
DANIEL KERR,
JO ABBOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.
R. L. GIBSON,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa (interrupting the reading of the report). Mr. Speaker, the substitute agreed upon by the committee of conference is in the usual form of bills of this character coming from the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the formal part of the report be omitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Under the agreement reached by the conferees the appropriation in this case is reduced from $75,000, as proposed in the Senate amendment, to $60,000, being an increase of $10,000 over the amount originally proposed by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

The effect of the report is to make the limit of cost $60,000 instead of the amount proposed by the House, $50,000, and that proposed by the Senate, $75,000; also to make the bill conform to the usual form adopted by the two Houses.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

MICHIGAN MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. BREWER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3052) for the relief of the Michigan Military Academy. I desire to state that a bill precisely like this has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to relieve the Michigan Military Academy at Orchard Lake, Mich., from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said college under its bonds dated November 26, 1877, March 13, 1878, February 1, 1886, and December 15, 1888, as was destroyed by fire on April 21, 1889.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BREWER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the House bill relating to the same subject as the Senate bill just passed will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

JOHN HOLLINS M'BLAIR.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1074) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas John Hollins McBlair, late a first lieutenant in the Fifteenth United States Infantry, was, by order of the President dated October 6, 1863, wholly retired from the service, and was afterwards, on April 8, 1864, ordered by the President to be retired for disability incident to the service and to be placed upon the retired-list, and has ever since been borne upon such retired-list, up to November 12, 1884, and has been regularly paid as such retired officer up to April 30, 1884, and the Court Claims has recently decided that the order of the President of April 8, 1864, attempting to revoke the order of October 6, 1863, wholly retiring him, and to restore him to the retired-list, was not operative: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act only, and only so far as they affect John Hollins McBlair; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said John Hollins McBlair, late a first lieutenant in the Fifteenth United States Infantry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of first lieutenant in the Army of the United States in the infantry service, and to place him upon the retired-list of the Army as of the date of April 8, 1864, with the pay of his grade and rank from April 30, 1884, and with a full discharge from all liability for any sums paid to or received by him previously to said date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report ought to be read.

Mr. BLAND. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether a bill substantially the same as this was not passed by the last Congress and vetoed.

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, yes; it was vetoed under a mistake. This measure is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman let the report be read.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report but was interrupted by Mr. CANNON, who said: Mr. Speaker, this report seems to be quite long; I think we had better go on with our regular business.

Mr. SPINOLA. This will take only a few minutes.

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 10906) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions and for the expenses of the Eleventh Census for the fiscal year 1890, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bill/s.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. BURROWS in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee of the Whole rose last evening there was pending an appeal from the ruling of the Chair touching an amendment which will be recollected by members of the committee; and on that appeal my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] had been heard. I want to say that in my opinion, then and now, after the fullest examination, there is no doubt that the ruling of the Chair is correct, and that the proposed amendment does change existing law. As something was said about the practice of the present Public Printer and of the former Public Printer, I desire to say that this practice has been settled for many months, if not years—settled by the action of the former Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, and the decision of Mr. Durham, of Kentucky, then First Comptroller of the Treasury, the officer of last resort in reference to such matters. I ask the Clerk to read a letter of Mr. Durham addressed to Mr. Benedict, covering the whole ground.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1889.

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 12th instant, in which you state that Mr. H. T. Brian, foreman of printing in your office, holds a salaried position fixed by law; that for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888 the total amount appropriated for his salary was paid to him; that during all that time he was required to be present at his desk and employed in the interests of the public service; that you were compelled to deny him leaves of absence during that time, for which time of leave, if leave had been granted, he would have been paid from the appropriation made for his desk; that having been thus deprived of leave you have determined to grant him the annual leave due him for the years 1887 and 1888, under the provisions of law provided for in the "deficiency act" passed June 30, 1888, appropriating $25,000 to enable the Public Printer to comply with the law granting fifteen days' annual leave to the employees of the Government Printing Office for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888; and you then ask my opinion as to the correctness of such determination.

In answer I will say that I understand the purport of your letter to be that Mr. Brian was a regular employe of the Government Printing Office, with a fixed salary; that owing to the demands of business his services were required during the whole time, so that you could not allow him to take the usual leave of absence granted to employes, and to which he was entitled.

The first question is, was Mr. Brian entitled to the fifteen days' leave of absence in each year by reason of his being an annual salaried officer? I answer that the act to which you refer makes no distinction between those that are salaried and those who work by the day or by the piece, and that he was entitled to said leave. Second, you inquire whether or not you are authorized to pay him for performing service for the fifteen days in each year for which he was entitled to leave with pay.

I am of opinion, and have heretofore decided, that where an employe of the Government is entitled to what is called a holiday, but from some necessity in connection with his work is required to perform service on such day, that he is entitled to what might be termed double compensation; that is, to his regular pay per diem and also for a day by reason of his being compelled to perform service on that day. The analogy in the case that you present is therefore plain, in my opinion. Since you required Mr. Brian to work on those days during which he was entitled to leave, you can now pay him out of any money in your hands for the time that he was required to work while he was entitled to be absent with pay.

Respectfully yours,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

THOMAS E. BENEDICT, Esq.,
Public Printer.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana proposed to prohibit such payments as the letter just read indicates have been made by the proper officers of the Treasury Department. The Chair ruled the amendment out upon the ground that it would change existing law; and from that decision the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] appealed. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair allow me a single remark in regard to the letter just read?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have great respect for Mr. Durham and for his opinions generally; but in this particular case I think he is entirely mistaken. In my view the law never contemplated that any person should be paid for thirteen months' work in any one year. To say that Congress ever contemplated paying a man for thirteen months in one year is an absurdity. In my view, the letter just read does not throw any light on the subject.

In addition to this we have unquestionably a right to say that no portion of this money shall be paid to anybody we may name, irrespective of the fact whether the law fixes the salary or not.

Mr. OATES. I would like to suggest to my friend from Illinois another consideration in respect to this ruling. On examination of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana it will be observed that it extends not only to a prohibition on the part of the Public Printer from using any portion of this money, covered by certain paragraphs of the bill relating to laborers in the Public Printing Office, but by an amendment the words are interlined—

Or by this act.

So that the effect of the amendment as proposed goes to the extent that none of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any employé of the Government under the circumstances named.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the Government Printing Office.

Mr. OATES. In the Government Printing Office by the text of the amendment itself; but it goes further, and by the use of the words e have specified it goes to all appropriations covered by the bill. The two paragraphs under consideration to which the amendment applies relate to the Printing Office, and if the amendment was limited to the paragraphs in question the argument of the gentleman from Illinois would be applicable to the point; but it provides that no portion of the appropriations made by this act shall be paid to any such employé.

Now, suppose an employé takes his annual leave of absence as authorized by law and goes to some other Department or bureau and engages there as a day laborer for a specified compensation. He can not, if this amendment is adopted, be paid out of any appropriation which may be made by this bill, although it be for an entirely different purpose from that under consideration in this paragraph, and altogether different from anything whatever connected with the Government Printing Office. In that respect, therefore, if the amendment is adopted in its present form, it certainly changes existing law.

Mr. BYNUM. But this amendment provides for nothing and has no reference to anything except the employés of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. OATES. But you have embodied words in the amendment which makes it applicable not only to the paragraphs under consideration, but to all the appropriations carried by the act.

Mr. BYNUM. Yes; but the amendment itself limits this to the appropriation for the Government Printing Office.

Mr. OATES. I think the amendment is not quite susceptible of that construction, because many appropriations come under this act for employés in other Departments of the Government; and by the use of the words "or by this act" you make the amendment applicable to all of them.

Mr. BYNUM. It applies only to the Government Printing Office, however.

Mr. OATES. It would, in my opinion, apply to any employé in any Department of the Government who performed any work under the circumstances suggested, and who was paid out of the appropriations made by this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama this point: Is it not competent for this House to say that no money or no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any one without violating any law at all? We are not obliged to appropriate for any specific purpose. We are not obliged, for instance, to appropriate for your salary or for mine; and hence you can put into the appropriation bill a provision that no part of the money shall be paid to John Smith, for instance. That has been done heretofore. A certain diplomat had displeased the House, and the appropriation bill provided that no part of the money should be paid to him, mentioning him by name. No one doubted the right of the House to make the appropriation in that manner; and hence, on the same basis of reasoning, you can provide in this bill that no part of the money shall be used for a specific purpose, in the manner suggested by the amendment.

Mr. OATES. I admit that it is competent for Congress to direct in an appropriation bill how the money shall be expended—

Mr. SPRINGER. And to limit the appropriations.

Mr. OATES. But I think the amendment proposed goes beyond that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Library of Congress, $13,000.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] on yesterday said, while this bill was under discussion:

My hope, gentlemen, is that we will have a chance yet, before this Congress comes to an end, to vote for an educational bill.

I attempted to obtain permission at the time to ask him a question, but he was going so fast that he got clear beyond the point before I could do so. Now, what I wish to know of him is, what benefit does he expect to confer on those who desire the passage of such a measure, when the Senate stands with bloody hands fresh from the murder of just such a bill. I say "murder" because it was done with malice aforethought.

It was done deceitfully, because they have always heretofore pretended to be in favor of it. It was also highway robbery, done lucris causa because they desire and expect to apply the money that it would take to educate the poor children of this country, white and black, to the payment of a vastly increased pension-roll, and thus keep all the money in the North. What good will it do for this House to vote upon or even pass an educational bill, when the Senate stands ready to kill it?

I have been and am as earnest as any gentleman here to obtain consideration of a proper measure of this kind. But I state candidly to this House and to the country that there is no hope of any measure of the kind becoming a law when the party in power now are opposed to it and the President stands ready to veto it. No, the farmers must wait for the aid in educating their children. The South is not to have any portion of the "surplus." The educational bill must, with the bill for the repeal of the tobacco tax, now that the Republican party have the power to do and do quickly anything they wish, go to the wall.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting thirty days' annual leave to the employés of the Government Printing Office, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], as an excuse for the very large sums of money that have been appropriated by the present Congress, charged that a Democratic House in its failure to make the necessary appropriations was responsible for the many and heavy deficiencies which this Congress would have to provide for in order to meet the necessities of the different Departments of the Government.

Now, sir, we find that in the bill under consideration there is only appropriated for the Printing Office the sum of $2,298,000. The representatives of that office when before the Appropriations Committee, or subcommittee, who were preparing this bill, stated that unless an appropriation was made of $2,785,000 there would be a deficiency, and that this sum was just as little as the office could possibly get along with during the next fiscal year.

In response to this statement the Committee on Appropriations have only recommended an appropriation of $2,298,000, which shows, if the statement of the representatives of the Printing Office be correct, that there will be a deficiency of $487,000 in the Printing Office alone, a greater deficiency, by almost double, than has been incurred in the history of that office for the past six years. The appropriations for 1886 amounted to $2,250,000; the deficiency for that year was $231,500. The appropriation for 1887 was $2,095,000; the deficiency $85,000. The appropriation for 1888 was $2,122,000; the deficiency $113,000. The appropriation for 1889 was $2,272,000; the deficiency $187,000. The appropriation for 1890 was $2,218,000; the deficiency $420,000, so that with an appropriation amounting to $2,298,000 we are advised that there will be a deficiency of at least $487,000.

In regard to the appropriations for the Department of Justice, let us take the item of fees of witnesses. The representative of the Department of Justice came before the subcommittee who prepared this bill and urged an appropriation of $1,200,000 as the necessary amount for the payment of the fees of witnesses. This bill only carries for that purpose $900,000, so that the House may confidently expect a deficiency in the matter of fees of witnesses of $300,000. As to the item for support of prisoners, we were told by the representative of the Department that $490,000 would be absolutely necessary, and yet this bill provides only $375,000, which will entail a deficiency of $125,000 for the support of prisoners, and so with regard to other items for the Department of Justice. Now, it occurs to me that, in view of these facts (and I state them from the record and upon the authority of the representatives of the Printing Office and of the Department of Justice), the complaint of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] as to insufficient appropriations may be very properly urged against himself and his associates, and that this bill, if it would prevent a deficiency, ought to carry more than a million dollars additional.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word upon that point. It is true that for a number of years there has been a deficiency to be appropriated for for the Public Printer—a deficiency amounting to $231,000 in 1886, $85,000 in 1887, $113,000 in 1888, $187,000 in 1889, and $420,000 in 1890. I think it entirely probable that there will be a deficiency also required for the Public Printer for the coming fiscal year. I will say, however, that it depends entirely upon the amount of printing that Congress orders. If you can tell me how much printing Congress is going to order, then I can tell you how much the deficiency will be.

Mr. PETERS. And it will depend something on the length of the session.

Mr. CANNON. But I want to say that the practice has grown up under our Democratic friends of appropriating so as to create a deficiency in the Public Printing Office. That is to say (and perhaps properly enough), they have deemed it to be good policy to keep the original appropriation as low as practicable, hoping thereby to influence the action of Congress in ordering printing, and also to hold down the Public Printing Office to the greatest possible economy.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman believe that the expenditure of the Printing Office would be less if we should give the amount provided in this bill—$2,298,000—instead of giving the amount which its representative before the committee declared to be the very lowest amount it could possibly get along with and not have a deficiency—that is, $2,785,000?

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me it is wise to make the appropriation for the coming fiscal year as it has been made under the lead of my friend and the late chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Randall, for a half dozen years back.

Mr. SAYERS. Then the gentleman does not agree with his colleague, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], in the charge which he brought against a Democratic House?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not agree with myself, often, especially if I am talking about two different things.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not ask the gentleman if he disagrees with himself, but if he disagrees with the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know what the gentleman from Maryland said.

Mr. DUNNELL. Nor what he thinks.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, it would be impossible to frame a bill which would agree with what they both think.

Mr. CANNON. But I think this is one of the few cases where the precedent set by our friends upon the other side might as well be followed. It seems to me it is possibly in the line of economical administration.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does my friend think it wise to make such an appropriation as he knows will lead to a deficiency, even though it be following the bright example of the Democratic party?

Mr. CANNON. I think not. But I would say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], as I said at the commencement of my remarks, which he might have heard if he had been listening to me, that whether there will be a deficiency next year under the appropriation we recommend for the Public Printing Office depends purely upon the action of the House and Senate, and I would rather make the appropriation as we have recommended it here, hoping thereby to put a little bit of restraint upon the House and Senate, than to pour in money on the supposition of somebody as to the amount of printing that the Senate and House might order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. Just one moment. I would like to have the committee understand that I do not disagree with my friend from Illinois as to the amount of this appropriation. The fault I find is with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], who blames a Democratic House for making an appropriation equally small. He does not carry fair.

Mr. CANNON. I did not hear the gentleman from Maryland, and do not know what he said.

Mr. MILLIKEN. In other words, I understand my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] wants the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to vindicate the Democratic party, and I do not think he can do it.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not find any fault with the gentleman from Illinois. The fault I find is with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], who blames a Democratic House for making small appropriations, creating deficiencies, when the very committee of which he is a prominent and influential member does the very same thing.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say just one word in reply to that. There may be a deficiency in the Public Printing Office. I do not know. If Congress is as economical as it ought to be, and does not order any more printing than it ought to, there will not be one cent of deficiency. I want to say that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me—

Mr. CANNON. Hold on a minute. I want to say just one other thing. There has been a good deal of talk about deficiencies. I will prophesy, and stake my reputation upon the prophecy, that next year we will not have deficiencies to the extent of $35,000,000, as we have this year.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will not enter into the field of prophecy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], but I will venture the assertion that, leaving out the question of pensions, the expenditures of the Fifty-first Congress will be largely greater than the expenditures of the Fiftieth Congress, as evidenced by the appropriation bills.

Mr. DOCKERY. I must also decline to enter the domain of prophecy with the gentleman from Illinois, as in a contest of that sort the House will readily see that I would be at a disadvantage. I have myself some reputation as a prophet. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. And besides the reputation of my friend, he has a capacity in that line.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply very briefly to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], who on yesterday indulged in some criticisms of the last Administration in respect to deficiencies. I wish to put it in the RECORD, that we may preserve for the Democratic side the truth of history—which is about all we can do under the present rules of the House—

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would not want to do that if I were you.

Mr. DOCKERY. I shall confine my statement to the deficiencies that will occur under the legislative and sundry civil bills because of the failure of the Appropriations Committee to provide in full for the necessities of the public service.

There will be deficiencies during the ensuing fiscal year in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments for the pay of store-keepers and gaugers, amounting to at least $110,000; for mints and assay offices, $70,500; for the contingent expenses of the House, $5,000, and for the incidental expenses of the House, $1,600, making a total deficiency in that bill of $187,100.

Mr. PETERS. You prophesy that?

Mr. DOCKERY. I state the facts. There is nothing whatever problematic in the statement, because the officers charged with the control of these various interests have asked Congress to appropriate the amounts I have recited, and stated that these amounts will be necessary to carry on their various departments. I do not think that they have overestimated the necessities of the service. This is frequently done, but as to these items there was no controversy among the members of the subcommittee. They all conceded the correctness of the estimates.

Again, Mr. Chairman, in addition to these deficiencies there will be on the sundry civil bill a deficiency of $487,000 for public printing; a deficiency for the expenditures of the Department of Justice—for fees of jurors, $65,000; for fees of witnesses, $300,000; for pay of bailiffs and carriers, $35,000; for fees of clerks, $45,000; for fees of marshals and their deputies, $90,000; for fees of United States attorneys, $25,000; for the support of United States prisoners, $115,000. So that the entire deficiency in this bill, based upon the expenditures of last year and the estimates of the Department officials, will be $1,162,000.

Not only this, Mr. Chairman, but additional to the item of $1,092,000 concealed in the indefinite clauses discussed yesterday, this bill conceals—and I say it in no offensive sense, because it is a very proper expenditure—$188,862.17 of the unexpended balance for the prevention of epidemic diseases. This is done by a reappropriation in general terms, and therefore the amount does not appear in the aggregate total of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I will now briefly recapitulate. During the next fiscal year Congress will have to appropriate on account of deficiencies for legislative expenses $187,100; on account of sundry civil expenses not less than $1,162,000; whilst there is concealed in the back-pay and bounty clauses $1,092,000, and $188,862.17 in the reappropriation of the fund for the prevention of the spread of epidemic diseases. So that, Mr. Chairman, I may summarize the situation in the statement that within the ensuing twelve months deficiencies amounting to at least $1,349,100 will have to be provided for because of underappropriations in these two great appropriation bills, and when to this is added the aggregate of the concealed expenditures, $1,280,862.17, it exhibits a grand total of $2,629,962.17 of insufficient and concealed appropriation.

I have only referred to the legislative and sundry civil bills because I have assisted in their preparation. It may be that the criticism I make as to these bills is also applicable to others, but I shall not at this time broaden the field of discussion.

My only purpose is to advise the House that these two great appropriation bills carry $1,280,862.17 more than appears in their aggregate footings, whilst at the same time they fail to provide for the essential needs of the Government to the extent of $1,349,100, an amount that must be appropriated in the near future and will be very soon after the November elections.

Mr. CANNON. One word in reply. At the usual time, after these bills have been finally enacted, in pursuance of a long-established custom, if the House of Representatives will give me a little time, I will give a statement of the amount of appropriations, covering all these and other items, and I have no doubt my friends upon the other side, at the same time, will do the same thing.

Mr. SAYERS. We will try to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, this by way of further reply. My friend is not quite fair in his criticisms. Take, for instance, the item for the prevention of epidemic diseases—$188,000. That amount is reappropriated; but it has always been done that way, and it was not necessary to be done at all, because it is a continuing appropriation, and was only put in out of abundant caution, as my friend knows, to avoid criticism, as has been done heretofore.

Now, then, coming back to deficiencies in the Department of Justice, we are now appropriating that one million and odd dollars that was failed to be appropriated by the last Congress; that we have got to appropriate as a deficiency for the present fiscal year.

Mr. DOCKERY. And this bill fails to carry by $1,162,000 all that it ought to carry, if it is thought wise to appropriate at this time the full amount that will be expended.

Mr. CANNON. I think not; but that will be demonstrated later on.
Mr. DOCKERY. I am correct in this statement, Mr. Chairman; but, understand me, I do not criticise some of the deficiencies in the Department of Justice, but simply put the facts in the record that the House may be advised of the real status of these appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON. But the trouble with the gentleman's position is that we have given every cent for the Department of Justice that they have estimated for, and I submit to my friend that while we may indulge in crimination and recrimination about this matter, the first thing we know we shall not only have our hearers confused about it, but we shall get the matter mixed up on the record.

Mr. SAYERS. But the gentleman has not given the Department of Justice every dollar it has asked for. The gentleman must remember that there were representatives of the Department before the committee who said that the estimates were entirely too small in several particulars.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I would rather have the judgment of the head of the Department.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will simply say, Mr. Chairman, that it was not the purpose of the minority to make any reference whatever to the deficiencies in the Department of Justice, and we would not have done so but for the fact that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] on yesterday sharply criticised the deficiencies of the last Administration. We have made an aggressively defensive attack.

Mr. BYNUM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after line 15, page 96, the following:

"Provided, That no money appropriated by this paragraph shall be paid to any person employed in the Public Printing Office for or during any time such employé is on leave of absence with pay, under existing law, in excess of the pay allowed during such leave of absence; nor shall any such person receive pay for leave of absence during the time such person may be at work and receive pay therefor; except in cases where the employé of the Government Printing Office is entitled to leave of absence, but, from some necessity in connection with his work, is compelled to perform service during the time he is entitled to such leave."

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I will say upon the point of order that I have attempted to draught this amendment in exact accordance with the decision of the Comptroller, and have used the exact terms employed by him in making that decision, and I do not think the amendment as now offered is objectionable under the rule. I desire to call attention to another point. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] stated yesterday that the representatives of the department who appeared before the Committee on Labor stated—

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to insist upon my point of order.

Mr. BYNUM. I understand that the point of order is reserved. Pending the point of order I wish to occupy a few moments. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] on yesterday stated that it was impossible to enforce the eight-hour law in the piece divisions of the Government Printing Office. I have before me a resolution adopted by the Columbia Typographical Union in 1886, calling upon Congress to enforce the eight-hour law. I have also a statement of members of that union employed in the Government Printing Office who appeared before the Committee on Labor and made complaint of the non-enforcement of the eight-hour law. Mr. Kennedy, who is now the president of the union, said:

You place upon the statute-books an eight-hour law so plain, so simple, that a child might interpret it as its authors intended it should be interpreted, and yet the executive officers of the Government flagrantly violate the law by compelling men to work more than eight hours without even giving them extra compensation. Then there is the milder form of violation of compelling men to work more than eight hours with pay for the time.

Considerable discussion followed as to whether it would not be a hardship to restrict the Government printer to eight hours' work in the office, and Mr. Kennedy held that it would be no hardship to restrict the Government printer, who worked mainly by the piece, to eight hours' work.

In addition to that I have the resolution passed by the same typographical union on the 16th of February, 1889, in favor of the enforcement of the eight-hour law.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Who was the Public Printer in February, 1889?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Benedict.

Mr. BYNUM. I find that instead of this being, as I stated, a resolution calling for the enforcement of the law, it is an extract from the Craftsman, the official organ of the International Typographical Union, congratulating Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, and the then Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, on the enforcement of the law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman say that that resolution was passed in February, 1889?

Mr. BYNUM. The article is dated February 16, 1889.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The resolution passed in February, 1889, was a demand by Columbia Typographical Union upon Mr. Benedict to carry out the eight-hour law.

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman can present his view of the matter in his own time. I will read the article, so that every one can see just what it is.

Mr. FARQUHAR. But there was a resolution passed before that calling for the enforcement of the law. What about that?

Mr. BYNUM. I am not talking about the one that was passed before this. There was a resolution passed in 1886 calling upon Congress to enforce the eight-hour law in the Government Printing Office, but this is an article from the official organ in 1889 congratulating the union and the Public Printer upon the enforcement of the eight-hour law in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Because in the same month—

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman should occupy his own time.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let this be explained now. In the same month the Columbia Typographical Union demanded of Mr. Benedict that he enforce the eight-hour law. He was not congratulated upon its enforcement; they demanded it of him.

Mr. BYNUM. I say to the gentleman that I was mistaken in saying that what I had was a resolution; it is an editorial from the Craftsman, the then official organ of the International Typographical Union, and appeared after the date of February 16, 1889, and is as follows:

[From the official paper of the International Typographical Union.]

EIGHT HOURS ENOUGH.

We congratulate Columbia Union, No. 101, upon the stand it has taken regarding the enforcement of the eight-hour law at the Government Printing Office. We congratulate the Public Printer upon the readiness with which he has complied with this requirement. We do not congratulate those of the members who, by their action or at least by their loud protests, have shown that, while they are ostensibly in favor of the eight-hour law, they are opposed to its enforcement in their individual cases. With the introduction of modern methods and modern machinery the necessity for long hours of labor has passed away. The large number of men involuntarily idle in our branch of industry as well as in all others, imperatively points out the vital necessity of curtailing the hours of toil. The workman who opposes the tendency to shorten the working day harms his chance for steady work and living wages. And yet there are men who complain when they are denied the opportunity to work more than eight hours per day. All we have to say is that they seem to be struck with blindness. The danger to steady employment, to fair wages, is the present large contingent of idle men. The true way to remove this danger is to agitate and to bring about a shorter working day. This done, the demand for labor will draft into service the many who are idle. And with the employment of those who have been only too glad to work, at almost any price, will come better wages for all. Fellow-craftsmen, our salvation lies in the success of the effort to establish a shorter working day. Let us, as intelligent men, do all we can to help, and not to hinder, its success.

Now, the gentleman says that this law can not be enforced in those branches of the office where piecework is done. I hold in my hand a list—

Mr. CANNON. I make this point of order: That this is an appropriation bill; that legislation is not in order upon it, and that gentlemen who have failed to perform their duties as members of committees and to present their matters in a proper way can not come in here and unload, out of order, their advertisements on this bill.

Mr. BYNUM. Well, I do not know that anybody "advertises" any more than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not "advertise" out of order.

Mr. BYNUM. You "advertise" out of order as much as any other person does.

We are now engaged in considering an appropriation for the Government Printing Office. I desire to say (and this is all I shall have to say on the question) that I have in my hand a list of men employed and of the hours of labor given to them by reason of the enforcement of the eight-hour law in one division of that office. There were given to outside employes 13,696 hours of labor, amounting to $6,848, which the superintendent of that division was enabled to give to these printers who were out of employment, by reason of the enforcement of the eight-hour law in that special division under Mr. Benedict.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, I should be permitted, of course, to say one or two words about this matter. I am just as much in favor of the enforcement of the eight-hour law in the Government Printing Office as in any other department. The law should be enforced and appropriations should be made with a view to its enforcement, just as is done with regard to the letter-carrier service. Although we have put through resolutions here for the enforcement of this law in the Government Printing Office, it should be known to the House that there are difficulties in connection with its enforcement there. The foremen of all the departments of that office will tell you this. There is only one remedy; and if it were in order to move that remedy now I would move to amend this bill by restoring the wages of 1877 and stopping the passage through this House of deficiency appropriations for the Government Printing Office. But I know such a proposition would not be in order and that a point of order would be made against it; so it must wait its appropriate time before it can be presented.

As I have said, the difficulties which must be encountered by the Public Printer in undertaking to carry on piecework under the eight-hour system are palpable. This is a practical question; it does not depend on any theory, or upon the spirit or letter of the law. For instance, take rule and figure work. Suppose a man works his eight hours upon a table, does the casting up of its columns, gets out the rules, etc., and is then succeeded by another man who has done none of this preliminary work and has probably an obscure idea about it. Or suppose the man who first goes on for eight hours has a certain quantity of distribution to be done. Now, you can not divide the distribution of "sorts" in any printing office between different men unless they are hired by the week or the hour. A similar remark applies in regard to the subsequent correction of matter. Who shall decide the equities here involved?

Under this proposed bill for the restoration of wages all the employes in that office as nearly as possible would work by the hour. Of course the work on the RECORD must be an exception; that is and always will be piecework. This system would add a little to the cost, but it would place all the printers in that office on an equality. When such a bill has been passed no Public Printer will have any reason to say that he can not carry out the eight-hour law.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to have read resolutions on this subject adopted by the International Typographical Union at Atlanta on the 11th of the present month. In these resolutions that great body of men, representing the skilled printers of the United States and Canada, give their views of the eight-hour system and also of the eight-hour bill which has been reported from the Committee on Labor of this House and is now on the Calendar. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will give attention to these resolutions, because they express the view of practical men from every section of the United States and Canada as to how the eight-hour system can be applied in the Government Printing Office or even in private establishments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the eight-hour law now upon the statute-books of the United States is totally inadequate to carry out the objects for which it was enacted, being vague and indefinite as to whether it is a violation of either the spirit or the letter of the law to work employes of the Government more than eight hours per day when they are paid overtime, its terms being not clearly applicable to the contract work of the Government, and there being no penalties prescribed for violations of the law; and

Whereas the measure known as the Wade eight-hour bill, now pending on the Calendar of the House of Representatives, seeks to remedy all the defects of the old law: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the International Typographical Union hereby indorses the Wade eight-hour bill and respectfully urges the Senate and House of Representatives to speedily enact the same into law.

Resolved further, That the secretary-treasurer is directed to communicate this action to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and to Chairman WADE, of the Labor Committee of the House.

Adopted unanimously.

Mr. SPRINGER. In order to make response to what has just been read, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I desire to call attention to the fact that those resolutions in substance declare that the eight-hour law is not effective because it does not provide a penalty compelling public officers to observe it. These resolutions do not sustain the gentleman in his assertion that piecework can not be done under the eight-hour law or that the eight-hour law can not be administered in the Government Printing Office. The resolutions declare simply that the law does not provide a proper penalty to compel its observance, and that if the law be formulated in the manner proposed in the Wade eight-hour bill it can be effectively administered. Now, what does the Wade eight-hour bill provide? It does not provide a penalty at all, I believe; but it prescribes the manner in which the law shall be observed. Under the Wade eight-hour bill, reported by the committee of which the gentleman from New York is a member, the eight-hour law will be observed in the Government Printing Office as to piecework and contract work as well as in regard to the work of those receiving annual salaries. So that it is the fault of the law, and not the inability of the system to be covered by the law, of which complaint should be made.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I will simply state in response to what the gentleman has said, that the Wade bill embodies in it certain conditions that do not exist in the original eight-hour law, and among them are just the exceptions that the gentleman is now arguing upon.

Now I grant you that the Wade bill, as it stands on the Calendar, has not the penalty clause in it, but I am willing, and to get that bill reported out of the committee I was willing, to allow that section to be stricken from the bill. But I am just as ready to move that section as an amendment to this bill, and if they will enforce the eight-hour law I will move that as an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Have you the Wade bill?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have a copy of it here.

Mr. SPRINGER. Send it up and let us have it read, and offered as an amendment to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in his judgment the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask consent, Mr. Chairman, to be permitted to incorporate the resolutions to which I have referred in my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman will have leave to do so.

There was no objection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the gentleman would publish the resolutions of the Columbia Union I think it would cover the whole ground better.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That no employé to whom shall be granted leave of absence with pay shall be employed by the Public Printer during the term of such annual leave of absence.

Mr. CANNON. Against that I make the point of order.

Mr. CHEADLE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let the point be reserved.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to hearing the gentleman, but I must make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CHEADLE. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman in charge of this bill, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, would not have made the point of order against a proposition so fair, so just, and so reasonable as this.

What is the purport of the amendment? It is this, that if an employé shall ask for and receive his annual leave of absence, with pay, that during the term of the annual leave of absence he shall not be employed by the Public Printer and receive wages in addition to that allowed him while on leave. I undertake to say that there can not be found any law that will authorize or justify any employé of the Government, any officer or official of the Government, in receiving two salaries for a definite term, whether that term be thirty days or more during the year.

Mr. CANNON. Now, will the gentleman allow me just there?

Mr. CHEADLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. This amendment may be eminently just and proper. I have nothing to say against that. I am not arguing the question on its merits. But under the rules of the House, this being an appropriation bill, I conceive that it is not in order to offer such an amendment; and it seems to me that the clean way and the only safe way to legislate touching this and other important matters, is for the Committee on Labor and the appropriate committee of the House to perform its functions and duties and consider this business in order, instead of trying to unload such matters, piling them up upon this bill and upon the other appropriation bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations, and which subjects the committee has had no opportunity to investigate.

Mr. CHEADLE. With all due respect to the distinguished chairman of the committee, I must dissent from his conclusion.

Mr. CANNON. Why?

Mr. CHEADLE. In the first place it is not obligatory for a leave of absence to be granted. It is a right that does not exist unless the person to whom the leave shall be granted asks for and receives it. If he does not take the leave of absence he must be present, and if present, under existing law, he is present and employed at a fixed and stated rate of compensation, either by the hour, by the day, or by the thousand ems, as the condition of his employment may fix the compensation, and for that reason it does seem to me the amendment is in order, and that the objection urged by the gentleman will not lie against it, because it does not propose to change existing law, but proposes only this: That in the event any employé of the Public Printer—and it ought to apply to every other Department of the Government—shall ask for and obtain leave of absence with pay, that during the time of that annual leave of absence he shall not be employed by the Government and receive other compensation therefor. I undertake to say that there can not be found upon our statute-books a line, or a letter, or a word, or a sentence of law that will be changed by this amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana, who is hurt or damaged by this if a man gets paid for thirteen months and works but twelve months?

Mr. CHEADLE. The only theory on which you can predicate the right to pay a man his salary during the time he is on leave of absence is that by his continual employment in the service of the Government it becomes necessary that he shall have recreation and rest. That is the only reason you can predicate your right to pay a man on leave of absence at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But what I want to get at is embodied in the question I propounded. Now, we concede the principle of giving twelve months' pay for eleven months' work. It is not disputed that we have the right to do that. I can not see, therefore, where the Government is injured in any way by compensating a man for thirteen months when he works but twelve. We are already operating under the same principle, and it is better for the Government—the Government makes money, or rather it loses less money—when it pays thirteen months' pay for twelve months' services, than when it pays twelve months' pay for eleven months' services. I ask the gentleman, then, who is hurt or damaged by this arrangement?

Mr. CHEADLE. I thought I had already answered the gentleman distinctly and clearly. There can be no other reason given for the granting of leaves of absence with pay unless it be the fact that by the continued confinement of the employé at his labor it becomes absolutely necessary, in order that the Government may receive a valuable consideration for the money it pays for his services, that he shall have a limited period of rest and recreation. The Government grants the leave for its own benefit, and upon the theory that the leave granted will restore the employé to the Government in a condition to perform better service. I do not know that any employé is paid two salaries except from statements made during this debate. I know the Public Printer is honest, competent, and impartial. I do not doubt that he is enforcing existing laws, but my judgment tells me that this amendment ought to be made. It will relieve the Printer from any responsibility in construing the law. It will be directory, and easily complied with by the Public Printer.

Mr. TURNER, of New York, and Mr. KERR, of Iowa, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPRINGER. Strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. The only justification of the eight-hour law is that it is a law looking to the improvement of the condition of the laboring men. Its object is to secure a greater number of hours for recreation, more time for study and improvement, and at the same time incidentally to benefit the laboring masses by giving to other men opportunities of employment; and I believe that every laboring man who seeks to labor over eight hours is as much guilty of violating the spirit of the eight-hour law as the man who employs him—in fact, much more so. The theory on which the employé is granted the one month's leave of absence is, as my colleague has stated, that the man shall not be continually subjected to this strain, mental and physical, but that he may have time for recreation and improvement, so that when the month's leave of absence is over he will be in a better condition to perform his duties. Therefore the leave of absence is granted, not alone in the interest of the employé, but in the interest of the Government.

Now, I want to say a word in regard to another feature of the bill which has been passed. I hope I will be excused for speaking of it. I do not think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] can claim that there is any concealment in this bill in the sections in regard to the amount of money appropriated for the payment of bounties. The fact is, there is no concealment. If the gentleman will only figure out the exact amount that will be necessary to pay these old claims against the Government that were not fully paid when they were contracted by the Government, and if he will inform the country just how large those claims are, there will be no difficulty in arriving at the amount. The fact is, the Government ever since 1866 has owed the men who were in its employment every dollar that is provided for in this bill, and until all those claims are passed upon and adjudicated it will be impossible to tell the exact amount. The only reason that this specific amount is not provided for in this bill is because we do not know the exact amount that will be required until the next session of Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out lines 12, 13, 14, and 15 of the bill, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moves to strike out the following paragraph, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk reads as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting thirty days' annual leave to the employés of the Government Printing Office, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, if it is the avowed policy of Congress to use this appropriation to increase the salaries of the persons employed in the service of the Government, then it ought to be repealed, because it was not given for that purpose. I was a member of the Committee on Printing during one or two Congresses when the printers were not entitled to this leave, and when they were appealing to Congress for this relief, and the ground upon which they asked this pay during leave of absence was that the service in the Printing Office was of such a nature, so taxing upon their physical and their mental energies, that their health required they should have a leave of absence for thirty days for recreation, and that during the eleven months remaining in which they worked for the Government they could perform more services to the Government than they could in the whole twelve months if required to worked continuously. It was in answer to this appeal that Congress granted this leave-of-absence pay, and I venture to say that no gentleman upon either side of this House was induced to vote for that law upon the idea that he was giving the employés in the Printing Office thirteen months' pay for twelve months' labor. That was not the argument. If that had been the reason they would have simply stated that they thought the wages should be increased one-twelfth.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It was certainly not to put this money in the hands of the Public Printer to enable him to grant or refuse leave of absence as he pleased.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] suggests, it was not intended to put this money in the hands of the Public Printer to enable him to grant or refuse leave of absence as he might see fit. I hope the committee will either agree to strike out this clause from the statute-book or require the money to be used for the purpose for which it was asked by the employés of the Government and for the purposes for which Congress originally granted it. It is a prostitution of this appropriation to say that persons may work twelve months and get pay for thirteen months' time. It is in the very nature of things contrary to the whole spirit of the appropriation. If we are not going to carry out this appropriation in its letter and spirit, let us repeal it, and when it is re-enacted let it be re-enacted with the provision that it is only to be paid when the person actually takes his leave, and that he be entitled to take his leave whether the Public Printer says he is required to stay or not.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. Does the gentleman from New York desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I desire to discuss the amendment. I trust the amendment offered by my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will not prevail, although it seems to be almost justified by the actual condition of things, as I understand it to be, in the Government Printing Office at the present time. Delegation after delegation of printers have appeared before the Committee on Labor, as my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] can tell us, urging some reform there. I am aware, as he is aware, that it is difficult to enforce the eight-hour law throughout all the departments of the Public Printing Office, but it might be well to say that while this committee, headed by Mr. Kennedy, came there and said that the Public Printing Office was conducted under Mr. Benedict badly enough in reference to the eight-hour law, it was conducted in an infinitely worse manner under the present Public Printer.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Did Mr. Kennedy state that?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. That was the statement of the delegation of which Mr. Kennedy was chairman, and my recollection is that the statement was made by Mr. Kennedy himself. It was the statement of the delegation.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Can you recollect any particular gentleman who mentioned that?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I think Mr. Kennedy himself made that statement.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Are you sure?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. I am reasonably sure that he did. Was the gentleman [Mr. FARQUHAR] present at the time?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Was it not a discharged employé of the Government Printing Office?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Was the gentleman present at the committee meeting?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I think so.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Will the roll of the committee disclose the fact that the gentleman was present three times at the beginning of the sessions?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not know whether I was there three times that day, but I was there at that investigation.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. That committee was there more than three times—quite a number of times.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The two gentlemen that were heard that day on that point were Mr. Oyster and Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Very true.

Mr. SPINOLA. Perhaps some one else chipped in.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If that statement was made at all, was it not made by Mr. Oyster?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. It may have been Mr. Oyster. I desire to say that when the distinguished chairman of the Appropriation Committee [Mr. CANNON] rises in this House and charges the Committee on Labor, either by inference or directly, with being lax in their duty, or when he says, as he said, replying to my suggestion, "Why does not the gentleman in his own time propose from his Committee on Labor some law to remedy this state of affairs," or substantially that, he well knows why the Committee on Labor is unheard. I want to call his attention to the fact that though a bill was reported away back in February (on the 27th) carrying nearly four millions of dollars, estimated, for back pay for men who worked over eight hours per day under Republican Administrations, and largely under that of Mr. Hayes, the Committee on Rules, of which the gentleman is a member, have so far throttled very effectively all labor legislation and have given the Labor Committee no hearing.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Did not these men receive all the payment they were promised at the time they did their work?

Mr. TURNER, of New York. Oh, well, I do not propose to enter now into a discussion of the bill and a long report. If the gentleman will vote to give consideration of this matter in the House I will try to explain the matter to him. We desired of the Committee on Rules an opportunity to consider this bill. They feared that it was a little too far-sweeping. It was taken back and amendments offered to it, and still we are denied a hearing. It comes with very ill grace from any gentleman on that side of the House to say anything about what they are doing in the interests of labor in this country.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay pro rata leaves of absence to employes who resign or are discharged (decision of First Comptroller), $15,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a summary way of disposing of amendments that are submitted in good faith.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last word—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire another vote upon the amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit it again if there is any doubt.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the present Public Printer is honestly endeavoring to carry out in good faith and spirit the eight-hour law; and any gentleman can see the very great difficulty of enforcing the eight-hour law in the performance of the work that is done upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. A man who enters the Printing Office at 6 o'clock in the evening expects to work until 2 o'clock in the morning, and he expects that the force at night is sufficient to set up the RECORD that will be made during the day; but between the hour he goes to work and 10 or 11 o'clock at night a greater amount of matter comes into the office than was expected, and in order to get that work done and carry out literally the eight-hour law you would have to go throughout the city, wake up men out of bed, and get them to go in and carry on the balance of the work to carry the law out literally in good faith.

Mr. SNIDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire the consent of the committee to offer an amendment on page 62.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota was absent when this part of the bill was passed, and asks unanimous consent to return to it for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 62, after line 5, insert:

"For maintenance of an office for furnishing information, $2,450."

Mr. SAYERS. Let the provision to which this amendment is offered be read.

Mr. SNIDER. If my friend will allow me—

Mr. CANNON. I will suggest to the gentleman that I do not want to assent to returning to this part of the bill that has been passed. I will say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL], who had charge of the signal-service item, did agree that an amendment might be made further increasing the amount, at line 11, page 62, from $45,000 to $47,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir; that was done.

Mr. SNIDER. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order until I can make a statement as to the necessity for this amendment?

Mr. CANNON. I can not assent to going back, but I have no disposition to cut the gentleman off from making a statement.

Mr. SNIDER. We want simply $2,450; and I desire to state to the House—

Mr. CANNON. Well, I can not give assent to turn back except for one item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the request that the provision to which the amendment is offered be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DOCKERY. I thought objection was made.

Mr. CANNON. I did not object to the gentleman making his statement, but I do object to the amendment.

Mr. SNIDER. The reason why I desire the gentleman to withhold his point of order is that I may convince him or any other reasonable man of the necessity for this appropriation. I desire to say that this is for the purpose of establishing an office for the dissemination of information gathered by the signal office of Minneapolis, Minn. At this point almost the entire wheat crop of the Northwest is marketed—45,000,000 bushels a year—and one-third of that is exported. At times the market is extremely sensitive, and certainly the farmers ought to have the advantage of certain knowledge and information that the Government has obtained, as promptly as possible. The amount that is asked for is $2,400 only—not for a full station—and I think it is but a reasonable request from the people of that country.

Mr. CANNON. That is for Minneapolis, is it not?

Mr. SNIDER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Have they not got an office at St. Paul?

Mr. SNIDER. Yes; they have a full office for observation at St. Paul.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, I will just say to my friend that there is one at St. Paul, only 4 miles from the point he wants to establish this office at Minneapolis.

Mr. SNIDER. Ten miles.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; 10 miles. I will only say this, that when the signal office was before the committee we gave them every dollar that they wanted for St. Paul.

Mr. SNIDER. I will say that this application has the indorsement of the signal officer; and I will state in addition that there are four signal offices maintained where they are not 20 miles apart; and I only ask for $2,400 for where there are 45,000,000 bushels of wheat marketed, one-third of which is exported. I think it is a very small thing for the House to deny to the farmers of that country the information they are entitled to as to approach of storms and disasters. I hope that the gentleman will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I will state that I do so with the consent and approval of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, after line 15, insert the following:

"Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y.: For electric-lighting plant, $4,400; for new water-service system, $5,542; for new sewerage system, $10,259; for draining system, $2,726; for macadamized road, $14,700; for one set of quarters for foreman of gunshop, $3,500; in all, $41,127."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it was agreed substantially when this item was passed that if, upon further examination, it was found that it should go in, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] should have an opportunity to insert it. This is a revised estimate, cutting down the original estimate one-half, and the committee are, I believe, unanimous in agreeing that it is necessary and should be inserted in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 62, line 10, strike out the words "forty-five thousand" and insert "forty-seven thousand two hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to returning to the paragraph indicated in the amendment?

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. In connection with that amendment I desire to have inserted as part of my remarks the letter which I send to the desk.

The letter was read, as follows:

SIGNAL OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, June 16, 1890.

DEAR SIR: Supplementary to my letter of June 6, 1890, regarding the establishment of a signal-station at Red Wing, Minn., I beg to say that the Brotherhood of the Upper Mississippi Pilots has repeatedly expressed to this office the great importance of such a station in the interest of navigation in the upper river. They have represented that disasters are frequent each year in passing through Lake Pepin, and that the loss to commerce is very large, averaging $15,000 annually.

The Chief Signal Officer would be glad to establish such a station, if possible, but, as he has clearly set forth in his annual report, it is not possible to increase the present number of stations without a corresponding increase in the appropriations for this service. As pointed out in the letter referred to (June 6, 1890), the cost of a regular station would be $2,450 annually.

The Chief Signal Officer has no hesitation in saying that, in view of the representations made by the Brotherhood of the Upper Mississippi Pilots and by yourself, the establishment of such a station is clearly in the public interest, and is such as the importance of navigation of the Upper Mississippi demands.

The appropriation can be made either as a separate item or as an amendment on page 62, lines 10, 11, of H. R. 10884 (sundry civil bill) by increasing the amount to $47,250.

Very truly yours,

A. W. GREELY,
Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. M. H. DUNNELL,
House of Representatives, United States.

A true copy.

A. W. GREELY,
Chief Signal Officer.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 10884) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with various amendments, and with the recommendation that, as amended, the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think no separate vote is desired unless upon one amendment, which I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is willing should be non-concurred in.

Mr. SAYERS. Is that the amendment offered by me?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Let a separate vote be taken upon that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Speaker, let all the other amendments be concurred in except that one, and let that be non-concurred in.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments, omitting the one indicated.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to demand a separate vote upon the amendment just read providing for a clock in the tower of some building?

The SPEAKER. A separate vote may be demanded upon any amendment by any member.

Mr. SPINOLA. Well, I demand a separate vote upon that unless the necessity for it can be explained.

Mr. SPINOLA subsequently withdrew his request.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon concurring in the amendments just read.

The amendments were concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment which was reserved.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Lines 4 and 5, page 8, strike out "so much therefor as may be necessary," and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon concurring in this amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it was the understanding that that amendment was to be rejected in view of a resolution which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] proposes to offer to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will please give his attention. It is stated that the amendment just reported is to be disagreed to with the understanding that a resolution for the recommitment of the bill is to be submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the gentleman desires to make a motion to recommit, with instructions to strike out in this and three other paragraphs.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the previous question operate upon this amendment: Page 62, line 11, "strike out $47,250" and insert "$49,750." That is an increase of $2,400. This is the general item from which Signal Service stations and substations are established and supported by the Signal Office, and I offer this amendment with the view of furnishing money sufficient to enable the Chief Signal Officer to establish a signal office at the city of Minneapolis in the event it should be necessary in his opinion to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 10884 be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back at once, amended as follows:

Page 86, in lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "so much therefor as may be necessary is hereby appropriated," and insert in lieu thereof "$350,000."

Page 86, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "so much therefor as may be necessary," and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000."

Page 86, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "so much therefor as may be necessary," and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

Page 86, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "so much therefor as may be necessary," and insert in lieu thereof "$22,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon that resolution.

Mr. COBB. I rise to move to amend the instructions by adding another.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the previous question.

Mr. COBB. I had the floor, and I thought I was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked the gentleman for what purpose he rose.

Mr. COBB. And I was making my motion in response to that inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he is bound, under the custom of the House, to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill. The matter is left entirely with the House, because if the House votes down the demand for the previous question, the amendment will then be in order.

Mr. COBB. I would like to state my amendment, so that the House may understand it.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order.

Mr. COBB. The statement might affect the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It might affect the vote, and so might debate on the motion for the previous question; but it is not allowed under the rules.

Mr. COBB. Am I not allowed to make a statement of the motion I propose to submit?

The SPEAKER. It is not now allowable under the rules.

Mr. COBB. Then I ask unanimous consent to make that statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the gentleman making a statement for a minute or two; I do not wish any extended debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COBB. I desire to move to add to the proposed instructions to be given to the committee, if the bill should be recommitted, an instruction to strike out that part of the bill commencing at line 13, on page 46, and extending to line 8, inclusive, on page 47. The provision I propose to strike out is known as "the irrigation-survey appropriation."

Mr. CANNON. I do not think the gentleman's motion would be germane if the previous question were voted down. I should make the point of order upon it.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, it was determined in the affirmative—ayes 71, noes 50.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with the instructions which have been read. The question being taken, there were—ayes 66, noes 69.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 86, nays 100, not voting 141; as follows:

 Mr. CRAIG with Mr. MAISH, until Wednesday.
 Mr. MCCORMICK with Mr. MCCLAMMY, until Monday next.
 Mr. BAKER with Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, until Wednesday.
 Mr. MORRILL with Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, until Wednesday next.

Mr. BARTINE with Mr. CLUNIE, until Friday next.
 Mr. CANDLER, of Massachusetts, with Mr. MANSUR, until further notice, except on the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. COGSWELL with Mr. BLANCHARD, on all political questions and on the bankruptcy bill.

On this vote:

Mr. NUTE with Mr. STAHLNECKER.
 Mr. PAYNE with Mr. JASON B. BROWN.
 Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. GIBSON.
 Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. BRICKNER.
 Mr. BUTTERWORTH with Mr. WHITTHORNE.

For this day:

Mr. MOREY with Mr. ALDERSON.
 Mr. MUDD with Mr. BANKHEAD.
 Mr. MOORE, of New Hampshire, with Mr. HEMPHILL.
 Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, with Mr. STUMP.
 Mr. DARLINGTON with Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina.
 Mr. WALLACE, of New York, with Mr. PENINGTON.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 37) providing for donations of certain personal property of the United States to South Dakota and North Dakota;
 A bill (H. R. 75) to fix the regular terms of the circuit and district courts for the southern district of Alabama;

A bill (H. R. 1404) granting a pension to Mary Ann Lang;
 A bill (H. R. 1884) granting a pension to George F. White;
 A bill (H. R. 2424) granting a pension to Mary W. Smalley;
 A bill (H. R. 4036) for the relief of Christian Kunzie;

A bill (H. R. 4967) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Reed;
 A bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Amanda J. Delap;
 A bill (H. R. 6280) granting a pension to Lawrence Dougherty;
 A bill (H. R. 6601) granting a pension to Archibald F. Coon;
 A bill (H. R. 6831) for the relief of Norman Cleveland;
 A bill (H. R. 6913) granting a pension to Alexander G. Davis;
 A bill (H. R. 7529) granting a pension to Belle Morrison, of Dillsborough, Ind.;

A bill (H. R. 7824) granting a pension to Mary F. Cochran;
 A bill (H. R. 7856) granting the right of way to the Duluth and Manitoba Railroad Company across the Fort Pembina reservation, in North Dakota;

A bill (H. R. 7958) granting a pension to Christopher C. Funk;
 A bill (H. R. 8560) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie H. Wilson;
 A bill (H. R. 8910) granting an increase of pension to Clinton Spencer; and

A bill (H. R. 9359) to increase the pension of B. F. Hilliker.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill before the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10726) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume much of the time of the committee, but desire to submit a brief statement in explanation of the general provisions of the bill. The bill carries—

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman state how much the bill carries?

Mr. PERKINS. That is just what I was about to do.

This bill carries in the aggregate the sum of $6,312,620.46.

Mr. SAYERS. How does that compare with similar bills heretofore passed by the House?

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman will listen I will give the figures; and that is about all I desire to say in the general debate.

The regular estimates of the department for this branch of the public service amounted to $5,804,399.77. Since these regular estimates were submitted, however, several supplemental estimates have been prepared and forwarded with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, aggregating, with the amount of the estimates originally submitted, an amount quite largely in excess of the amount appropriated by the bill, and no appropriation is made in the bill that has not been estimated for or recommended by the Executive Department of the Government.

The annual appropriation bill of last year carried the sum of $8,077,453.39, so that the present bill carries in the aggregate $1,764,832.93 less than was appropriated in the bill for the current year. I would say that this results largely from this fact: That the annual appropriation bill for the current year carried appropriations to pay for lands that had been purchased from the Creek and Seminole Indians, and contained some allowances and provisions that at this time are unnecessary, and which in the last appropriation bill swelled the aggregate to the amount I have just stated. We have made quite a considerable reduction in what is called the "subsistence account" carried by the provisions of the bill, but we have added to what is called the "educational account."

So that for the regular expenses of the Indian service the appropriations this year are as large as last year, and a little larger, but the miscellaneous items appropriated for are not as numerous and do not carry the amounts appropriated last year, and therefore the aggregate of this bill is almost $2,000,000 less than the aggregate of last year's appropriation.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand, then, from the gentleman that the reason this bill is smaller than the similar bill reported in the Fiftieth Congress is that that bill carried appropriations for the purchase of lands from the Indians which this bill does not carry?

Mr. PERKINS. That is one reason.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman give the other reasons?

Mr. PERKINS. The other reason is that we made an appropriation last year to pay quite a number of claims due to the Indians that are not provided for in this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Was the Choctaw claim embraced in that bill?

Mr. PERKINS. No; the Choctaw claim was provided for in the bill of two years ago.

But, Mr. Chairman, the aggregate amount carried by the bill of last year for miscellaneous purposes was more than the amounts carried by the miscellaneous provisions of this bill; and for that reason the aggregate appropriation of last year was more than it will be this, although for the regular annual appropriations for the Indian service the amount carried by this bill is as large and a little larger than last year, because of the increase in the educational provision.

Mr. SAYERS. How much larger is it?

Mr. PERKINS. For educational purposes about $400,000 more than the bill of last year; but we have reduced the subsistence account quite largely, and hence the aggregate is not $400,000 more than the bill of last year.

As to the Indian agents, we have decreased the compensation of two or three and added a trifle to the salaries of two or three, the difference, however, being only about $400 in all. I will say in this connection that the committee was importuned from all sections of the country to give favorable consideration to recommendations of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs concerning the educational work of his office. From all sections there seems to be a general demand that more liberal provisions should be made this year for such purposes than had been made heretofore; and the committee makes favorable response to these petitions and supplications by the bill which is reported to this committee for its consideration. Public interest in the work seems to be growing in all sections of the country, and the good people of the country ask and expect Congress to make liberal provision for the support of Indian industrial and day schools.

The schools are increasing in number, the attendance is increasing, more pupils are being educated than ever heretofore, and I think the educational work is reasonably encouraging to those who believe in this system of settling the Indian question. I think that as a matter of economy, to ignore the question of sentiment, the questions of right and wrong—ignoring these questions and looking at it simply as an economical question, I think it is cheaper to educate these Indian children and to provide suitable school accommodations for them than to maintain armies to fight them; and I believe that the system of education that has been adopted by the Indian Office and that has been sustained thus far by Congress, and for the support of which this year we make more liberal appropriations than ever heretofore, will prove in the end the true solution of this Indian question.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Kansas give us such information as he has as to the practical effect of this educational system for civilizing the Indian and to what extent these educated Indians enter into and become permanently a part of our civilization? I would like to have some light on that subject.

Mr. PERKINS. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that a teacher connected with the Hampton school addressed the committee, and gave to the committee such information as he possessed upon this subject. Hampton, as you all know, is a mixed school, not exclusively an Indian industrial school, but blacks and Indians are educated there alike, and the Government pays for the education of quite a number of Indian children at that school.

Last year this teacher visited the Dakotas for the purpose of inquiring into and ascertaining the condition of the Indian children that had been educated at that school. He informed the committee that there had been one hundred and fifteen in attendance at Hampton. Of those one hundred and fifteen he succeeded personally in interviewing ninety-eight, and he found, with three exceptions, all those he visited were doing well, maintaining their habits of civilized life, acquitting themselves with credit, and setting good examples to the boys and girls of the reservations to which they belonged. He said that in one case he found that a boy had become demoralized; had acquitted himself badly since his discharge from the school; had been guilty of larceny, and had been prosecuted for it, and did not seem disposed to take up the habits of civilized life with any credit to himself or with any credit to the institution that had educated him; and that in one or two other instances he found that they were doing indifferently, and did not set that example to others that it had been hoped they would when they were discharged from the school; but he said that with these exceptions he found they did conform to the habits of civilized life with credit to themselves and were acquitting themselves with credit to the institution, and he felt more encouraged since making that visit and since making that personal examination than he had ever felt theretofore concerning this work. And I would say that from his statement (and that, of course, applied simply to the Hampton school) the work must be as satisfactory as work that is accomplished at the colleges or academies attended by our white boys. I doubt whether a like number can be found discharged from our educational institutions who have acquitted themselves with more credit—that is, a greater per cent. of them—than these Indian children that went from Hampton. Out of the entire number, so far as this teacher could learn, but three had failed to acquit themselves with credit.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think the same proportion will hold good as to the other institutions.

Mr. PERKINS. I was about to suggest that as to Carlisle I was told the same was true, that the per cent. is equally large. I would say that at Carlisle they have this system, which I think is an excellent one, and which commends these industrial schools to me more than any other feature of the present system of Indian education. Upon the rolls of the Carlisle school there are almost one thousand Indian pupils, while in fact there are only about five hundred of them in the school-room. The remaining number are hired out to the farmers, the good wives and the good people of Pennsylvania, to do household and farm work, and they are taught in that way the habits of civilized life.

Their earnings go to them and the school exercises a supervisory control over them, to see that they are treated well, to see that they get what is promised to them, to see that they are permitted to attend school during the winter months, and that they do not contract habits that are likely to lead to their demoralization or to their detriment. This care is exercised, and under a general supervision of that character these boys and girls are hired out to do farm and household work in the homes and upon the farms of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me right at that point to ask him a question? He states that after they leave school and go back to their tribes they do as well as other civilized people. What do they do? His statement is a little indefinite. Do they take up agriculture? Do they go into mechanical pursuits? Take those that come from the Carlisle school. I want to know, when that school lets go of these boys and girls, do they become a part of the civilization of the country or do they return to their Indian habits? I ask for information from the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. I have attempted, Mr. Chairman, to briefly answer that inquiry. It is impossible for me to enumerate what each scholar discharged from these schools accepts in the way of employment or occupation upon his discharge, but we have learned upon inquiry that, where there is business that they can do, upon their return to their reservations or to their people they follow that business; that where there is employment for them they accept that employment as a rule. Some of them accept lands in severalty and go to farming and build homes for themselves and continue the habits of civilized life taught them at the schools. This is the rule with those discharged from Hampton as found by the teacher last summer, and I think, Mr. Chairman, from the inquiries that have been made by the committee and from the information that we got, that this work is reasonably encouraging. In fact, so far as the committee can learn, but few indeed return to the habits of the old life; most of them acquit themselves with credit and set an example to the boys and girls of their tribal life and to the people of their reservations that is worthy of emulation and that does much good.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will allow me right there. Four years ago a committee of which I had the honor to be a member visited many of those tribes, and we made inquiry touching the condition of many of those children that had gone to the schools, and think I am safe in saying that without exception—I do not know that I recall a single exception—all the children that had been sent off to the schools, when they returned to the reservation, in cases where the Government did not employ them and have them virtually in charge, dropped back into the habits of the tribes, and their condition, as a rule, became worse, especially that of the females, than it would have been found if they had never gone to the schools. Whether that condition of affairs has changed or not I do not know, but in the nature of things I do not see how it is possible for it to have changed, where the Government has failed to give them employment on the Indian police, or in some such way, from the very fact that it was a matter of pride upon the part of the tribe to bring these children back to the level of the tribe.

Mr. PERKINS. I would say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, that each year the prejudice existing among the Indian tribes against this system of Indian industrial education is disappearing and weakening. The agents representing these schools find less difficulty each year in getting children to attend them, and they find more of the adult Indians willing that their children should go and get the advantages of these industrial schools. That is the testimony of all those who have any connection whatever with these Indian schools, so far as we could learn.

I admit that a few years ago there was a great deal of prejudice existing in the minds of the Indians against this system of education, and in some instances teachers, or those representing these schools, had to resort to force to get scholars. They employed violence at times to get children from their reservations and from their homes that they might take them to these schools and give them the advantages there given. But I am told that has almost entirely disappeared, and as the work of the Government in separating the Indians and of giving them individual homes, of allotting lands to them in severalty and breaking up their tribal relations and encouraging their individuality, progresses, it is found that this work of education of the children and the work of the Government go hand in hand, and the system of Indian education adopted by the Indian Office, and encouraged by Congress, aids the Government very materially in dealing with the adult Indians. I do not think there is a doubt about it, and in time it will prove the solution of the Indian question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think it is proper to say that I did not wish my questions to be construed as indicating that I am in any way hostile to this class of legislation. I wanted information, and I think it is not the time to recede from this work. That, Mr. Chairman, was the only object I had, and I did not want to indicate or to be understood as antagonizing that feature of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I did not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman was criticising the appropriation, nor did I understand that he was criticising this work. I think the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa was, as he has just stated, for information, and certainly that information should be given. We are appropriating a large amount of money for this work, and each year the appropriation is increasing. Each year more schools are being provided for. To-day less than 50 per cent. of the Indian children that should be at school are given school accommodations.

We have not reached the maximum that Congress will be called upon to appropriate for this purpose, and hence it is right for the House to know and for the country to know the progress of the work. Having confidence in the work the committee has been liberal with the Indian Office, and where we found upon investigation that the money could be used to advantage, where the local conditions were favorable and successful results were promised, we responded to the recommendations of the Indian Office and recommended the appropriations asked for, and have done what we could in a reasonable way to sustain and uphold the hands of the Commissioner, who I think is conscientiously and enthusiastically devoted to this work. If the present Commissioner is to be criticised at all it may be because of his zeal and enthusiasm upon this subject.

We did not give him all he asked, but where, as I suggested a moment ago, we found the conditions favorable, that good work could be accomplished, we have made the appropriations asked for and have in that way attempted to sustain him in the work in which he is engaged and in which the country is so much interested.

Mr. CHEADLE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CHEADLE. I wish to ask the gentleman this question for information: Where have the best results been secured in these schools; in the East or on the reservations, in the tribes?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Indiana, I will frankly state that I think the Carlisle school in Pennsylvania has done the best work of any of the industrial schools. My judgment is that the industrial schools located in the States are capable of doing better work than schools located upon the reservations. That is my judgment, and for this reason—

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Does the gentleman not know this fact, that the Creeks, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, under the manipulation or management of the Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian Churches in this matter of schools, have their schools filled to overflowing? I make this statement in order that you may use it, that they are getting more scholars than they can accommodate and are making great progress in the matter of education.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no question as to the truth of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia, that almost the entire scholastic population of the Cherokees and the other civilized tribes is provided for in schools of their own. Most of them are educated and are now taught to read, to speak, and to write the English language.

In some of the civilized tribes they have schools that teach the language of the tribe, where some of the scholars are not taught to read, speak, and write the English language, but most of the children of school age in the five civilized tribes are taught in good schools that are sustained and maintained by the tribes. The religious denominations of the country, as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, have largely supplemented this work and have contributed to its success.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Will you allow me to make this further suggestion in order that it may go into the RECORD? That among these denominations in the five civilized tribes since the educational interest has been so increased there are a greater number in proportion to the population belonging to these churches than there are in the States, by actual enumeration.

Mr. PERKINS. I think that is true, Mr. Chairman. I think that the church membership in some of these civilized tribes is larger in proportion to population than the church membership in most of our civilized communities, and the per cent. of children in attendance upon the schools, in the Creek Nation particularly, is larger than in almost any State in this Union.

Mr. CHEADLE. I asked the question for this reason: One of the best educators of my acquaintance, who is now at work in the Indian schools in the West, has impressed me very much with the idea that if those schools could be located upon or near the reservations the influence upon the adult Indians and also upon the minor Indian children would be greater, and that that system would be more beneficial in its effect upon the tribal relations than the plan of sending the children East to be educated.

Mr. PERKINS. I know there are many who believe that, but my observation and my information do not sustain it. The day schools upon the reservations have not yet been as satisfactory in results as those who are interested in the work of Indian education could wish, for the reason that the teachers find difficulty in getting the scholars to attend the schools regularly or to devote themselves to their studies. The surroundings are such that the young Indians are tempted away, or they prefer to return to their people and to continue the habits that have been taught them from their infancy. They are not so removed from temptation as they are when taken away from the reservations and sent to industrial schools in the States. Again, the system which has been adopted at the Carlisle school is, in my judgment, one of the best features that have ever been adopted in connection with Indian education, and it is a system that can not be carried out to any considerable extent on or near the reservations.

I refer to the custom of hiring out the boys and girls in the homes of farmers and others who live in the neighborhood of the schools, where the boys can be taught to hold the plow, to do the other work of the farm, and to engage in all those activities that are calculated to fit them for the duties and responsibilities of civilized life, and so with the girls. Almost 50 per cent. of the scholars carried upon the roll at Carlisle are hired out from month to month with the farmers and others in Pennsylvania; and when they are discharged from the school at the end of six years—that being the length of the term contemplated there, because during almost half the time they are hired out as I have described—when they are discharged, I say, at the end of six years, they are discharged fully prepared to care for themselves and to maintain themselves in the battle of life.

For these reasons I think, as I suggested a moment ago, that the Carlisle school has done the most effective work of any in the country, and at Haskell, in Kansas, Genoa, in Nebraska, and at some of the other schools the same practice has been adopted to some extent. I feel more encouraged to-day in this work of Indian education than ever before, because I believe that the system of education as it is now carried on aids the Government very materially in its work with the adult Indians. When the children go home prepared for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, that fact greatly encourages their fathers and mothers to take up their homes or lands in severalty, and, where the children do not find other employment, they themselves assist in cultivating the farms and in leading the family toward civilized habits and from the traditions and superstitions of the tribal relations.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It has a restraining influence, too, upon the savage characteristics of the tribe.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, as suggested by my friend from Iowa, it has a restraining influence upon the savage characteristics of the tribe; and, in my judgment, it is a question of only a little time when the tribal organization of every Indian tribe in the United States will be broken up and the lands that they now own will be allotted in severalty, and the Indians themselves will be made citizens of the United States.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the gentleman think that when that allotment takes place the education of the Indians will still be better conducted in the States than on the reservations?

Mr. PERKINS. In answer to that question I would say that the Indian Office is providing for schools at the different agencies and on the different reservations as fast as appropriations are made, and by the provisions of this bill we make a very large appropriation for that purpose this year. That is where the increase in this bill is, in the fund that is appropriated in order that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may enlarge and add to the work done upon the reservations. We do not provide in this bill for a single new industrial school. There are fifteen or eighteen bills before the committee, providing for additional industrial schools, which are strongly recommended by the people who live in the several localities, but in this bill we do not provide for a single new school, while we do add largely to the fund put at the disposal of the Commissioner to be expended in this work on the reservations and among the tribes.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is it the general rule that the new buildings that it is proposed to have erected are to be on the reservations?

Mr. PERKINS. As I said a moment ago, we do not provide in the bill for a single new industrial school, but the appropriation that is made will be expended by the Commissioner in the creation and construction of new reservation schools and day schools for the Indians, at their home.

Mr. SHIVELY. As between the system of the Government controlling the schools directly and the contract system, what is your opinion?

Mr. PERKINS. My judgment is that the contract schools have done very excellent work; and schools of this class do the work at less expense than the Government does it. We do not pay to the denominations that maintain the Indian schools under contract the same amount of money which it costs the Government to build and maintain the industrial schools. And, according to my judgment and observation, the work done by these denominational or contract schools is almost equal to that done by the industrial schools. For this reason, in part, as one member of the committee, I was not willing to insert in this bill provisions for the creation of additional industrial schools. I think a number of bills of that character will be reported from our committee before the session closes, and Congress may be called upon to consider them. These bills have reference to separate undertakings recommended or suggested by the Indian Office and asked for by the Indians and by people representing the communities affected.

I know, as I have already suggested, that these industrial schools are doing excellent work; but I know also that the contract schools have done and are doing excellent work likewise; and for that reason we make in this bill a liberal appropriation in order that these contract schools may be continued and the work they are doing encouraged.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I do not see in this bill any provision which specifies how much of the fund appropriated shall be used for the maintenance of the contract schools and how much for the day schools as distinguished from the contract schools.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is correct; we do not particularize in that respect. We never have done so.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Is it not best that such specification should be made? Has it not been made in the past?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; the provisions of this bill in that respect are the same as those which have been made ever since we have had appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Then it is left entirely discretionary with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to whether we shall have any contract schools at all?

Mr. PERKINS. Just as it has been in the past since the Government has been engaged in this work.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Is it not the disposition of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the superintendent of Indian education under him to abolish all these contract schools and take exclusive control themselves of this matter of Indian education?

Mr. PERKINS. I think not; on the contrary, the Commissioner has asked for more money to be expended on these contract schools than heretofore. The Commissioner is expending more money in that direction than at any time in the past. Instead of there being a disposition on the part of the present Commissioner to break up or destroy the contract work, I know from personal conversation with him that he feels disposed to encourage and continue it; and the appropriations which he asks and which we make for that work for the coming year are larger than they have ever been heretofore.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I understand it to be the fact that at these contract schools the denominations having them in charge contribute large sums of money in aid of Indian education. Would it not therefore be better to allow the contract system to go on as it is?

Mr. PERKINS. It is no doubt true that these denominations do contribute liberally to the work of Indian education, and it is because of the private contributions made by the members of these denominations that the work of education is carried on there for less than it costs the Government at a purely Governmental industrial school. It is for this reason that the committee has felt disposed to encourage the work of these contract schools, and, as I have suggested, we have made in this bill a larger appropriation for such work than has ever been made heretofore, and this with the approval of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I should very much dislike to have the House or the country misled in regard to the course of life that the students in these Indian schools lead after they leave the schools. My experience, of course, is confined to the twenty or twenty-five thousand Indians within the State of South Dakota and to some in Wisconsin and in Minnesota. In years past, while those Indians retained their tribal relations, their savage habits and instincts, the influence exercised over the children after their return to their tribes induced them, in many instances, to resume the habits of savage life. Their education seemed to do them but little good. But as these Indians in South Dakota, in Minnesota, and Wisconsin have broken up their tribal relations and have become civilized, the tendency of those children is to retain the effect of the educational influences to which they have been subjected in their schools, to follow the habits and continue the dress of civilized life after their return to their tribes.

And in partial reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois I will say that many of these Indian youth become farmers and herders of cattle. They endeavor to become self-supporting. The influence of those who have been educated in these Indian schools, and in fact in all the schools for that matter, is very beneficial to the older members of the tribe.

Now, in regard to this question of education. It is desirable that the Indian schools should be sustained; it is desirable that the appropriations for the maintenance of the present quota of children in these Eastern schools should be continued; and it is desirable also that the Government should maintain and support industrial schools of its own. The Government has to assume the care and guardianship of these Indians and it must maintain industrial schools in order to retain its influence over the Indians.

This Indian problem is by no means solved as yet. The question is not settled. The Indian is not yet a civilized being, but he is becoming civilized rapidly. All of these tribes of Indians that to-day feel the influences of the settlements in their vicinity are becoming civilized and self-supporting rapidly. We are brought into immediate and close contact with this question in South Dakota. We know these Indians in our State can be made self-supporting. We have examples of cases where Indians have pioneered twenty years ago right along with the white people, and to-day these Indians are on an average equal to the more improvident class of whites. They dress as the white people do, they have the white man's habits of life very largely. They own their lands there and are self-supporting, and as the tribal relations are being more and more broken up they become more and more civilized.

The Indians, let me say as an evidence of this, in Dakota, in Michigan, in Minnesota, and, I apprehend, largely in Montana, will be self-supporting after awhile; but the Government must maintain and carry on the industrial schools and they must be conducted somewhere near these reservations. Eastern schools are beneficial, and, as the chairman of the committee says, some of the most beneficial results we have seen have grown out of the establishment of these Eastern schools and their influences. But, I repeat, the Government must maintain its influence over the Indians; it must retain its guardianship over them and must conduct industrial schools itself on or near the reservations. We can not depend upon these denominations and benevolent societies and the people throughout the country for the solution of the Indian educational question. We ought not to depend upon them. The Government must conduct schools, should conduct many of them for itself. The Government must construct and sustain schools. We teach the Indians to work on the farm and encourage them in all of the industrial pursuits of the white people in these schools, both boys and girls. The sooner we make them self-sustaining the better for them and the better for ourselves.

This process of improving the condition of the Indians by educational industrial facilities must be continued in the East as well as in the West; but should be carried on largely in the vicinity of the reservations. Those people who are benevolently inclined should be encouraged in their work, but the industrial school is a necessity, and the appropriation in this bill, I believe, as the chairman of the committee states, will go very far indeed towards preparing the Indian pupils for the proper appreciation of civilized life.

I now yield the time back to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he permit a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. That is as to whether or not it is the desire of the parents of these Indians that these schools should be had at their homes or in their immediate vicinity rather than away from them.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the desire largely among the Indians in our State. They so expressed themselves while here. But at the same time there is no difficulty in securing some of these Indian children for the Eastern schools. The parents prefer to have them educated near their homes. There is no question about that. The Indians will receive much more benefit from the influence of the schools if they are located near the reservation. I am not in favor of discontinuing the Eastern schools; let the Eastern schools continue their work, but let us have some industrial schools near their reservation. It will be much more satisfactory to the Indians. There are a sufficient number of children to much more than fill all the schools that can be established.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that any one who desires to do so may be permitted to print remarks on this bill.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I shall have to make objection to that unless the time is limited. I think such remarks ought to be printed soon. I object to printing them a month after the bill has passed.

Mr. PERKINS. Then say within ten days.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Before the debate is closed on this bill I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas why, in an appropriation bill providing for the Indian service for the fiscal year coming, the committee have inserted a very considerable number of items of deficiencies from one to thirty years old.

Mr. PERKINS. Judging from where the gentleman has his bill turned down I do not think the item to which he is probably referring is made up of deficiencies. There are two or three items in the bill where we have made provision for adjustment and settling claims which have been due the Indians for many years. These have been unadjusted and have not been settled, but in the judgment of the committee they are meritorious. For several years, I think, we have in each Indian appropriation bill provided for the settlement of more or less claims of this character, thinking it was proper and right, claims due to the Indians under treaty obligations; and upon careful investigation, finding that the sums recommended were due to the Indians, we provided for them, believing it to be the proper policy to put them in this bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. And it has been the custom for years.

Mr. PERKINS. I so stated.

Mr. CANNON. Now, as to the respective committees of the House and their jurisdiction, we find that to the Committee on Indian Affairs the estimates are referred covering the Indian service. Yet I do not believe if the policy the gentleman speaks of has been pursued to any considerable extent that the Indian bill is the proper one to carry such items, because then the Indian bill would be not only a bill providing for the Indian service for the coming year, but for deficiencies for the current year and former years and relief bills involving matters of legislation. It divides the jurisdiction of the committee with the other committees of the House, and you can not tell if you divide the responsibility where you are going to come out.

To illustrate, and to be entirely frank about it—for I do not believe this bill ought to carry these items—two years ago, against a point of order, and after full discussion, the Committee on Indian Affairs reported in the annual bill an appropriation for what is known as the Choctaw judgment of over $2,000,000. Now, they did not have the jurisdiction to make that recommendation.

Mr. SHIVELY. But the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole determined otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; Chairmen of the Committee of the Wholesometimes make mistakes like other people. So unfortunately—and that is a marked example of what is liable to happen on similar occasions—unfortunately, under the lead of that committee, it happened that an appropriation was made for that judgment of $2,800,000, which was due, and then over $200,000 of interest was appropriated upon that judgment, when it never had drawn a cent of interest and not one cent of interest was due. But it was paid, a gift pure and simple, and in the mean time that item went to swell the amount of the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there? In the case of that claim judgment had been rendered by the Supreme Court, from which date it drew interest at 5 per cent., and the appropriation was made for that interest, due under the law.

Mr. CANNON. I beg your pardon. In this case Congress by an act of June 28, 1888, provided for the payment of the judgment with interest at 5 per cent. until the date of the act. Now, it had not drawn one cent of interest before the passage of the act. Interest was computed from the date of filing a copy of the mandate with the Secretary of the Treasury to June 29, 1888, the date of the act, and amounted to $219,696.71, making a total of $3,078,495.33, principal and interest.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. COBB. You said that the appropriation was made by the last Congress for interest on the claim, which interest was not due by law.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. COBB. What is the foundation for any statement of that sort?

Mr. CANNON. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the first place, never estimated for any interest. I have the estimate before me here. The estimate is not for interest.

Mr. COBB. Well, it is not necessary that the Secretary should estimate for interest. The legality and justice of the interest to be paid appeared on the very face of the claim.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. COBB. For this reason, that it had not been the fault of those to whom the claim was due that it had not been paid years and years ago. They had been demanding it of the Government ever since the claim was due, but it was the fault of the Government and not of the individuals to whom the money went that the money was not paid. Therefore the committee took the view, and the House sustained them, that where there was no fault upon the part of the claimant, that where the fault alone for delay was upon the part of the Government, the Government should pay the interest.

Mr. CANNON. Now, here is the whole thing in a nut shell, stated by Mr. MacLennan, chief of the warrant division, the official who, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, makes the estimate for this and supervises the estimates otherwise for the Government service, who forwards the judgment to the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court. I will read his letter.

Mr. COBB. Mark you, just one word, please. The interest was not calculated upon the claim proper; it was upon the judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. "Now mark how plain a tale shall put him down." I read from the Treasury official's letter:

On January 25, 1886, judgment was rendered in favor of the Choctaw Nation for $386,605.32. February 23, 1886, the judgment was rendered in favor of claimants for $408,120.32. An appeal to the Supreme Court was taken by the claimant on the same day. December 14, 1886, the judgment of the court below was set aside, and a mandate issued in favor of the claimant for the full amount claimed, $2,858,798.62.

Mind you, that was December 14, 1886.

December 15, 1886, judgment was entered up pursuant to said mandate. December 16, 1886, a transcript of the mandate so entered was filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Then he says:

The records of this Department do not show that a certified copy of the judgment from which the appeal was taken to the Supreme Court was ever filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, as required by section 1089 of the Revised Statutes, and this omission alone would preclude the payment of interest. But this is not all. The right to interest depends on an appeal taken by the United States from a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the claimant, and on the affirmance of said judgment by the Supreme Court.

That is, the affirmance of the judgment taken by the United States.

Mr. PEEL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question right there?

Mr. CANNON. Let me complete this, and then I will.

This case in question was not affirmed, but set aside and a new judgment entered. In cases affirmed by the Supreme Court on appeal by the Government and in which certified copies of the original judgments were filed as prescribed in section 1089, Revised Statutes, interest would run from that date to and including the date of the mandate of affirmance by the Supreme Court, and not after.

Now, the Government did not prosecute this appeal. The statute provides for interest where the Government prosecutes an appeal and where the judgment is affirmed by the Supreme Court, provided the other party files a transcript of the judgment from the Court of Claims with the Secretary of the Treasury.

This is a case where no interest was provided for under the law. The interest is a mere gift, a gratuity, upon this enormous indebtedness of $2,800,000. That interest was appropriated swelling the amount to over $3,000,000, and a large part of it is yet tied up in chancery down here by the attorneys who are quarreling over the question as to whether they shall have one-third or two-fifths or one-half of it, I believe. I only refer to it in connection—

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. In one moment. I only refer to this to show that the safe way is to follow the rules of the House and let each committee take that jurisdiction which the rules give to it. I shall ask that that rule be enforced in the future as to this and all other bills.

Mr. COBB. Now, will you allow me?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. COBB. The matter about the interest to which you have referred has reference to the interest that accumulated on the claim, and comes in as a part of the judgment.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. COBB. The interest read here and reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the last Congress was the interest upon the final judgment as rendered by the Supreme Court.

Mr. CANNON. Which under the law did not draw interest.

Mr. COBB. Whether under the law it drew interest or not, it was a question fairly submitted to this House; and the report was rightly submitted to this House, whether, in view of the fact that in this particular case a judgment had been rendered in favor of these claimants by the Supreme Court of the United States, from the time of the rendition of the judgment up to the time of the report made at the last Congress by the Committee on Indian Affairs the claimants had been prosecuting their rights with the utmost diligence and had not been in any particular in default, but they were not paid on account of the default of the Government itself. Does it make any particular difference whether there was any law allowing interest or not? When it came into this House it was submitted here for the approval of Congress whether in that particular case it was not honest and just and proper that this interest should be allowed.

I remember—being then a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs—of taking the position there, wherever a claim was due to an individual by the Government, and that individual failed diligently and properly to prosecute that claim, but allowed it to rest by his own negligence for years, no interest should be paid him, and on the ground and for the reason that the Government is presumed to be always ready to pay its debts on demand; but that, where the Government itself throws obstacles in the way of the collection of a claim and delays the collection of a claim through a series of years, it was nothing but fair, just, and honest that the Government should pay the interest if Congress thought that the Government of the United States ought to be honest.

Mr. SKINNER. Is not that rather a violent presumption?

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman takes the position now in explanation of that appropriation that he knew that judgment did not draw interest, but, notwithstanding that, appropriated and recommended payment of over $200,000 that the Government was not bound to pay under the law. Does the gentleman take that position?

Mr. COBB. I do not know whether the matter of existing law was a question before us at all or not. So far as I am concerned I would not have stopped to consider it. We voted for the interest, and the committee reported for the interest with my assent, being a member of the committee, on the ground that under existing conditions and under the facts and circumstances of that case we could not refuse the interest without acting unjustly towards the claimants.

Mr. CANNON. Whether the Government owed it or not?

Mr. COBB. The Government did owe it, for the reason that the Government always gives the interest when it obstructs the prosecution of a judgment.

Mr. SHIVELY. I was a member of that committee and know that in reporting the appropriation we gave the interest as a matter of right.

Mr. COBB. We gave the interest because it was proper to allow the interest.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I have some recollection of that appropriation myself. The gentleman from Illinois has become so very watchful over the Treasury of this country this session of Congress that he has got to go back and dig up something that was done in the last Congress. I want to say to the gentleman about this very matter of interest in here that if he had been as watchful then as now we could have had that question discussed when the matter was before the House two years ago. He was on the Committee on Appropriations when this very identical judgment was before that committee two years ago, and they did not appropriate for its payment, and the result of that was that they allowed $150,000 of interest to accrue against the Government.

Mr. CANNON. I will suggest to my friend—

Mr. PEEL. Just wait a moment. The gentleman did not seem to understand the status of that judgment, that when the question was decided by the Court of Claims both the Government and the parties plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. There was an appeal on both sides. When the Supreme Court set aside the finding of the Court of Claims rendering a judgment of that amount a mandate was issued to the lower court, as is always done, and that was presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, and from that time on it drew 5 per cent. interest. There was no way of avoiding that interest without a violation of every principle of law and every principle of conscience and right.

Mr. SHIVELY. It was just as clear as the interest upon the public debt.

Mr. PEEL. Yes; I remember distinctly when we had that appropriation up two years ago in the Indian appropriation bill. It was discussed on a point of order, and the members of that committee did all in their power to prevent its adoption. I do not say that the gentleman from Illinois took any part in that, but he was a member of that committee. They were willing that Congress should allow this judgment, a judgment of the Supreme Court in favor of the Choctaw Nation, to stand for years and years, and that we should allow the interest to accumulate at the rate of $150,000 a year against the Government. That committee had an opportunity two years before that to make an appropriation to pay this judgment and they did not do it; and we all know what the consequence of that was: that it accumulated at the rate of $150,000 a year against the Government. The Committee on Indian Affairs, when it came before that body, found they had jurisdiction, and we felt it our duty as members of the committee and as members of this House to pay a debt that had been litigated from the lowest to the highest courts of this country and every advantage taken in behalf of the Government that could be taken; so it was by unanimous vote of the committee, if I recollect correctly, that we put a stop to this interest. I do not see why the gentleman from Illinois should point that out as an error of the Committee on Indian Affairs. We had charge of this bill, we found that we had jurisdiction, and we exercised it, as we ought to have done and as they ought to have done two years ago. If they had done so, that would have saved a good deal of money for the country.

Mr. CANNON. All I have to say is that I read a statement from the warrant officer of the Treasury Department, which I do not care about repeating. It is in the RECORD, and I am satisfied with it, and from the examination I have been able to give it my opinion is that not one cent of interest was due upon that judgment.

Mr. PEEL. Well, we examined the statute at the time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be considered as closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to the consideration of the first paragraph, I want to say briefly, in answer to the criticism of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that in my judgment there is no committee of this House that has jurisdiction of the subjects spoken of by him except the Committee on Indian Affairs. If there is money due from the Government of the United States to a tribe of Indians, it is the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs, upon proper application, to investigate that matter and to make provision for its payment, and no other committee has jurisdiction of the subject at all.

Again, concerning this judgment, it may be that there was some technical reason why interest should not have been allowed upon it. If the judgment creditors had failed to file a transcript with the Secretary of the Treasury, or if there was any other technical reason why interest should not be allowed upon that judgment, it was the duty of the executive officers to advise the Committee on Indian Affairs and Congress of that fact; but no such advice or information was ever given to this House or to the committee that had jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. CANNON. Here is the estimate of the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, formally transmitted by the Treasury Department, and it says: "The Choctaw Nation," so much, and then the list runs along, and wherever a judgment bears interest it is noted, as the gentleman will see. For instance, here is one with interest at 5 per cent. from May 6, 1886, but there is no estimate for interest on the judgment we are discussing.

Mr. PERKINS. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois I would say that we had before us not only the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the recommendations of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and of the Secretary of the Interior, with a transcript of all the proceedings pertaining to that case. They were laid before the committee, showing when the judgment was rendered, what the proceedings were, and giving a history of the case, as well as a history of the treaty under which the judgment was rendered, and showing that under the treaty the Indians were entitled to interest upon the amount due them. So, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], the committee, upon investigation of that claim, believed that there was honestly due those Indians what the Supreme Court of the United States had adjudged to be due, and the committee believed, and Congress believed, that the amount drew interest from the date of the rendition of the judgment. That was the sum of our offending, if offending we did.

Mr. CANNON. In making the statement I have made I have not been reflecting upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I have merely cited this matter by way of illustration, to show that the safer way is to let each committee exhaust its jurisdiction.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think we are intrenching upon the jurisdiction of any other committee of this House. I think the items provided for in this bill are items that were properly sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate and adjudicate, and, in the exercise of the jurisdiction that is given to that committee under the rules of the House they have reported this bill, and I hope this Committee of the Whole will now proceed to consider it.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in regard to the estimate by the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to this Choctaw judgment, that it is not strange that the Secretary did not mention the interest in the estimate, because that is a matter of computation arising under the law. All the Department had to do was to estimate for the amount of the judgment, and the interest followed as a matter of course.

Now, I presume the gentleman from Illinois did not mean any reflection upon the Committee on Indian Affairs when he said that a large portion of this judgment was tied up in the court of chancery and being fought over by lawyers. That is perfectly immaterial to Congress or to the country. It is quite immaterial to us who fight over the matter. The fact that the Government owed this debt to the Choctaw Nation made it its duty to appropriate the money subject to the order of the national council of the Choctaw Nation and stop the running of the interest. That discharges our obligation, that is all we have to do with it; and whether they get out writs of injunction or have litigation over questions of fees or not is a matter of minor importance or of no importance to us.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of fifty-seven agents of Indian affairs at the following-named agencies at the rates respectively indicated, namely:

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "fifty-seven" and insert "fifty-eight," so as to make the number of agents fifty-eight. In explanation of the amendment I will say that at the Hoopa Valley agency, in California, the work has been done for two years past by an army officer, there being a small garrison there, but the military force is removed now by order of the War Department, so that it becomes necessary to re-establish the agency.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS offered the following amendment:

Page 2, after line 21, insert the following: "At Hoopa Valley agency, $1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the Pueblo agency, at $1,500.

Mr. CANNON. This appropriation of $1,500 for the Pueblo agency is a decrease of $300, and there are, I observe, half a dozen or more increases or decreases of salaries at these Indian agencies. I will ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether, if this decrease of $300 be made, the agent at the Pueblo agency would not have a standing in the Court of Claims to recover the deficit of $300.

Mr. PERKINS. I think not. My own judgment is that there is no law fixing the compensation of these agents except as we fix them in the annual appropriations we make.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman is correct in that view, all right; but I suggest to him that he examine the matter and if that view be not correct he had better amend the enacting clause of the bill by inserting the words "in full;" so as to read, "for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department in full for the year ending June 30, 1891," etc.

Mr. PERKINS. I see no objection to that.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire the amendment unless it be found necessary.

Mr. PEEL. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he does not think the difficulty he suggests is fully met by a clause to be found on page 6, in these words:

And all provisions of law fixing compensation for Indian agents in excess of that herein provided are hereby repealed.

It seems to me that provision settles the question.

Mr. PERKINS. I think so, too.

Mr. CANNON. I had not noticed that clause. It seems to meet the difficulty.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Eastern Cherokee agency, $800; in all, $87,800; and all provisions of law fixing compensation for Indian agents in excess of that herein provided are hereby repealed.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by striking out in the clause just read the word "seven" and inserting "nine," and also by striking out "eight hundred;" so as to read, "$89,000." There has been a mistake either on the part of the printers or in computation, and this correction should be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, $4,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. Chairman, the bill reported to the House on the 4th of this month fixed the salary of the superintendent of Indian schools at $3,000. I wish to invite the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the fact that the copy of the bill reported on the 11th instant fixes the salary of this officer at $4,000 and to inquire as to the reason for the change.

Mr. PERKINS. When the bill was first draughted the subcommittee having it more particularly in charge thought that $3,000 would be sufficient compensation for this officer, although $4,000 is the sum heretofore fixed as his compensation. We thought that, as he was in the field most of the time and his expenses while in the field are paid by the Government, it would be fair that there should be a reduction of his annual compensation. But upon more mature reflection we yielded this point and changed the bill so as to appropriate the amount of salary fixed by statute.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is my recollection that the statute creating the office that corresponds to that of the present superintendent of Indian schools fixed the salary at $3,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Four thousand dollars.

Mr. SHIVELY. At the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, Mr. Nelson, of Minnesota, offered and had adopted an amendment to the annual Indian appropriation bill changing the name of the office from supervisor of Indian schools to superintendent of Indian schools. That amendment also increased largely the duties and responsibilities of the officer and increased his salary to $4,000.

At the second session of the Fiftieth Congress the provision of the former act enlarging the duties and responsibilities of this officer was repealed. To-day this office, so far as its duties are concerned, is substantially on a par with that of the five Indian inspectors, and there is no reason why there should be any discrimination in point of salary. The increased duties have been withdrawn by law and the officer bears the same relation to the Government that the supervisor of Indian schools did under the old law, and the latter's salary was $3,000. Of course if the office were the same as it was made at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress $4,000 might be reasonable; but the office is not the same by any means. I therefore move to strike out "4" and insert "3."

Mr. SKINNER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is a proviso to the effect that this officer shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHIVELY. I observe that is in here as a sort of saving clause. The Treasury Department must be cultivated, whether the Indian service is or not. That clause imposes on this officer no specific duties.

Mr. DOCKERY. What was the salary as fixed in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Four thousand dollars, the same as in this. It is true, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] has suggested, that there was last year or at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress—I have forgotten which—a modification of the duties imposed upon this officer, but it was not the judgment of the committee or the understanding of Congress that we were diminishing to any considerable degree those duties. The truth is that this officer is in the field almost all the time; the duties of his office are such as to keep him constantly employed. He is more than an Indian inspector. It is his duty under the law to visit the Indian schools, to examine their condition, to observe their workings, and to make recommendations looking to the employment of teachers—in short, to do any duty legitimately belonging to an officer of this character.

And in addition to this we have interpolated, perhaps, this amendment in the law. It may be subject to the point of order, but I think no objection will be made:

And provided, That he shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

That is new legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has it been passed yet?

Mr. PERKINS. No; and it was partly in view of the suggestion of my friend from Indiana that we provided this additional work might be imposed upon him. In other words, upon an investigation we found that while visiting the schools and while performing the duties of his appointment in Dakota, Montana, Arizona, and New Mexico, looking after the duties of his office, additional duties might be imposed upon him to the advantage of the public service; and in such case we have provided that the duty may be imposed upon him subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. We do not provide any additional compensation in the bill, but only the appropriation fixed by the statute itself.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, with the view of determining whether or not the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out or to reduce the appropriation should prevail, whether or not this superintendent has any other member of his family on the pay-roll of the Government.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that his wife is his private secretary, and in his absence has charge of the business of the office, looking after the duties of the superintendent.

Mr. SPINOLA. What pay does she get?

Mr. PERKINS. I think nine hundred or one thousand dollars a year.

Mr. SHIVELY. The wife is a special agent.

Mr. PERKINS. But this matter did not come to our committee and I can not say exactly.

Mr. SHIVELY. There is a vast difference between the duties performed by this officer under the former statute and those to be performed by him under this bill. Under the former statute he had the power of appointment and removal and was amenable directly to the Secretary of the Interior. He was not under the control of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. But now all of these duties and responsibilities are withdrawn and he is substantially an inspector of Indian schools.

Mr. PERKINS. We are not changing the law in that particular.

Mr. SHIVELY. We changed the law in the last Congress. This clause simply attaches a $4,000 salary to a $3,000 office.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but not to relieve him of all his responsibilities.

Mr. SHIVELY. Well, he has substantially the duties of an Indian inspector, or $3,000 officer.

Mr. PERKINS. In this the House gives the power, regardless of the wishes of the Indian Office, to make the appointments or changes there; and we found in making our investigations, and in many instances, that the recommendations and wishes of the superintendent of Indian schools and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs conflicted, and the working under that system was not satisfactory; and it was in consequence of that that the law was changed in the last Congress so there might not be friction between these officers engaged in the United States service in this department. That is all.

Mr. SHIVELY. This officer, as the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs stated a few moments ago, has an assistant, a special agent. She is the officer's wife and receives $6 per day, including Sundays and all traveling expenses.

Mr. PERKINS. That is a clerk.

Mr. SHIVELY. No, a special agent.

Mr. SPINOLA. At $6 a day?

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes.

Mr. SPINOLA. Who is the clerk? I think we ought to investigate this matter a little further.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LODGE. Before that amendment is voted upon I would like to say a few words in behalf of this officer to show the extent of the duties he performs. He happens to be a native of my State, but not a constituent of mine.

Dr. Dorchester, now the superintendent of the Indian schools, is one of the most prominent clergymen of the Methodist Church in Massachusetts. He occupied a position, a very well paid position, in the church, and stands very high in the community. He took this place largely from the interest he felt in the question of Indian education.

I wish to give the House further, before they vote on this amendment, some idea of the work that has been done by Dr. Dorchester since he accepted the appointment, and, if they think a man of his character and standing and energy is overpaid, I shall be very much surprised when they hear of the work involved in his appointment during the last thirteen months. In a letter addressed to myself, Dr. Dorchester states:

In the thirteen months since I took this office I have traveled 21,000 miles, over 2,200 of which have been on reservation roads, in rough wagons (buckboards), fording streams, penetrating forests, climbing mountains, descending declivities, often plodding our way on foot where wheels are unsafe, and enduring excessive heats and storms. I have visited forty Indian reservations and sixty-five Indian schools. It is safe to say that in two-thirds of these places the superintendent of Indian schools has never been seen before; and instead of six or seven hours of office work per day, as in Washington, from ten to fourteen, and even sixteen hours in many cases, has been the rule, so varied and numerous are the duties of inspection, investigation, consultation, preparing reports, and answering official correspondence.

I have not shrunk from the investigation of any field, even through arid Arizona. I traveled twice across the south and once across the north of that Territory, besides penetrating far into the central portions; because it seems to me that the wild Indians of that region, who have known little except West Point education, can be better civilized by the more rational education of the schools which the Government is trying to establish.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we expect to get and keep men of proper character to perform these difficult and arduous duties, men who will devote their lives and energies to carrying out, as it ought to be carried out, whatever is needed to secure the education of the Indians, and when we get such a man, as I believe we have, and the universal testimony shows we have, in Dr. Dorchester, it seems an inauspicious time to cut down his salary.

I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 44, noes 35.

Mr. PERKINS and Mr. LODGE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. PERKINS and Mr. SHIVELY as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $2,000: Provided, That he shall be allowed $1 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare: And provided, That he shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what duties it is contemplated shall be conferred upon this officer.

Mr. PERKINS. That proviso was suggested by the Secretary of the Interior. He suggested that there might be times when the officer might perform some additional duty that did not legitimately and pertinently belong to the educational feature of the Indian service; that that additional service might be performed for the Government, and for that reason he would like to have the proviso incorporated in the bill. I do not know what duty may be imposed upon him but such as can be given to him in keeping with his other duties and in connection with the service that he now renders.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will this involve any increase of compensation?

Mr. PERKINS. It does not increase his compensation at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens, serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, §5,000: Provided, That members of the commission may be allowed a per diem not exceeding $5 per day for hotel and other expenses when traveling on duty, in lieu of all expenses now authorized by law, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order upon the proviso that it changes existing law and is not in order upon this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the proviso is new legislation, but does not add anything to the cost of the service. As is well known by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], these gentlemen serve without any compensation whatever, except that their expenses are paid. It is a commission of gentlemen who volunteer their services, and they are designated by the President to perform this work, but without compensation, with the agreement, however, that their expenses are to be paid; and it was suggested, if this proviso could be incorporated into the bill, that it would be more satisfactory and would relieve the matter of doubt. The committee have no pride of opinion, nor any interest in the matter at all, and if the gentleman insists upon the point of order, I consent that it is new legislation; but these gentlemen serve, as I said, without any compensation whatever, and I think the point of order ought not to be made against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

In order to carry out the treaty agreement made with the Cherokee Indians by the United States of December 29, 1835, to pay their transportation to, and subsistence for a year after their arrival in, the Indian Territory, ratified by Congress June 12, 1838, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in paying and refunding the sum of $63.33 per head to such of said Indians as have removed themselves at their own cost to the Indian Territory and who have subsisted themselves for one year after such removal. The said money when paid as aforesaid to be accepted by said Indians as and in full compensation and satisfaction for their expenses in removing as aforesaid and in subsisting themselves for the first year after their arrival in said Territory.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make the point of order as to that provision, commencing with line 7 on page 9 and ending with line 23 on the same page, and to say this much touching the point of order. It looks to me as though it was a claim, and not in order upon this bill. But if there be an estimate for it at all it is clearly a deficiency estimate, and not an estimate for the maintenance of the Indian service for the coming fiscal year. In either event, if it is a claim, it is not in order upon any bill, or, if it is a deficiency, it is not in order upon this bill. I call the attention of the Chairman to Rule XI, which provides:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows: namely, subjects relating—

3. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided, namely: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for the District of Columbia; for pensions, and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations.

Later on, at clause 16, page 7, of the pamphlet:

16. To the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Now, this rule must be so construed as to let both clauses operate, and, if that is done, the appropriations for the "Indian tribes" and "Indians," which are referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, would relate to the appropriation for the coming fiscal year, and "all deficiencies" would relate to the current year and former years, and would go to the Committee on Appropriations. Having said that much about the rule, I call the attention of the Chairman to the fact that this is an appropriation of the sum of $20,000 to pay a claim originating somewhere from 1835 to 1838.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order I only desire to suggest that this appropriation is made for the purpose of carrying out a treaty that was made with these Indians in the year 1835. You will observe from the title of the bill that these appropriations are made—for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

As suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the rule of the present House, which was read, gives to the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction over matters relating to the Indians, as well as the annual appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, here is the distinction: As to all treaties made with the Indians where those treaties are to be performed on the part of the Government during the coming fiscal year, then the Indian Committee would have jurisdiction; but as to all claims arising under treaties of 1835 to 1838 they would be claims or deficiencies, and do not relate to the coming fiscal year, but to the past, and, if this be an estimate at all, it would go to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know whether this is an estimate or not. I will ask my friend.

Mr. PERKINS. It is an appropriation recommended by the Indian Office and by the Secretary of the Interior, and it is an old claim. I consent to that suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. It is a matter that they have been prosecuting here against the Government for years, and it results from their transportation or removal from North Carolina to the Indian Territory years ago. Under the treaty that is referred to here, where they removed themselves they were to be compensated for the expense incurred in their removal, and the amount was fixed, and these Indians removed themselves, and they have been asking from year to year for the amount due them. From some cause Congress has failed to make the appropriation. Will my friend allow me to say that it is an estimate transmitted as the law provides, from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him to the House of Representatives, and referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Indian Affairs under the rules?

The committee informally rose to receive a message from the Senate, Mr. PAYSON in the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7217) to amend "An act for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes;" and A bill (H. R. 10065) constituting Irondequoit Bay, New York, a navigable water of the United States for certain purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committee of conference on the following bills:

A bill (S. 2406) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Beaver Falls, in the State of Pennsylvania; and

A bill (S. 595) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the House concurrent resolution to print the consolidated index of claims reported by the Commissioners of Claims to the House of Representatives from 1871 to 1880.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the House concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of 16,000 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for the year ending June 30, 1889.

It also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of precious metals in the United States for the current year 1889; in which it asked concurrence.

The message also announced that Mr. INGALLS had been appointed one of the conferees on the bill (S. 4) authorizing the establishing of a public park in the District of Columbia, in place of Mr. McMILLAN, excused.

The message also announced the passage of a resolution requesting the return to the Senate by the House of the bill (S. 2865) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 90) providing for the printing of decisions of the Department of the Interior regarding public lands and pensions, for sale; in which concurrence was asked.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from North Carolina I think has all the papers and the executive document.

Mr. SKINNER. There was an executive document, but it is not in the letter of estimates that was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is not in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman states that it is not in the Book of Estimates. Was it transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. SKINNER. It was transmitted by the Indian Office.

Mr. CANNON. Then it was not transmitted as the law provides.

Mr. SKINNER. How does the law provide it shall be transmitted?

Mr. CANNON. The law provides that it shall be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SKINNER. It has not been transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. It is to be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House and by the Speaker of the House referred under the rules to the appropriate committee; and, if for no other ground than this, it would not be in order unless it was so referred, because the very essence of the rule is that deficiencies shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and the annual appropriations for the coming year shall be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SKINNER. I will state to the gentleman that an estimate was made in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and by him transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and by the Secretary of the Interior transmitted to the Speaker of the House, and from that source to our committee.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me to say there—

Mr. SKINNER. Not this session, though.

Mr. CANNON. I will state, if the gentleman will allow me, that the Secretary of the Interior, under the law, can not transmit to the Speaker of the House. He transmits to the Secretary of the Treasury or to the President.

Mr. SKINNER. This is an Executive Document, and it is properly referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how this could properly be termed a deficiency. As I understand a deficiency, it is an item that has already been due, but for which there was a failure to appropriate. It is a remnant of some current expenses. Now, as to this item and the question as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs over treaty stipulations and over all matters due to Indians under treaty stipulations, where the amount is fixed, it has always been held that the Committee on Indian Affairs had the jurisdiction. As the chairman of the committee has stated, the very title of the bill proves it. This is not a deficiency growing out of the current expenses for Indian service; it is not an amount to be paid and which ought to have been paid some time back. It is to be paid in the next fiscal year, and it grows out of treaty stipulation, which fixes the amount.

The treaty of 1835 with these Indians stipulated that they were to be paid so much for transporting them west of the Mississippi River and for subsisting them for twelve months; but it provided that any individual Indian that saw proper to remove himself and subsist himself should be paid at the rate of thirty-three and a third dollars per capita for the transportation and $20 per capita for the subsistence. This is the amount fixed by treaty, and it is an item that is to be paid in the next fiscal year, and therefore can not be a deficiency.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me right there, I will say that this does not come in under any rule, for your own committee in this House has reported a bill on this claim and it is now on the Calendar; and no committee could be given any jurisdiction under the rules of this House for such a claim as this to put it on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that the Committee on Indian Affairs has reported this matter to the House as a claim?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and it is now on the Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think that this point of order can not be sustained, for there is no doubt about the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs over this subject. This appropriation is made to carry out treaty stipulations with these Indians, and that gives jurisdiction to the committee.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in part reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that these estimates for carrying out treaty obligations do not come from the Secretary of the Treasury at all times.

Mr. CANNON. It is the only way they can come under the law.

Mr. GIFFORD. As to there being no other way of transmitting estimates except through the Secretary of the Treasury or the President, I will state that the Committee on Indian Affairs has to-day estimates and letters aggregating over $4,000,000 from the President, coming from the Secretary of the Interior, that never went through the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. They are for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations, just the same as we have in this instance. They come as an executive document from the President and not through the Secretary of the Treasury; and we have already reported a bill, or will report one—for it has been ordered in the committee—for an amount of $1,500,000 to carry out treaty stipulations with the Sioux Indians. Permit me to say that the larger part of them would properly belong in this bill and they never went through the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PERKINS. He has nothing to do with it.

Mr. GIFFORD. He has nothing to do with it, and the estimates for carrying out these treaty stipulations do not go through his hands except in some cases.

Mr. PERKINS. Only the regular appropriations.

Mr. GIFFORD. Only the regular appropriations. Now, Mr. Chairman, in this case we speak of carrying out the treaty obligations with these Indians. The estimate for carrying out those obligations is before the committee and has been presented to the House. Suppose that for five years this House should take no notice of that estimate, does the gentleman imagine for a moment that at each session of Congress the President or the Secretary would go on repeating and calling attention to that same treaty obligation and asking us to report the necessary amount to discharge it? Not at all. Unless their attention is particularly called to it they do not repeat these recommendations session after session and Congress after Congress. Unless their attention is called to the omission of Congress to make an appropriation they do not repeat the recommendation at all.

There are to be found in the files of this House communications a quarter of a century old from the Executive Departments calling attention to these treaty obligations; yet the money has never been appropriated, and the Government owes it to-day. Our attention is not called to those old obligations Congress after Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury or in any other way unless the official is urged by some one to send to Congress an estimate and urge an appropriation. In this case the document was laid before Congress years ago by the proper officer, and his attention has not been called to it since, and the omission of the Secretary of the Treasury or of the Secretary of the Interior to renew the recommendation does not deprive the Committee on Indian Affairs of its jurisdiction over this matter. It is the duty of that committee to report these to carry out our treaty stipulations and obligations, and it is the duty of no other committee, and that is precisely what this appropriation is for.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, I may have made a mistake. If I did say, I did not intend to say, that there had been no estimate made for this through the Secretary of the Treasury, but only that it, the estimate, had not been made by the Secretary of the Treasury or the President at this session of Congress. There was an estimate, and transmitted through the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to the Forty-ninth Congress, which estimate I hold in my hand. It is for the carrying out of a treaty stipulation, and if this Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction to make an appropriation to carry out treaty stipulations at all, it strikes me it has jurisdiction to put this item in this bill. It is a just item. In 1835 the United States agreed that any Indian who saw fit to remove himself from any part of the East to the Indian Territory might do so at his own expense, and that the Government would pay him $53 for doing that and maintaining himself there a year. In 1848 that treaty was again ratified and the money was actually appropriated. That money was used by the United States for some other purpose, but before it was so used, these Indians for whom this appropriation is made removed themselves, and they have never received this money, and they ought to have it. They removed themselves before any misappropriation was made of their money. Now, it may be that because this bill has been reported to Congress as a separate bill during this session it is liable to a point of order—I am not learned enough to say whether that is so or not; but if it is not open to that point of order, it is not obnoxious to a point of order for want of jurisdiction on the part of the committee who put it upon this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, no committee has jurisdiction of this matter, because it never has been transmitted to Congress as the law requires it should be in order to give jurisdiction. I read from the Statutes at Large, volume 23, enacted in 1884:

And hereafter all estimates of appropriations, and estimates of deficiencies in appropriations, intended for the consideration and seeking the action of any committee of Congress, shall be transmitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury, and in no other manner; and the said Secretary shall first cause the same to be properly classified, compiled, indexed, and printed, under the supervision of the chief of the division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations of his Department.

Now, what was the object of that legislation? It was that the Executive Departments in their communications to Congress should make them in an orderly manner and with all due safeguards; so we made our rules provide that the estimates should be ratified and jurisdiction should be given by virtue of reference to the respective committees—deficiencies to the Committee on Appropriations, and annual appropriations for the Indian service to the Indian Committee, and so on. The gentleman can not claim that this was a misreference and thereby gave his committee jurisdiction by accident or inadvertence, because there never was a reference and there never was an estimate for this appropriation as the law requires. The law is specific and prohibitory upon that point. Therefore, from that standpoint the appropriation is not properly here.

From the other standpoint I claim that, even if it had come here, it should have gone to the Committee on Appropriations, where the rule sends it and gives the jurisdiction. Third, this is a mere private claim which is older than you are, Mr. Chairman. It comes here as a private claim; a private bill is introduced and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they report that private bill back under their ordinary jurisdiction, apart from their jurisdiction to report a general appropriation bill, just as the Committee on Claims might report a bill, and it is placed upon the Calendar for consideration on private bill day, but now they come and put that item into this general appropriation bill and say that it belongs to the class of appropriations that should go through the House under the extraordinary rule which is made for the general appropriation bills that are required to carry on the general service of the Government. It was never intended, and the practice has never been, to spread the operation of those rules, designed for general appropriation bills, over claims of this kind, and when you come to change the practice so as to do that you open the door for serious mistakes and serious scandals in legislation. Therefore I claim that from every standpoint the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill by paragraphs until he came to the provisions (beginning on page 8) under the heading, "Fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of Indian tribes."

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to know, Mr. Chairman, whether the point of order is to be made upon these items.

Mr. CANNON. Which one?

Mr. PERKINS. All of them. They are all for carrying out treaty stipulations.

Mr. CANNON. Well, here is one, for instance, on page 10:

For forty-fourth of forty-six installments, to be paid to Chief Hole-in-the-Day, or his heirs, per third article of treaty of August 2, 1847, and fifth article of treaty of March 19, 1867, $1,000.

As I understand it, that is an appropriation in pursuance of a treaty and of an estimate that is due the coming fiscal year.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not the estimate that gives jurisdiction to this committee or to this House.

Mr. CANNON. This, I understand, is for an estimate that is due the coming fiscal year.

Mr. PERKINS. It is the law and the treaty and the rules of this House that give jurisdiction to the House of these subjects, and not any estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, and, as suggested by the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. GIFFORD], if the point of order is well taken and is sustained as to the other item, it may as well be sustained as to all these items. These appropriations are made to fulfill treaty stipulations; that is the only authority there is for an appropriation of this kind. It is because of treaties heretofore made with these Indians that the Government of the United States is obligated to make this appropriation. If the point of order is well taken as to one of these items, it is well taken as to all. This question might as well be determined at once. I am not here to spend time upon the consideration of this bill if our committee has no jurisdiction of these subjects and if the point of order is to be sustained.

It may be that the Secretary of the Treasury submits estimates as to one of these items, while his attention may not be called to another; but that does not affect the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a fact that there is a law obligating the Government of the United States, in the judgment of the committee, to make this appropriation and this payment.

If the appropriation is wrong let it be voted down. But the obligation of the Government exists; the treaty was made, and in the judgment of the committee it binds the Government to make this appropriation. I can not understand upon what theory the point of order has been sustained; and it is in that view I call the attention of the Chair to these other items. If because the Secretary of the Treasury has not sent in a formal estimate, or because this is simply a treaty obligation, this matter must go to the Committee on Appropriations rather than to the Committee on Indian Affairs, there is no necessity of consuming further time in considering these provisions.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, what is there before the committee? Upon what does the gentleman make the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk was reading the bill. There is no point of order raised except the one which has been decided.

The Clerk read as follows:

This amount, to reimburse the Choctaw Orphan Reservation fund, being the sum taken from said fund on the 4th day of June, 1863, by order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and advanced to William G. Coffin, superintendent of Indian affairs for the southern superintendency, for the relief of loyal Cherokee Indians, $15,000: Provided, That said amount shall be reimbursed to the United States out of interest accruing to the Cherokee Nation on their funds held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving a point of order, I desire to ask from the gentleman in charge of the bill an explanation as to the origin and necessity of this item.

Mr. PERKINS. This provision has been inserted in the bill because without action by Congress on this subject the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Treasury has not authority to make this payment. In making a payment to these Indians some years ago a fund was used which ought not to have been used for the purpose.

Mr. PEEL rose.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has had more particular charge of this matter and given it personal investigation. I yield to him to explain it.

Mr. PEEL. It appears from an examination of the papers remaining in the Indian Office that in 1863 there was considerable destitution among the Cherokees, from whom a delegation came here applying for funds. It appears that none were available for the particular purpose, but for some reason, we can not tell what, an item of $15,000, which was standing to the credit of the Choctaw orphan fund, was placed in the hands of this agent, Mr. Coffin, who turned it over to the Cherokees.

The error of withdrawing the amount from this particular fund was not discovered until recently. The object of this provision is simply to place the amount to the credit of the Choctaw orphan fund, where it belongs, and to charge it to the account of the Cherokees. It is simply a transfer of the amount from one account to the other.

Mr. CANNON. It involves no expenditure from the Treasury?

Mr. PEEL. None at all.

Mr. CANNON. And the money was actually expended in 1863 for the benefit of the Cherokees?

Mr. PEEL. That is the statement from the Indian Office in a communication which I have in my desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the expenses of transportation of two hundred and seventy-four Creek Indians at $30 each, and subsistence for twelve months at $25 each for one hundred and sixty Creek Indians, said Indians being named and described in a list appended to the letter of A. B. Upshaw, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated 19th of June, 1888, set forth in Executive Document No. 198, Fiftyeth Congress, first session, and being entitled to the sums per capita due them under the treaty of —, 1826, and the treaty of —, 1832, with the Creek Indians, the sum of $12,220, to be paid to the person authorized to receive and pay out the same to the persons entitled thereto by the Legislature of the Creek tribe of Indians; and said sum shall be distributed only to the Indians named in said list, and shall be paid to them personally or their legal representatives, and the payment under this act shall be a full and final discharge of the United States from all further liability to any Indian of said tribe on account of any claim for transportation or subsistence under said treaties or under any act of Congress relating to said treaties.

Mr. CANNON. On the provision just read I desire to submit a point of order. It is upon its face a deficiency appropriation, not an appropriation for the coming fiscal year. The concluding clause, especially the language on page 15, deals, as the Chair will observe, in matters of legislation as well as appropriation.

Mr. PEEL. I am aware that this paragraph is very similar to the item which went out awhile ago on the point of order. I do not presume any member of the committee reporting this bill cares anything about this item except so far as justice dictates that this payment should be made. But as to the question of order raised here, I think the Chair, upon a full examination of the rules, will probably reverse the ruling he has heretofore made. I know he will unhesitatingly do so if convinced that the former ruling was a mistake.

The Chair will remember that two years ago the point of order was raised here upon the appropriation to pay the Choctaw judgment which we have discussed here to-day. The then occupant of the chair held that the rule, which was then exactly the same as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs that it is now, was broad enough to cover all these questions relating to appropriations for tribes of Indians and individual Indians also. I call the attention of the Chair to the language of clause 16, Rule XI:

"To the relations of the United States with Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor—to the Committee on Indian Affairs."

In that case there was simply a judgment of the court finding a certain amount due to the Choctaw Nation. The question arose upon a point of order as to what committee had jurisdiction. The gentleman from Missouri, who then had charge of the sundry civil bill—or the deficiency bill, I believe it was—made the point of order that the matter was a deficiency and therefore, under the rules, did not come within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. After a very elaborate discussion, participated in by several gentlemen who were understood to be learned in parliamentary law, the Chair overruled the point of order; and that decision was sustained (though not formally) by the then Speaker of the House, it being held that the language of the rules as I have just read it covered all matters due the Indians under treaty stipulations or due them as a matter of law.

Now, here is an item due these Creek Indians under a treaty. True there is language there that might be construed as legislation, but that can be treated as surplusage and might be stricken out. But I am speaking now entirely of the appropriation itself. I say it is due them under the treaty. The language which contains legislation in this item was put there simply as a caution against any claim of this character coming up hereafter, that it should be paid to the proper person or to the legal representatives of the person to whom it was due, or that the person or persons receiving it should receive it in full satisfaction, etc. Now, as to the appropriation itself, I repeat it is an item due under a treaty with these Indians. It stands as a law between the Government of the United States and the Indians themselves. It is fixed; it is not an unliquidated claim, but the treaty fixes the amount due the Indians. It can not be questioned that if they have done certain things they are entitled to certain compensation. It is not a matter of mathematical calculation, but it is a question that settles itself under the language of the treaty; because, Mr. Chairman, these Indians have gone out there at intervals, half a dozen or a dozen at one time, and after awhile another lot, and so on; but whenever any of them do go and comply with the obligation of the treaty by remaining there for the times specified in the treaty and subsisting themselves, this amount becomes due them under the law. All the Indian Office had to do was to determine whether the list made out by the commissioners was proper and that the Indians who went there paid their own transportation and subsisted themselves for twelve months, in which case they were entitled to this sum. There is the amount fixed by the treaty, and if the Committee on Indian Affairs is not the proper committee and can not appropriate for this item, then I do not know what committee can take jurisdiction of the matter. It seems to me that the mere statement of the question settles it.

It is not, therefore, a deficiency in the sense of the rule quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, because it is not the remnant of a conditional annual expense or a shortage; it does not apply and has no bearing upon a question relating to carrying on the ordinary expenses of the Government or to any ordinary charges upon the Treasury for the maintenance of the Government, but it is a payment due under the language of a treaty which is too explicit to admit of any dispute. The fact of the matter is that the Indian Bureau was not a function of the Government in the ordinary sense of the term. It was not created for that purpose. It is simply a bureau for the purpose of conducting the affairs of these wards of the nation; and it does not, therefore, belong to the rule as read in the statute by the gentleman, where reference is made to the three co-ordinate branches of the Government, for this certainly is not one of them. It is simply carrying out a treaty already in existence, complying with the obligations of the Government to pay these people.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I did not suppose that the former point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois was really submitted with any seriousness on the part of the gentleman. It did not seem to me that it could be insisted upon with propriety that the Committee on Indian Affairs did not have jurisdiction to appropriate money due under treaty obligations, whether that treaty was made last year or thirty-five years ago. I did not believe it could seriously be made, for the reason that such obligations are not barred by any statute of limitation, and that no matter whether the Government had defaulted or not defaulted in paying the Indians year after year, or whether it has promptly made this payment year by year, the same principle was involved. As suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas, the case which was referred to by the gentleman from Illinois was so prominent and so fresh in the recollection of all that I did not think he would insist with any seriousness on the point of order. Their claim, as stated by my friend from Arkansas, grew out of treaty obligations. It resulted from a treaty with these Indians, but it had been merged in a judgment.

The Choctaw Indians had been prosecuting that claim against the Government for years and years. The Government had defaulted in its obligation and had not paid the Indians what they insisted was due them; and so in the course of time Congress gave them the right to go into the courts and adjudicate and investigate, in a judicial manner, their claim. This resulted in a judgment against the Government and in favor of the Indians, growing out of treaties made thirty-five or forty years before that time, and during that time the Government had defaulted, so far as the payment was concerned. When that judgment was rendered and the claim presented to Congress, after investigation and consideration it naturally and promptly went into the Indian appropriation bill. The Speaker did not think of sending it to the Committee on Appropriations, because the consideration of matters connected with the Indians had been given to the Committee on Indian Affairs. And this being a matter growing out of treaty stipulations, and resulting from our relations with the Indians, it went, as a matter of right and necessity, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

So, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, it went originally and naturally and necessarily to the Indian Affairs Committee, and when the Committee on Indian Affairs reported the appropriation to pay that judgment the point of order was made against it, and this was the point of order made, it was an appropriation to pay a judgment. The gentleman from Missouri who made the point of order (Colonel Burnes) admitted at once that if it was to pay that which was due under treaty obligations it was in order and competent to be appropriated in that manner. But he argued that it had ceased to be a treaty obligation, that it had been merged in a judgment, and the proposition was to pay a judgment, and hence logically it should go to the Committee on Appropriations; that it had ceased to be a matter growing out of treaty, ceased to be a treaty obligation in any shape, and was merged in a higher obligation—that of a judgment against the Government.

But after argument even that point of order was not sustained, the Chairman then holding that it was his duty, logically and properly, to ascertain the antecedents of the debt, ascertain whether it grew out of treaty obligations or not, and if so, necessarily the Committee on Indian Affairs had jurisdiction. Ascertaining, therefore, that it did grow out of treaty obligations and in consequence of treaty obligations these Indians had succeeded in recovering judgment against the Government, the Chairman of the committee overruled the point of order, and no one, it seems to me, had any question as to the accuracy of the decision.

Now, here it is presumed or contended that this claim did not grow out of treaty obligations, and my friend from Illinois can not with any consistency argue that the Speaker of the House of Representatives should send such a claim to the Committee on Appropriations for their jurisdiction. This obligation grew out of relations with the Indians, resulting from our treaty with them because of the promises made them and because of the obligations entered into with them, and no committee has jurisdiction but the Indian Affairs Committee. The propriety of the legislation is one thing, but the right of the committee to report it is quite another. That they have a right to report it, and that the committee has jurisdiction, it seems to me can not be reasonably questioned. I repeat that I did not argue the other point of order with earnestness because I did not believe that it was insisted upon by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair desires to hear further from me I will submit the remark that this has all the force that the point of order I made with reference to the provision on page 9 had, which point of order the Chair sustained, with this difference, that this clause has legislation in it on page 15, as the Chair will discover by glancing at it. What is it? It is to pay the expenses of transportation of two hundred and seventy-four Creek Indians, at $30 each, and subsistence for twelve months, at $25 each, for one hundred and sixty Creek Indians, etc. Under what? It is under the treaties of 1826 and 1832. What for? Why, it is for transportation of these Creek Indians when they were removed to the Indian Territory over a generation ago. This claim has been slumbering through all these long years, and it now makes its first appearance upon this Indian appropriation bill, unless it is like the other, unless it has been reported in a private bill, and is on the Calendar in that form. And I will ask my friend from Arkansas what the fact is in regard to that.

Mr. PEEL. I do not remember; I do not think it is. This item passed the House last session. This item does not make its first appearance now. It passed the House in the appropriation bill in the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. It passed the House, but was knocked out in the Senate.

Mr. PEEL. I do not know why they knocked it out in the Senate. I do not think this has been placed in a private bill.

Mr. CANNON. It does not make any difference whether it has or not. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] said he did not think I was in earnest. I would be glad to know what I could say or do to convince the gentleman from Kansas that I am in earnest on the point of order I made. I made the point of order; I sustained it with all the earnestness I could muster, and I assigned half a dozen good reasons why it is subject to the point of order. The gentleman then falls back and says that it is something that is due to these people under treaty, and then he goes off at a tangent and says that all the provisions of the bill are subject to this point of order if this provision is. No, not at all. You have got many provisions in this bill providing for the Indians, under treaties, that are not subject to the point of order, because the provision is under treaty, where the treaty calls for service during the next fiscal year.

Mr. PERKINS. Does my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] contend that because the Government may have defaulted in its obligations that changes the rule and changes the jurisdiction of the subject? Does he contend that because the Government may not have been prompt in meeting its obligations, therefore the Committee on Indian Affairs has no jurisdiction?

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman not to confuse matters. The moment an appropriation goes upon an appropriation bill not necessary for the conduct of the Government for the coming fiscal year, that moment it becomes, in the language of the rule, a deficiency estimate and a deficiency appropriation. And this applies to all the Departments. Take the Post-Office Department. We passed the other day a bill appropriating $72,000,000 to carry on the Post-Office Department for the next year, but there is now pending in the Committee on Appropriations a bill carrying $12,000,000 for deficiencies for carrying the mails for the current year and for the last year. That goes where? Not to the Post-Office Committee, but under the rule, it being a deficiency bill, it goes to the Appropriations Committee. That is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy just a moment. That is the very distinction I attempted to draw awhile ago. This post-office appropriation is one that grows out of the constitutional provision as to our post-office system. It belongs to the Government. It is a shortage in current expenses. But this is not that character of a case. This is a specific item. It was just as large two years ago as it is now.

The very moment those Indians complied with the treaty which bound the Government to pay them this amount of money, when they defrayed their own expenses from east of Mississippi River to the west and supported themselves for twelve months, that moment under the treaty it became a fixed debt and due. Does the gentleman pretend to say that because it was not appropriated the next succeeding year it would be a deficiency? It just simply lies there unprovided for.

Mr. SAYERS. Is not the debt past due?

Mr. PEEL. It was due whenever the Indian Office ascertained the fact, and they ascertained the fact under that clause when the list was filed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Whenever it was established by the proper evidence, then those obligations were due. The obligation became fixed as provided in the treaty, and there is no other committee that has jurisdiction. Now, in all seriousness, I want to say to the Chair that we care nothing about this particular item. But if this rule is applied to this bill, then, as stated by the chairman on Indian Affairs, two-thirds of these provisions that we have been appropriating for from year to year, such as paying the interest on these trust funds, will be subject to the very same point of order, because they have no other legal force or effect except the treaty obligation, and are fixed as time rolls around under the provision that the debt shall become due. Why, according to the gentleman's argument, if one installment of interest on this trust fund was to lapse, was to be omitted this year and was to come up to have the total amount appropriated next year, would it be subject to the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. It would, sir.

Mr. PEEL. It certainly would not.

Mr. CANNON. That is, subject to the point of order if included in the annual appropriation bill. It would become a deficiency, because the year had passed when the money should have been appropriated.

Mr. PEEL. How would it be a deficiency, when it is no part of the current expenses of the Indian service? The Indian service is just as well executed, whether these appropriations are made or not. As far as the machinery of the bureau is concerned, if that is provided for, it would go on just the same whether the appropriation we are now considering is made or not. I hope the Chair will think seriously before he sustains the point of order on these items in this bill, because it is a very important matter and it will place these Indian claims in a very awkward attitude.

I want to call attention of the Chair to the Choctaw matter. There it was assumed that it had merged into the highest evidence of indebtedness; and it is technically so. The Chair held that as the original debt was incurred in pursuance of treaty stipulation that that obligation was in existence, and when the judgment was given it was merged into a higher state of evidence. Therefore, under clause 16 of Rule XI, which gives jurisdiction to the Committee on Indian Affairs, it would have jurisdiction over that matter, and in that way it would not be subject to the point of order. I can not for the life of me see how the item under consideration would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. If there is any doubt in the mind of the Chair upon this subject I would suggest that he reserve his decision until to-morrow, and that we now pass to the next paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very glad to take the benefit of that suggestion.

The Clerk read as follows:

CROWS.

For ninth of twenty-five installments, as provided in agreement with the Crows dated June 12, 1880, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner as the President may direct, $30,000.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to these matters commencing here and continuing to pages 17 and 18. Commencing here at line 15 I desire to make the point of order upon every one of these; but I think they may all be considered together.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest if the point of order is good as to one it is good as to all the others; so the several items may be read and the point of order made upon them at the close of the reading.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make the point of order on each one of the paragraphs, commencing at line 23 on page 16 and ending on page 18 at line 19.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you desire to argue the point of order now or let it go over?

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $36,800, in payment for twenty-three sections of half-breed Kaw lands, as provided in the fourteenth article of the treaty of July 4, 1866.

Mr. CANNON. I desire also to make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest that if the gentleman is willing to do so I would like him to make his argument so that the Chair might consider them all together.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] state the paragraph upon which he makes the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I make it to all these items. Here is a series of items, Mr. Chairman, that my eye now falls upon for the first time, that are new in bills of this kind, so far as I know, commencing at line 23 on page 16. There in the next clause are several general provisions for the payment of the Delaware Indians:

The sum of $36,800, in payment for twenty-three sections of half-breed Kaw lands, as provided in the fourteenth article of the treaty of July 4, 1866.

I take it that that is a mere claim, and not as being due to the Indians the coming fiscal year, if due to them at all.

The next one, not properly in this bill, is—

The sum of $36,402, in payment for stock stolen from said tribe, which payment is provided for in the fourteenth article of the said treaty of July 4, 1866.

Then comes a legislative declaration as to how it shall be paid:

Provided, That said sum shall be paid per capita to the persons or their heirs at law who actually lost said stock, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Interior to Congress, dated January 31, 1870.

That is twenty years ago. It seems there was a report of the Secretary of the Interior. I have not examined the matter; but if anything is due under that treaty for stock stolen that should come out of the Treasury it is not due the coming year by virtue of that treaty. It was due over twenty years ago, if due at all; and this is a mere claim, and a stale one at that, and has no business on a general appropriation bill. If it is a proper claim a deficiency bill would carry it.

The next paragraph—

The sum of $2,500 for ponies and cattle stolen from said tribe, indemnity for which is provided in the sixth article of the treaty of May 30, 1860.

I make the point that this was not stolen so that they would be entitled to the payment in the coming fiscal year. I do that without suggesting a doubt about their being entitled to pay at all; but it is a claim.

The next item is—

The sum of $39,675.16, of which $10,715.75 shall be paid to individual members of the said tribes for improvements upon lands sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company.

That is legislation. It tells how it shall be paid for under this treaty. From reading the whole of that paragraph it will be seen that this money, if due them by virtue of any treaty, is not due to be paid the coming fiscal year. Then the proviso to that clause on page 18, as the Chair will notice, is legislation again.

The next paragraph is—

That the above and several sums be paid to said Delaware Indians as herein provided, less the amount due the delegate or delegates of said Indians by virtue of contracts approved in Department of the Interior.

That is legislation. What equity does that settle? Who are the delegates? What kind of contracts have the delegates got? How much of these claims, if appropriated, do these delegates get? I do not know. They are claims.

Then the next—

And the Attorney-General is hereby authorized and directed to institute the necessary legal proceedings against the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, its successors or assigns, for recovery of the amounts heretofore found by the Department of the Interior to be due from said railroad company, its successor or assigns, under the last paragraph of the second article of the treaty with the Delaware tribe of Indians of May 30, 1860.

If due, they are not due the coming fiscal year. Who due from? From the railroad company to the Indians. That is legislation again.

Now the next—

And under the concluding clause of the third article of said treaty, and for damage done the said Indians in the taking and destruction of their property by said railroad company, which sums when recovered shall be used to reimburse the United States for the sum appropriated in the foregoing paragraph of this bill.

Legislation again, not in order upon a general appropriation bill.

It provides that the Government shall advance money and pay these stale old claims, and that then the Attorney-General may sue the Western Railway Company, which dates back to 1860. I do not know about the matter, but if I were a betting man I would bet four to one that it has no solvent corporate existence.

Mr. PEEL. I will take the bet. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know how that will be; but, Mr. Chairman, this whole thing is legislation; not for a regular appropriation under the rules of this House, but for the settlement of stale claims; not estimated for as the law provides, and it ought to have no place in this bill. Therefore I make the point of order that each of these paragraphs should be struck out, making my point of order separately upon each distinct paragraph and collectively upon the whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be obliged if the gentleman will restate exactly his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I make the point against each paragraph, and then I make it against them all collectively. Some of them, in the hasty reading, are grouped together and one belongs with another.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the claims that are provided for in these paragraphs to which my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] objects are old claims, and if, because of their antiquity, or because they have not been contracted within the last twelve months, the Government of the United States is not in duty bound to pay them and to respect its obligations to these Indians, and if, in consequence of that, the Committee on Indian Affairs has no jurisdiction of the subject, then I confess that the point of order should be sustained. But that has not been the understanding of the Committee on Indian Affairs, nor do I think it will be the understanding or the decision of the Chair.

I do not believe the Chair will hold that because the Government of the United States has failed for ten or fifteen years to discharge its obligations to these Indians, therefore it should continue to fail to discharge those obligations. During my service in Congress these claims have been pending from year to year and from term to term, and no Speaker of this House has ever thought of sending them to any other committee for consideration and investigation than the Committee on Indian Affairs. No Speaker of this House ever thought of sending those claims to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me a remark right there?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. As a claim to be dealt with by the introduction of a private bill to be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and to be reported as a claim, to be considered as other claims are considered, the Committee on Indian Affairs may have jurisdiction of any of these items, if the reference is made by bill or otherwise; but I beg of the gentleman to make the distinction between the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs for that class of business and the jurisdiction of the same committee to report a general appropriation bill, for there is a wide difference between the two.

Mr. PERKINS. The Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction of all matters relating to the Indians and charge of the annual Indian appropriation bill, and, as I have suggested, these claims have been pending from year to year and have been referred to the appropriate committee by the several Speakers of this House and no Speaker has ever thought of sending them to any other committee than the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee has investigated the claims and has found them to be meritorious. It found these claims substantiated by proofs that could not be controverted. The committee in the Forty-eighth Congress, and again in the Forty-ninth Congress, reported them favorably, but they were not reached for consideration on the floor of the House, and hence the Indians did not get what in the judgment of the committee was due them, and they have not got it up to this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] state whether these claims, when heretofore presented, were placed upon general appropriation bills?

Mr. PERKINS. They were not. The claim that was discussed a few moments ago was incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill of last year as it passed the House, but it was stricken out by the Senate for some reason or other, I do not know just what. I have never investigated to ascertain the reason, but, as I have said, the item was put upon the appropriation bill so far as the House Committee on Indian Affairs was concerned, and was passed by the House. These claims have been investigated from year to year, as I have suggested, and have been found to be meritorious; but this argument goes more perhaps to the propriety of the legislation than to its right to a place in this bill.

Now, as suggested by the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. GIFFORD] a while ago, there were pending before the House Committee on Indian Affairs obligations under the treaties and other measures involving in the aggregate probably $15,000,000, some of them growing out of recent negotiations with the Indians, some of them growing out of old negotiations, but all pending before that committee for investigation and action; and that committee could, in my judgment, with perfect propriety under the rules, have incorporated every single one of these items in this bill and reported appropriation for their payment. It was only a question of expediency with the committee.

The appropriation due the Sioux Indians resulting from the purchase of their great reservation in Dakota is pending before the committee, and they could with entire propriety so far as the rules are concerned have incorporated here a provision making an appropriation for that object, but, believing that it would receive due consideration upon the floor of the House at the proper time, they did not make it a part of this bill; and so with many other meritorious measures that have been referred to that committee for investigation and which might with entire propriety under the rules be made a part of this bill. But yet, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if we make an exception in favor of any one, that encourages those who are interested in other measures to come and press the committee that they shall also be inserted in the appropriation bill and provided for in that way, so, in most instances, we have refused these petitions and requests and have confined the bill to the current appropriations.

But the right of the committee to include in the bill these items incorporated here can not, it seems to me, be questioned. I do not understand the logic or the consistency of the gentleman from Illinois in maintaining that because this obligation was contracted several years ago, and has been ignored by the Government of the United States until now, ergo it can not be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill. The fact that the obligation has remained unpaid for several years does not discharge or change that obligation, and in my judgment does not take from the Committee on Indian Affairs jurisdiction of the matter; nor does it take from us the right to put it in the Indian appropriation bill, if in the judgment of the committee it is properly a part of that bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? Because we want to get at the correct rule.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman is correct in his view as to what can be placed on a general appropriation bill, the same considerations apply to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with reference to the Post-Office appropriation bill, to the Committee on Military Affairs with regard to the Army bill, to the Committee on Naval Affairs with regard to the naval bill, to the Committee on Agriculture as to the agricultural appropriation bill, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and to the Appropriations Committee proper in regard to the other general appropriation bills. According to the rule which the gentleman lays down, there is no possible claim which may have arisen under treaty or upon contract, from the foundation of the Government down to the present time, that it would not be competent, under the rules of the House, to place upon one of these privileged general appropriation bills.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; the proposition of my friend from Illinois is very different from the one which I have submitted, although if, for instance, the Committee on Foreign Affairs in making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service should find that an appropriation of the preceding year had resulted in a deficiency somewhere, and if the committee should propose to provide for that deficiency in its regular appropriation bill I doubt whether a point of order could be made against it with any consistency or propriety. But I only make that suggestion as an answer to the proposition the gentleman has put.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me a moment. We have now pending in our committee hundreds of estimates covering the Indian service, the Army, the Navy, and foreign affairs, not for the next fiscal year, but for past fiscal years. We have already appropriated nearly $30,000,000 for deficiencies, and there are more to follow. Does the gentleman claim that the jurisdiction of these deficiency appropriations is concurrent? The rule does not so state.

Mr. PERKINS. The Committee on Indian Affairs has not jurisdiction as a rule over appropriations for the pay of clerks and other employes in the Indian Office. Certain employes are provided for in the Indian appropriation bill, but as to clerks in the Indian Office the Indian appropriation bill carries no appropriation. So there is much of this service which legitimately and properly goes to the Committee on Appropriations; and if there should be a deficiency in that portion of the service it would go to that committee. But as to the items carried under the rules of the House in the annual appropriation bill coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs, it seems to me there can be no question that should a deficiency result in these appropriations the Committee on Indian Affairs would have jurisdiction of the matter. So as to these obligations growing out of treaties, growing out of statutes, growing out of contracts made with the Indians with the approval and consent of Congress, there can not be in my judgment any doubt that the Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction of those subjects; and in my mind there is no question as to the power of the Committee on Indian Affairs to appropriate in this annual appropriation bill to meet such obligations and discharge the duty of the Government to these Indians.

As I suggested some time ago, it seems to me the rule is not changed because the Government may have been derelict or unmindful in regard to its obligations for a year or several years. That does not change the obligation and does not change the power of the committee to provide for it in this bill. The Chair will observe, on examination of the rule, that the jurisdiction of our committee is not confined to those matters which have arisen during the preceding twelve months or which result from contracts or treaties made during that period. But, according to the language of the rule, subjects relating "to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor," belong properly to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Here is an obligation growing out of a treaty made years ago with these Indians. In view of the arguments submitted by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] and others and of the precedent which he cited, and to which I called attention a few moments ago, a conspicuous precedent which we have been referring to for a year or more as settling questions of this kind for all time, it seems to me there should be no doubt on this question of order. The precedent referred to was established in the case of an appropriation to satisfy a judgment carrying in the aggregate almost $3,000,000. It was argued that the Committee on Indian Affairs had not jurisdiction of the subject-matter, had no authority to report an appropriation to pay such indebtedness, because while it arose from treaty obligation it had merged into an obligation of a higher order and had become a judgment against the Government. It was argued that therefore it should go to the Committee on Appropriations. It was admitted at that time by the gentleman from Missouri who made the point of order, and was admitted generally in the debate, that, if the Chair should hold the obligation was one simply growing out of treaty obligation, there would be no question as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs to provide for it in the Indian appropriation bill. And it was upon that theory that the point of order was overruled and the jurisdiction of the Indian Committee sustained by the gentleman then occupying the chair.

Now, these claims never have been merged in judgment. They grow out of treaty obligations and stand here with the merit sustaining them that they possess because of the treaty on which they are based and by which the Government is clearly obligated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Kansas will permit me to interrupt him, it is evident there is no quorum present, and as it is half past 5 o'clock—

Mr. PERKINS. I thought perhaps we might discuss the point of order this evening a little later.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman is willing to resume the argument of the point of order in the morning—

Mr. PERKINS. We will not proceed much further to-night.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Because there is evidently no quorum present.

Mr. PERKINS. I will not ask the committee to sit much longer.

Mr. PEEL. I would like to be heard, Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules on the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This is evidently quite an important matter, and, although many of us may not desire to participate in the debate, still we would all like to hear the discussion.

Mr. PEEL. If it can be understood that I may be heard for a short time to-morrow I would much prefer to do so than to go on to-night.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair desires to lay before the House a report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills and some personal requests of members.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 3871) granting a pension to Kate Woodbridge Michaelis.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'FERRALL, for two days.

To Mr. PENINGTON, indefinitely.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR BARGE OTTAWA.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to ask unanimous consent to consider a bill, and I will withdraw the motion to adjourn for that purpose.

Mr. YARDLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3571) to provide an American register for the barge Ottawa, of Philadelphia, Pa. I ask that this bill be substituted for House bill No. 9415, of the same title.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built barge Ottawa, owned by Frank D. Zell, of Philadelphia, Pa., an American citizen, and rebuilt by him, to be registered as a vessel of the United States under the name of the schooner-barge Venus.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill or to its passage, but I would like to know why this exception should be made. Some statement ought to be given to show the necessity for it at least.

Mr. YARDLEY. I do not know of any, except that it has been done in other cases and under similar circumstances.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Each case is a special case, resting upon its own special reasons, because, unless there were special reasons for doing this thing, there would be no necessity of retaining the act of Congress. Will the gentleman state what are the special facts in this case to warrant the action requested?

Mr. YARDLEY. The report is very short and I think, perhaps, will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I supposed an explanation on the part of the gentleman would be briefer.

Mr. YARDLEY. The vessel was wrecked outside of American waters and certain repairs were made in an American port. All of the acts of Congress have been complied with, and it is necessary that this provision should pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. All right; I hope you will register all of them.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the bill H. R. 9415, on the same subject, will be laid on the table.

ENSIGN J. B. BERNARDOU.

Mr. WILKINSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, be, and hereby is, authorized to receive two flower vases presented to him by the Government of Japan in recognition of services rendered by him to Japanese citizens at an outbreak at Seoul, Korea, in December, 1894.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out the name of "Bernardou," in the third line of the bill, and insert "Bernardou."

Also, amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, the amendment agreed to, and as amended the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was adopted.

Mr. WILKINSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. PERKINS (at 5 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3740) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Pierre, in Hughes County, and Fort Pierre, in Stanley County, in the State of South Dakota—to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

Mr. FLICK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the Senate (S. 3414) granting a pension to James Melvin, accompanied by a report (No. 2463)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CRAIG, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the bill of the House (H. R. 9590) granting a pension to Matilda Evans, accompanied by a report (No. 2464)—to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LAWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably the following bills of the Senate; which were severally referred to the Committee of the Whole House:

A bill (S. 3756) for the relief of William Elmendorf. (Report No. 2465.)

A bill (S. 1740) granting a pension to Mary J. Welch, an army nurse in the late war. (Report No. 2466.)

Also, petition of George S. Bishop and 30 others, in favor of same measure—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 18, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 12, 1890, a report of the Chief of Engineers upon the improvement of the harbor at Buffalo, N. Y., together with the views of vessel owners in relation thereto; which was read.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the communication, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter of transmittal, with the report of the Chief of Engineers, will be printed.

CLERKS TO SENATE COMMITTEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Senate, transmitting, in response to a resolution of June 17, 1890, a list of the names of all annual clerks to Senate committees during the year ending March 4, 1890, etc.; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the president and members of the faculty of Howard University, and 37 other residents of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of a law to prevent pool selling and other gambling in the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARLISLE. I present a petition of the Wool-Consumers' Association, of Boston, Mass., praying for a reduction or abolition of the duty on wool. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance, and printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the memorial of Wade, Davis & Co., and other manufacturing jewelers in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the proposed increase of duty on imitation stones; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of citizens of Polk County, Iowa; a petition of citizens of Ida County, Iowa; a petition of citizens of Clay County, Iowa; a petition of citizens of Buena Vista County, Iowa; a petition of Thomas Gurney and other citizens of the State of Iowa; a petition of citizens of Sac County, Iowa; a petition of citizens of Monona County, Iowa, and a petition of citizens of Plymouth County, Iowa, praying for the passage of a bill making it unlawful to transport liquors from any State or Territory of the United States into any other State or Territory contrary to the laws thereof; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of mechanics, workingmen, and business men, citizens of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island and Moline, Ill., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the interstate commerce law to the effect that no freight shall be charged on packages or barrels in which oil is shipped from the East to the West, for the reason that such an amendment would injure the manufacture of barrels in the West; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of Peiro Farmers' Alliance, of Woodbury County, Iowa, favoring the passage of the Conger land bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the Farmers' Alliance of Saunders County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of the Conger land bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MORRILL. I present sundry memorials from citizens of Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and Vermont, remonstrating against the imposition of an increased duty on tin-plate. They are in the usual printed form, and, as the tariff bill will be reported this morning, I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of Sheridan Post 161, Grand

Army of the Republic, of Arkansas, praying for the passage of a bill for the relief of Joshua S. Cox; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CASEY presented resolutions of the North Dakota Baptist Association, favoring such Congressional enactments as will guaranty to the State of North Dakota and to every other State the right to enforce prohibitory laws; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of Henry C. Anthony and 53 others, citizens of Portsmouth, R. I., and the petition of Harry A. Tallman and 101 others, citizens of Portsmouth, R. I., praying for the proposal of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of G. W. Warren Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Newport, R. I., praying for the transfer of the revenue marine to the Navy; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Carpenters and Joiners' Union of Narragansett Pier, R. I., praying for the passage of a law to establish shorter hours of labor; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Rhode Island, remonstrating against the extraordinary expenditure of public moneys for military and naval purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Bosworth Post, No. 2, Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, of Portland, Me., praying for the passage of the bill to transfer the revenue-cutter service to the Navy; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MOODY presented petitions of 76 citizens of Brûlé County, South Dakota, and 37 citizens of Chamberlain, S. Dak.; petitions of 62 citizens of Lake County, South Dakota; 94 citizens of Davison County, South Dakota, and 52 citizens of Hughes County, South Dakota; petition of 132 citizens of Spink County, South Dakota; petition of 56 citizens of Brookings County, South Dakota; petition of 56 citizens of Bon Homme County, South Dakota; petitions of 56 citizens of Douglas County, South Dakota; 31 citizens of Sully County, South Dakota, and 25 citizens of Codington County, South Dakota, praying for the passage of a bill prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia into any other State or Territory contrary to and in violation of the laws thereof; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9416) to reduce the revenue and equalize the duties on imports, and for other purposes. I will state that it is not expected that this bill will be brought up for consideration earlier than a week from Monday next, and that the tables required by the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be ready probably within about four days.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any written report accompanying the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. There has not been any written report prepared. I will say to the Senator that a report, a very elaborate one, was made two years ago, and as the bill is substantially about the same as the measure reported by the Senate committee two years ago, perhaps there may not be a written report.

Mr. COCKRELL. When will the table called for by the resolution of the Senate be prepared?

Mr. MORRILL. I have already stated that I thought it would be here in about four days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred three petitions of members of the Grand Army of the Republic and citizens of New York, praying for the passage of Senate bill 3146, to insure the preference of veterans in appointment to and retention in office, asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions, and that they be referred to the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service; which was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2306) releasing S. H. Brooks, assistant treasurer of the United States, and his sureties on his official bond, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5674) for the relief of Frank A. Lee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9486) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments; and I submit a written report, as required by the rules of the Senate, on every item of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred a message of the President on the subject of the eighth article of the treaty between the United States and Sweden and Norway made in 1827, to report an original bill on the subject, together with a written report. I send up all the papers with the bill.

The bill (S. 4102) to give effect to the eighth article of the treaty of commerce and navigation with Sweden and Norway of July 4, 1827, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 102) to print the annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the agricultural appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 4103) granting a pension to Joseph A. McKinsey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4104) granting an increase of pension to Michael Lane; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4105) authorizing the construction of a jail and reformatory for women in and for the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. I introduce a bill by request of an organization described as the Wage-Workers' Political Alliance; which I ask may be twice read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The bill (S. 4106) to establish a Department of Transportation, and for other purposes was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 4107) authorizing the President of the United States to grant an honorable discharge to William L. Lenau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 4108) granting an increase of pension to Watson Weldon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEARST introduced a bill (S. 4109) for the final adjustment of certain accounts arising in the Indian service in Arizona by payment of the amounts found due therein by the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 103) relative to the confirmation of certain land titles in Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HEARST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3955) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated and to provide for the payment of all claims for the use and occupation of church, college, and school buildings for Government purposes by the United States military authorities during the late war, and the value of any such buildings destroyed during such occupation by the United States, and all claims for repairs to any such buildings and the furniture of same rendered necessary by such occupation by the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. I present, by request, certain amendments to the bill (S. 3833) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations, reported by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MOODY] from the Select Committee on Indian Depredations. In some of the amendments proposed I concur, and in some I do not, but they have been prepared by some gentlemen who have given great attention to the subject. The paper presented is a complete bill in itself, showing the parts to be stricken out and inserted. For that reason I ask consent of the Senate to have it printed as presented.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

REMOVALS BY SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. QUAY. I offer a resolution, and ask the Senate to proceed to its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to make no changes in his subordinates, appointees, or employees, prior to 1st July proximo, without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let that lie over.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. QUAY. I will say in explanation that we have had the resignation of the Sergeant-at-Arms to take effect in ten days or two weeks, and that a series of changes already seems to have been commenced. It is well known that the vacancy has already been filled by the selection of a highly distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, who will be thoroughly able to deal with these questions when he assumes the duties of his office; and I think for the protection of those who happen to be antagonized by the present Sergeant-at-Arms the resolution should be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. Let it lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is objected to, and will go over and be printed.

EULOGIES ON DECEASED REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I ask attention to a statement that I made as to the arrangements for Thursday, to-morrow, at which there is to be a commemoration of my deceased colleagues. The commemoration of my deceased colleague, Mr. Cox, will be postponed for a week further, and to-morrow we shall proceed with the commemoration of Mr. Nutting and Mr. Wilber.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3571) to provide an American register for the barge Ottawa, of Philadelphia, Pa.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 209) to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3871) granting a pension to Kate Woodbridge Michaelis, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 17th instant approved and signed the act (S. 2784) to amend section 204 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia.

HOUSE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 166) authorizing Ensign J. B. Bernardou, United States Navy, to accept two vases presented to him by the Government of Japan was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TRUSTS AND COMBINATIONS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That both Houses recede from their respective amendments.
GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. B. TAYLOR,
J. W. STEWART,
D. B. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PURCHASERS OF OMAHA LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I appeal to the Senator from Iowa, before calling up the legislative appropriation bill, that he permit me to ask for and secure action upon a House bill on the Calendar, for the reason that there is an emergency requiring its passage. It is a bill to extend the time of payment to purchasers of lands of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes. The time for payment expires on the 30th of this month. The Committee on Indian Affairs has reported the House bill, with certain amendments to make the bill operative. It is essential that it shall become a law by the 30th day of June, and under these circumstances I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to call up the bill and ask the consent of the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. The view being to allow settlers further time to make payments?

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel constrained to yield if it will take no time.

Mr. MANDERSON. It will take no time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, after the word "due," at the end of line 16, to insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall retain in the Treasury all moneys heretofore and that may hereafter be paid as principal under the act approved August 7, 1882, and shall pay over 5 per cent. thereof annually to the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended by him annually for the benefit of said Indians as prescribed in section 3 of said act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay all interest now in the Treasury to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him paid over to said tribe, to be distributed to the members thereof pro rata by the agent of said tribe, and all interest hereafter coming into the Treasury shall be paid over and distributed to said tribe annually in like manner.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend the committee's amendment by the words I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 24 of the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, after the word "interest," it is proposed to strike out "now in the Treasury" and insert "has been paid on lands sold under said act;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay all interest that has been paid on lands sold under said act to the Secretary of the Interior, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 29, after the word "act," to strike out "above mentioned" and insert "of August 7, 1882;" so as to read:

And provided, That the said act of August 7, 1882, except as changed or modified by this act, shall remain in full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. MORGAN were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALEXANDRIA, LA.

Mr. GIBSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out all of the amendment and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fire-proof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Alexandria and State of Louisiana, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $60,000.

"Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

"Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

"If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

"The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

"No money shall be used for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the state of Louisiana shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

"The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate as to the title, and agree to the same.

R. L. GIBSON,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate,
HERMAN LEHLBACH,
DANIEL KERR,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. DANIEL. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, First. That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to inquire and report what additional public buildings in the city of Washington are needed for the General Government to carry on properly its necessary business and preserve and protect the public records, the estimated cost thereof and in connection therewith report the sums annually expended by the several Departments of the Government for rented buildings in the city of Washington.

Second. That the said committee do report, on or before the first Monday in December next, such legislation as may in their opinion be necessary in the premises.

Third. That if it be necessary to carry out the objects of this inquiry, said committee or a subcommittee be authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that resolution might go over until to-morrow morning. It is morning business. I do not know the scope of it and I do not know that I am opposed to it at all.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask leave in a few words to explain the resolution. It is very obvious—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield for that purpose?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator can explain it to-morrow morning in the regular morning business.

Mr. DANIEL. I shall not be present to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I yield to the Senator, but I hope he will be brief.

Mr. DANIEL. If there is any objection to it I shall not insist.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object.

Mr. DANIEL. I shall only remark that it is very obvious to any one who has paid the least attention to the subject that the Government is exceedingly cramped and has not sufficient accommodations in the way of public buildings for the conduct of business, and many of the Departments are crowded, and every month and year—

Mr. ALLISON. I have read the resolution and I do not object to it. I think it is a proper resolution.

Mr. DANIEL. Every month and year that this is neglected will subject the Government to additional inconvenience and greatly enhance the expense. The sooner we attend to what is indispensably necessary for the good conduct of business the more economical and the better it will be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the Senator modify the resolution by directing the committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Secretary insert the words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the second subdivision of the resolution, before the words "such legislation," insert "by bill or otherwise;" so as to read:

That the said committee do report on or before the first Monday of December next, by bill or otherwise, such legislation as may in their opinion be necessary in the premises.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT LEWIS RESERVATION.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to allow me to call up Senate bill 3596. It is to grant the right of way across a military reservation. The railroad company is already building the road. They have got a license to go across, but they want the right of way. The bill is No. 1585 on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. If it does not lead to debate I shall yield to the Senator from Colorado, as he has been pretty busy of late.

Mr. TELLER. It will not lead to debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3596) granting to the Rio Grande Southern Railroad Company the right of way through the Fort Lewis military reservation in La Plata County, in the State of Colorado.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Rio Grande Southern Railway Company, a corporation created by the State of Colorado, be, and hereby is, permitted and authorized to locate, construct, equip, operate, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the United States military reservation in La Plata County of said State, known as the Fort Lewis military reservation, not exceeding 100 feet in width, subject to such conditions and requirements as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War; and as soon as said company has selected such line and right of way it shall present to and file with the Secretary of War a correct map or plat showing such located line for the consideration and approval or rejection and modification, as may be deemed necessary, by the Secretary of War; and no work of construction shall be commenced on or through said reservation until the selection of the route or line of such road shall be approved by the Secretary of War. Said company shall have the right, subject to the restrictions, limitations, and prohibitions deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, to take from any lands adjacent to said right of way such stone and earth as may be necessary for the construction and repair of said railway, but no timber; and the said company shall also have the right, for not exceeding one station for every 10 miles of said road through said reservation, to use and occupy such additional ground adjacent to the right of way, for station buildings, depots, shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, as may be deemed necessary and be approved by the Secretary of War, not to exceed 200 feet in width in addition to said right of way nor 3,000 feet in length, for the station; and the sites for such depots, etc., shall be approved by the Secretary of War before any work shall be commenced.

SEC. 2. That the right is expressly reserved to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2865) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5183) for the relief of Dabney, Simmons & Co.;

A bill (H. R. 6018) for the relief of Thomas B. McElwee;

A bill (H. R. 8392) for the relief of William D. Matthews;

A bill (H. R. 9048) to confirm the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein; and

A bill (H. R. 9523) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

PRIVATE CLAIMS AGAINST FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, First, that all private claims of citizens of the United States against foreign Governments presented to the Senate by petition or otherwise shall be referred to the committee now styled the Committee to Inquire into Claims of Citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua, which shall be hereafter styled the Committee on Private Claims against Foreign Governments, and is hereby made a standing committee of the Senate.

Second, said committee shall receive any proofs that shall be offered in support of any such private claim and refer the same to the Department of State for consideration as to the legality and value of the same as evidence, and if said committee shall make any recommendation in respect of any such claim the same shall be reported to the Senate for consideration.

INDIAN LANDS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 16th instant, relating to the negotiations by the Cherokee Commission for the purchase of certain lands in the Indian Territory, I respectfully state that on the 24th day of May and the 12th day of June, respectively, agreements were signed by the Iowa and the Sac and Fox tribes, ceding to the United States certain of their lands. The contracts and accompanying papers were received at the Interior Department on the 2d and 17th days of June, respectively, and are now under examination by the proper officers of that Department. When these examinations are concluded the papers will, if found to be complete and conformable to law, be submitted to Congress.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 18, 1890.

BENJ. HARRISON.

REPORT OF AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting the annual report of the American Historical Association; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the report of the American Historical Association for the year ending

December 31, 1889, 4,500 extra copies, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Smithsonian Institution and the American Historical Association.

UNVEILING OF THE HENDRICKS MONUMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

The Vice-President and Senate of the United States:

The executive committee of the Hendricks Monument Association requests the honor of your presence at the unveiling of the monument to the memory of the late Thomas A. Hendricks, at Indianapolis, on Tuesday afternoon, July 1, 1890, at 2 o'clock.

The recipient of this invitation, if expecting to attend, will please so notify the committee, in order that seats may be reserved on the platform.

Address:

JOHN A. HOLMAN, Secretary.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. REAGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 9066.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the mere formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments may be first considered, and considered in regular order as the bill is read. That is the usual method, and I hope it will be agreed to unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Senate," on page 1, line 10, after the word "for," to strike out "salaries" and insert "compensation;" so as to read:

For compensation of eighty-four Senators, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "Senate," to strike out "three hundred and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars and ten" and insert "four hundred thousand eight hundred and forty-four dollars and ninety;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, $400,844.90, namely: etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert "one telegraph page, at $720, under resolution of the Senate of February 28, 1890," and in line 13, after the word "all," to strike out "four thousand eight hundred and sixty" and insert "five thousand five hundred and eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Vice-President: For secretary to the Vice-President, $2,200; for messenger, $1,440; telegraph operator, $1,200; one telegraph page, at $720, under resolution of the Senate of February 28, 1890; in all $5,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for office of Secretary of the Senate, on page 2, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seven" and insert "six," and in line 23, after the word "dollars," to strike out "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to read:

Hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 3, line 7, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks, at $2,100 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 14, to increase the total amount of appropriations for office of Secretary of the Senate from "$62,418.90" to "$64,418.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for clerks and messengers to committees of the Senate, on page 3, line 17, before the word "thousand," to insert "two;" so as to read:

Clerks and messengers to committees: For clerk of printing records, $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 10 on page 4. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PADDOCK in the chair). In line 4 the word "an" will be changed to "and."

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee I move to add, after line 10, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 10, after the word "each," it is proposed to insert:

Assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims, $1,440, under resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, on page 5, line 3, after the word "each," to insert:

Six additional messengers, at $1,440 each, under resolution of the Senate of April 22, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 5, line 13, after the word "each," to insert:

Three additional skilled laborers, at $1,000 each, under resolution of the Senate of April 22, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 5, line 21, after the word "each," to insert:

Three additional laborers, at $720 each, under resolution of the Senate of April 22, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, on page 6, line 5, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate from "$94,211.20" to "$109,011.20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for post-office of the Senate, on page 6, line 12, after the word "each," to insert:

Two additional mail-carriers, during the session, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, under resolution of the Senate of March 4, 1890, $808.80.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to modify the amendment. In line 13, I move to strike out the words "during the session, at the rate of," before the word "one," in the same line, to insert "at," and in line 15, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety," to strike out "$808.80;" so as to read:

Two additional mail-carriers at $1,200 per annum, under resolution of the Senate of March 4, 1890.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 18, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for post-office of the Senate from "$15,788" to "$16,596.80."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to change the total to $18,188.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. There is no objection to its being laid aside.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside informally, and that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be laid aside informally, and the Senate will proceed with the appropriation bill.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "folding-room" of the Senate, on page 7, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Six additional folders, during the session, at $3 per day while actually employed, under resolution of the Senate of March 4, 1890, $2,178.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 13, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "folding-room" of the Senate from "$12,130" to "$14,308."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 8, line 1, before the words "clerks," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-six;" in the same line, after the word "at," to strike out "$6 per day during the session" and insert "$1,500 each;" and in line 3, after the word "each," to strike out "eighteen thousand one hundred and fifty" and insert "thirty-nine thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-six clerks to committees, at $1,500 each, $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 6, after the word "committees," to strike out "during the session" and insert "at one thousand five hundred each;" and in line 7, after the word "each," to strike out "twenty-one thousand seven hundred and eighty" and insert "fifty-two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,500 each, $52,500.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will agree to amend their amendment by striking out the word "five," in line 2, page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight," the effect of which would be simply to pay these clerks to committees $1,800 per annum instead of $1,500, as proposed by the committee.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that will be done.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been passed, and we are now on the next paragraph.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I ask that it be considered open.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is to be a controversy on that subject, I think we should have a fuller Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let it go over, then.

Mr. STEWART. That can be considered as open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Oregon to withdraw his amendment temporarily.

Mr. MITCHELL. The chairman of the committee says the matter can go over and be considered later on with a fuller Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. The amendment of the Senator from Oregon would strike out "five," in line 6, and insert, "eight," as well as in line 2?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly; it relates to both paragraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two paragraphs may be passed over temporarily.

Mr. ALLISON. If this question is to be opened up, I think we may as well decide it at one time as another.

Mr. MITCHELL. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations did the best they could with this matter of committee clerks and clerks to Senators, and have increased the present compensation as much as the committee believed it ought to be increased at this session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not desire now to get into much of a controversy—

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that so far as I am concerned, representing the Committee on Appropriations, I desire to have no controversy about it. It is a matter that concerns the whole body of the Senate. We have, as will be seen, increased very largely the expenses of the Senate by these two amendments; and if Senators are not satisfied with what we have done, then we must leave them to their own view respecting it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I wish in a word to call the attention of the Senate to the facts to show how great an injustice, as it seems to me, this works in reference to certain clerks and in reference to certain Senators and certain committees. There are fifty-three committees, all told, in the Senate, including those that are permanent and those that are special. Of those fifty-three committees twenty-five have annual clerks, and have had for some time. None of those clerks are paid less than $1,440, and only two of them so low as that, and their compensation runs up as high as $3,000 per annum.

Mr. DOLPH. Those who are paid $1,440 are assistant clerks.

Mr. MITCHELL. Those are assistant clerks.

Mr. DOLPH. No annual clerk to a standing committee is paid less than $2,220.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was about to state that no clerk of a standing committee is paid less than $2,220 per annum, while at least one of them, the principal clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, is paid $3,000. There is an assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, which we all agree is very necessary and proper, and he is paid $2,220. The Committee on Printing has an annual clerk who is paid $2,220; the Committee on Finance has an annual clerk who is paid $2,500; the Committee on Claims has an annual clerk paid $2,220, and I believe it has had an assistant all the while also.

Mr. ALLISON. Since last winter.

Mr. MITCHELL. Since last winter, the chairman tells me. The Committee on Commerce has a principal clerk who is paid $2,220, and an assistant clerk who is paid $1,440. The Judiciary Committee has a principal clerk who is paid $2,220. That committee, I believe, also has an assistant clerk most of the time, perhaps all the while. As to the Committee on Private Land Claims, there is not very much business, I presume, in that committee, but it has an annual clerk who receives $2,220. The Committee on Pensions (of course there is a great deal of work in that committee, as we all agree) has a principal clerk who is paid $2,220, and an assistant clerk who is paid $1,440.

The Committee on Military Affairs has an annual clerk who is paid $2,220; the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has an annual clerk who is paid $2,220; the Committee on the District of Columbia has an annual clerk who is paid at the same rate, $2,220; the Committee on the Library has an annual clerk at $2,220, and the Committee on Naval Affairs also. The Committee on Foreign Relations has an annual clerk who is paid $2,220, and it has an assistant clerk, I think, most of the time. The Committee on Public Lands has an annual clerk at $2,220; the Committee on Contingent Expenses has a clerk at $2,220; the Committee on Indian Affairs has a clerk at the same rate; and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds also. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has an annual clerk at $2,220; the Committee on Education and Labor has an annual clerk at $2,220; the Committee on Rules also an annual clerk at $2,220; the Committee on Territories has an annual clerk at $2,220; the Interstate-Commerce Committee has an annual clerk at $2,220, and the Committee on Epidemic Diseases has also an annual clerk at $2,220.

Now, the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations is to place the clerks to Senators who have no committees, and clerks to committees not otherwise provided, and which I have not mentioned, in the annual list, but it only proposes to pay them $1,500 a year. There is no controversy with the committee on any point except upon the simple question as to whether these outside clerks to committees not named specially and clerks to Senators who have no committees should receive $1,500 or $1,800 a year.

I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and to the Senate that a man who is fit to be an annual clerk to any committee of the Senate or any Senator ought to receive at least $1,800 per annum. The service is taken for the whole year, and the clerk ought to have reasonable compensation; and I submit that $1,800 is not unreasonable. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will be adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state, by the way, before I close, that I have no word of complaint to find against these other committees. I make no complaint of that kind. I know that important committees of the Senate must have valuable clerks and more than one of them.

Mr. STEWART. I think the class of service and the amount of work required ordinarily of a clerk to a Senator who discharges his duty to the public is certainly equivalent to the work required from any $1,800 clerk in the service of the Government. I will undertake to take up the ordinary pay to clerks in the various Departments of the Government and show that for like services they usually get more pay. I think that the very important position of clerk to a Senator or clerk to a committee should be occupied by a competent person, and that he should be reasonably paid. I do not believe in extravagant salaries. Eighteen hundred dollars a year is not too much. These clerks ought to have that much. In the case of the committees that are selected, where there are extra services to be performed I do not object to $2,200 being paid to the clerks.

Mr. GRAY. Do I understand that the sum fixed by the committee is $1,500?

Mr. STEWART. It is $1,500.

Mr. GRAY. I agree with the Senator from Nevada that $1,800 is the proper amount.

Mr. STEWART. That would be a reasonable compensation.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is my amendment.

Mr. GRAY. That is the Senator's amendment.

Mr. STEWART. That is the amendment, and I think that is reasonable. The business of Senators, it ought to be understood, is increasing very rapidly. The correspondence of every Senator is accumulating beyond all comparison with what it was formerly. The public expect a reply to every letter, and every reasonable business letter must be replied to, and the labor is enormous. It requires a high degree of intelligence to relieve a Senator from the personal attention he can not give to his correspondence and to other business.

More than that, we deny to Senators the franking privilege which all the Departments have. Senators are taxed very largely. My tax is very heavy in paying postage on letters upon public business. It amounts to the salary of a clerk constantly, besides the labor connected with the correspondence that is imposed upon Senators. I do not propose to change that, but if that labor is to be performed which the public expect Senators ought to have competent assistants, and $1,800 is as low as competent persons can be secured for those positions, unless it be understood that Senators shall not be called upon to answer their correspondence and attend to the public business devolved upon them. If we are to be relieved from that labor, very well, but the system is such that it is now required, and it seems to me that it may as well be understood in the country that we will discharge the duty and we will have such assistants as will make the discharge of this duty possible. Eighteen hundred dollars paid would be a reasonable compensation, and if proper service can be required then it will be the duty of Senators to answer business letters thoroughly, and the people then may have a right to expect them to do so.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of increasing the compensation proposed from $1,500 to $1,800 a year. I think a false impression prevails in the country about the duties of clerks or secretaries to committees of the Senate. They are in no sense secretaries or clerks of the Senators personally. They are appointed by the Senate of the United States and assigned to particular Senators, who point out the duties that they are to perform. Those duties relate not to the personal affairs of Senators, but they are public duties.

We all know that the duties which are imposed upon the secretaries assigned to Senators are public in their character, and I venture to say that it will be utterly impossible for any Senator to procure a clerk who would perform the duties that these clerks are called upon to perform at less than $1,800 a year. That is a very reasonable and moderate compensation. It is not as much as they have received during the very long sessions of Congress, when we did not adjourn until late in October, at the rate of $6 a day.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the number of committees having annual clerks at this time, I believe, is twenty-two or twenty-three, and it is true they receive $2,220 each except two or three, who have a higher compensation. These committee clerkships have been made annual from year to year, on the motion of the committees in the open Senate. The Committee on Appropriations has not undertaken to dictate in this matter in any respect, and it did not believe that it was wise to reorganize, as would be required, the entire force of the Senate as respects the compensation which is paid to clerks of committees.

The Senator from Oregon alluded incidentally to what may appear to be excessive compensation to clerks of certain committees. Whilst that may be true, the Committee on Appropriations did not see proper to interfere with it. Many of the committees which are here provided for, I think I can say without offense to Senators, are unimportant committees relatively. Several of them are select committees and temporary in their character and in their uses to the Senate.

It has been usual for some years to pay to clerks of Senators the same compensation that has been paid to the clerks to what are known as the minor committees of the Senate. In any arrangement or adjustment that we make here as respects these committees it will be necessary, it seems to me, for us to provide the same compensation to clerks of Senators.

Mr. STEWART. I agree to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, if the Senate on deliberation thinks that at this time we can enter into a contest with the House of Representatives, which has been a long contest, as respects this question, then of course the Committee on Appropriations can find no fault with it; but I submit to Senators that having in this bill, in pursuance of a recommendation made to the committee by a great body of the Senators, increased the compensation of these clerks to the extent of $1,000 for a Congress, or an average of $500 a year, it is substantially all that we ought to do at this session. That is all there is in this question.

Mr. MITCHELL. The chairman of the committee understands that my amendment relates to both.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that it relates to both. Now, all I desire is that there shall be a ye-a-and-nay vote upon this amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I desire to say that so far as a large number of the committees are concerned the chairmen derive scarcely any benefit at all from the clerks. I have had hardly any for the last two months of the clerk of the Committee on Finance for any business of my own. So it would be decidedly for my interest to go outside and be without any committee and have a clerk. I do not myself believe in appointing clerks for Senators for anything more than during the session. So far as the clerks of committees are concerned, I want to say that, taking the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Pensions, the Committee on Claims, and a great many of the committees, the chairmen do not derive any benefit, or scarcely any benefit, at all from the clerks.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into a discussion of the comparative labor performed by the clerks of different committees, and make any invidious distinction about that. I undertake to say that the clerk of any Senator who is fit for the place and who discharges the public duties that belong to a clerk of a Senator is entitled to $1,800 a year; that that is reasonable; and that he can also, where the duties of the committee are not very onerous, discharge the duties of a committee clerk. I would not ask any additional compensation in that case. There may be even in $1,800 an inequality; one may do more than another; but if we take what would be an economical and reasonable compensation for a competent person to discharge these duties and fix that salary, I think we shall be justified in every way. We might go through the list and take particular men, and say some ought to be given one amount and some ought to be given another, that $2,220 is too much for this one and that one, but I do not propose to disturb those who are classified.

I simply say that where a person is qualified to discharge the duties devolved upon a Senator's clerk in aiding him to go to the Departments and get information and to write letters and to do the business that devolves upon a Senator (and it is growing all the time) that officer should have a compensation of at least $1,800, so that a competent person can be secured to discharge the duties.

That is all I have to say. I do not propose to discriminate; and I should like to have the sense of the Senate upon the question. I think the public service is better performed by giving reasonable compensation, not excessive compensation. I believe it is in the line of economy and the proper discharge of the duties. I believe the public would be better served by it. Without any discussion as to the merits of different persons, I say that any person fit for the place should receive $1,800 a year.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the word "five" before "hundred" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,900.

Mr. MITCHELL. The amendment before that comes first in line 2, on page 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "five" before the word "hundred" and insert "eight," so as to read:

For twenty-six clerks to committees, at $1,800 each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this question the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the proposition is, as I understand it, to pay the clerks who simply act as clerks of Senators, not as clerks of committees, the same that is paid to those clerks who perform the duties appertaining to a Senator plus the duties of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not this proposition at all. This proposition is to pay the clerks of committees, who are not annual clerks, $1,800 a year, instead of $1,500 a year as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand, the status of this question is precisely this: Under the law as it now stands committee clerks, not annual, are paid $6 a day during the session, and only during the session, and the clerks to Senators are paid the same during the session. Now, instead of paying these clerks $6 per day during the session, this bill proposes, as reported from the committee, to pay them $1,500 a year. It is evidently a very considerable increase, taking two years to a Congress, to the pay of these employes.

Mr. ALLISON. An increase of a thousand dollars.

Mr. HARRIS. Instead of paying $1,500 a year, an increase of $1,000 a Congress, as the compensation of these employes, the Senator from Oregon proposes to make it $1,800 a year.

Mr. HOAR. It is an increase of a thousand dollars for a Congress of two years.

Mr. HARRIS. I say a thousand dollars for a Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume the Senator from Tennessee would not care to see any rule established, or continued if established, that would work great injustice and was unequal in every sense of the word. I think if put to the test I could name at least two, if not three, committees of this body who have annual clerks receiving $2,220 that perhaps have not had two meetings of the committee this session, and have reported perhaps not more than one bill, and perhaps not any.

My object is to try and equalize this thing. I do not refer to the Committee on Claims, of course, or to the Committee on Appropriations, but the fact is that it has been the custom, after having provided for three or four of the committees of this body that we all agree ought to have not only a clerk, but an assistant clerk who ought to be paid well, to come in at each session of Congress, first one chairman of a committee with a resolution backed up by his committee asking that his clerk be made a permanent annual clerk, and it has been done time and time again, until now instead of the four or five committees that we all concede ought to be thus equipped, there are twenty-five of the standing committees of this body and some that are not standing that have annual clerks who are paid $2,220 per annum.

When a proposition is made to put the remainder of the committees on an equal footing, if you please, not paying their clerks $2,220, not paying them even $2,000, but the proposition is to pay them $1,800, the objection comes from certain sources that that is expensive and should not be done. It seems to me an objection of that kind comes with rather poor grace from certain parties. I do not mean from the Appropriations Committee either, because my understanding has been that the Appropriations Committee has from the first rather fought off this thing of supplying committees with annual clerks at an annual salary. But the thing has been done, nevertheless, until, as I say, we have twenty-five of the committees of this body now with annual clerks, when not one-half of the number have any considerable amount of business in their committees or certainly not enough to justify the employment of annual clerks at $2,220 per annum. If they have, and if there are twenty-five committees of this Senate which have business to justify that, then I insist that the remainder of the committees have business enough to justify annual clerks at the rate of $1,800.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman has an annual clerk at the compensation, I think, of $2,220 per annum. I therefore have no special reason to complain, but at the same time I feel justified in saying that, in my opinion, the whole committee and clerical force of the Senate requires readjustment. There are at least twenty of the standing and select committees of this body that are absolutely superfluous and unnecessary. It has been difficult to find names and invent functions for them. They have been created and established merely for the purpose of assigning some Senator to a chairmanship, giving him a room, and providing for him a clerk, and, in addition, practically a messenger also. Now, to pay the clerk of a committee that has nothing whatever to do $1,800 a year is to make him practically the private secretary of the chairman of the committee, with no other duties or functions, and that I respectfully submit is injurious to the chairmen of those committees which have work to do and who can avail themselves of the services of their clerks but a very small portion of the time.

I am therefore prepared to say that, in my judgment, the committees of this body should be largely reduced. They ought to be brought down to the proportions of the business that is to be transacted, and the clerks who are assigned to committees ought to do committee work and nothing else.

Then we shall come to the consideration of the question what shall be done for those Senators who are not chairmen of committees and who have no opportunity of availing themselves of clerical assistance. I am prepared to admit also on that point that, considering the enormous increase of the public business and the tremendous exactions upon the time and strength of those who are engaged in the public service, the period has long passed when any individual Senator can personally perform the duties which are devolved upon him by the requirements of the public service.

Since this Administration came in I have accumulated nearly thirty volumes of copied letters, of 500 pages each, in addition to a vast number of letters which have not been copied that have been merely answers to formal requests for seeds or public documents, of which no copy was required. I have a monthly impost upon my income of from $30 to $60 for postage alone, and I am allowed by this Government $125 annually for the payment of postage, for newspapers, and for stationery.

It was well enough when there were ten or twelve million people in this country, when there were a dozen or fifteen or twenty States, when the business was of infinitely diminished proportions from what it is to-day, to talk about the discharge of his duties by a Senator in person. In many cases the correspondence, the public duties, the demands upon the time of a Senator from a great State are equivalent practically to the duties of a Department of this Government fifty years ago.

Therefore, I say that the whole system ought to be readjusted, and every member of this body ought to be assigned a clerk as a Senator, and we ought not to be compelled to resort to the subterfuge of chairmen of committees for which there is no use before we can obtain the necessary clerical service to enable us to discharge our duties to our constituents. If it were that one's obligations were confined to one's own immediate constituents, it might be different, but there is no Senator of long service here whose correspondence does not extend into every State and every Territory in the Union upon all subjects that are engrossing public attention; and to say that in addition to the demands made upon our time for the consideration of great public questions, the duties of debate, work in committees, study upon questions which are likely to engage public attention, we should be required to run the errands of the people of all the States in this Union to the Departments and attend to pensions, public lands, post-offices, and everything that engages the attention of the individual, without clerical assistance, is absurd and preposterous. It is a demand beyond the strength or the capacity of any living human being. It ought not to be a man merely of the capacity of a messenger; it ought not to be a person who shall be an errand boy to fetch and carry. The man who is to serve a Senator in this capacity should be an accomplished typewriter and stenographer in addition to being able to write a good clerical long-hand, and equal to the chief clerk of a Department or bureau in this Government, and I suggest that $1,800 per annum is a very reasonable compensation for such services as are required.

I do not think that it is a matter that concerns us what the House of Representatives may think or do. I heard, with some regret, the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, intimate that it would be difficult to secure the co-operation of the House of Representatives to an appropriation for this purpose. That is, in my judgment, a violation of the proprieties of debate. It is a departure from the independence that ought to characterize the proceedings of the two Houses. I could, if I would, make some comments upon the House of Representatives myself, which might be interesting, but I forbear. It is sufficient to say that in my judgment the Senate is an independent organization and the House is an independent organization, and it is immaterial, or should be, to any member of this body when considering a question affecting the rights of the members thereof or the duties of its membership, what the House of Representatives may do or may not do.

At the same time we must be practical; we want to obtain results; and while I think that $1,800 would not be too much, that we could justify ourselves by asking that amount of compensation, still, if it appears that $1,500 is all that can be obtained reasonably in view of present circumstances, I shall hope that the friends of this measure, among whom I am to be enumerated, would agree with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and relieve him from embarrassment, because we can not readjust this whole question now, and if it can be readjusted hereafter then the compensation which is asked for by the Senator from Oregon, of $1,800 per annum, will furnish every member of this body an annual clerk at an aggregate not to exceed the amount now paid for such services.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I am informed by Senators on the other side that he would vote "yea" on this question if present, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired on political questions with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], who is absent from the Senate. As this is not a political question, I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. I announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL. On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—28.
Allen,	Dixon,	Higgins,	Power,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the amendment of the committee, in line 3, on the same page, inserting $39,000, be stricken out, and $46,800 inserted instead, which is necessary in order to meet the increase.

Mr. ALLISON. You mean to strike out "$18,150," as it stood in the bill originally, and insert "$46,800."

Mr. MITCHELL. I mean to strike out "$39,000" and insert "$46,800."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended in line 2.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, in line 3, it is proposed to strike out "$39,000" and insert "$46,800;" so as to make the clause read:

For twenty-six clerks to committees, at $1,800 each, $46,800.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move now to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the word "five," in line 6, on page 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight;" so as to read "$1,800," instead of "$1,500."

Mr. ALLISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. The effect of this amendment is simply to give those Senators who are not chairmen of committees clerks at the rate of $1,800 per annum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 6, before the word "hundred" it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,800 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on this amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I find that we have forty-two committees known as standing committees and eleven known as select committees, and that we have annual clerks to the Committees on Appropriations, Finance, Claims, Commerce, Judiciary, Private Land Claims, Pensions, Military Affairs, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, District of Columbia, Naval Affairs, Joint Committee on the Library, Census, Foreign Relations, Public Lands, Indian Affairs, to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Public Buildings and Grounds, Agriculture and Forestry, Education and Labor, Territories, Interstate Commerce, Epidemic Diseases, and Rules, at $2,220 each; and assistant clerks to the Committees on Pensions and Commerce, at $1,440 each.

I agree with the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that we should reorganize the committees and cut them down and reduce them to such point as the business capacities of the Senate require, and then let every Senator have his clerk. He has just as much use for a clerk, not being the chairman of a committee, as he has being the chairman of a committee, and no Senator upon this floor who does his duty honestly, faithfully, and conscientiously can perform the labors which are imposed upon him individually. It is more than any one man's power, mental and physical, can do, and if we do what our constituents call upon us to do, we must have assistance and we must have it in the form of a clerk.

Then we have, as has just been adopted, twenty-six clerks who are not annual clerks and whose salaries by the vote of the Senate have been placed at $1,800. Now, the question before the Senate is what shall the clerks of Senators have who are not chairmen of committees, many of which are merely nominal and have no duties to perform, $1,500 or $1,800?

I voted in the committee and co-operated with the chairman in fixing the amount of the compensation of these clerks to committees and of the clerks to Senators at $1,500 each. But the Senate has decided that the clerks to the chairmen of the select committees and other committees and the clerks who are not annual shall have $1,800. Now, I say it is but a matter of justice and right that Senators' clerks should have just as much as these others.

Fortunately or unfortunately, I am the chairman of a standing committee, but I have not an annual clerk. He is only a session clerk. The vote which has been given putting this clerk at $1,800 gives my clerk $1,800 a year. That committee is a mere nominal committee, as everybody knows, but it is no more nominal than twenty or thirty others, and it has just as much work to do, and I have the services of that clerk as completely as any Senator has the services of his clerk, and there should be no discrimination and no distinction.

We already have too much discrimination. We already have too many of these committees which have annual clerks where the committees do nothing on the face of God's green earth from the beginning to the end of the year. We all know that, and it is not worth while to disguise it.

Now, why have these committees to be multiplied and increased? Every Senator knows it has been for the purpose of giving to the chairman a clerk and giving him a committee-room.

I can do, I think, as much work as almost any living man, and I know that I can not possibly sleep over six hours a night on account of the work that is imposed upon me by my constituents, and I can not do it as I should like to do it even with the assistance of a clerk, staying in my house and working night and day—a stenographer and typewriter at that.

But we should make no distinctions; and now that we have no necessity for this large number of committees we should change them, we should reduce them, giving the committees the committee-rooms, and then give Senators who desire it without the mere formality of the chairmanship of a committee, committee-rooms in which to do their work.

I am placed in an awkward position in regard to this. In co-operation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, being one of the subcommittee, I voted to place all these clerks at $1,500, and I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to increase them. But the clerks of the select committees have been increased, and now what am I to do about the others? I am chairman of a committee, and my clerk will get $1,800 a year; and now shall I turn around and say that clerks to Senators shall only have $1,500 a year. I am sorry the chairman of the committee has called for the yeas and nays on this amendment, because I shall have to reverse my vote.

Mr. STEWART. That is right. Reverse your vote. You were wrong the first time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not think I was wrong the first time.

Mr. ALLISON. I called for the yeas and nays in order that it may be placed upon the record how strong we are respecting this question.

I agree very much with the statement made by the Senator from Missouri. Many of these clerks of committees have little to do. That is perfectly well known. I need not mention those committees. Therefore the clerks whose salaries have already been fixed are practically the clerks to certain Senators, and there is great force in what has been said by the Senator from Missouri. But I want the Senate, if that is its opinion, to express that opinion in a way that we all shall understand it.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I wish to say a word respecting the situation of a good many members of this body.

The Committee on Appropriations has a clerk who is paid a compensation which is not more than adequate to the services he renders. He is here during all the summer except for a brief vacation, preparing the work of the committee from year to year. His services, as every member of that committee knows, are invaluable to the committee. In addition to that we have an assistant clerk to that committee who is also an accomplished and able young man. Neither the assistant nor the clerk of the committee has been able to do any work—not for me, but for my constituents, because the clerks that are employed here, whether for Senators or for committees, are employed not in the private affairs of Senators, for very few of them have private affairs; I know I have none; I do not need the services of a clerk to write two private letters a month; I have no business occupation that requires my attention; and yet with the assistance of the clerk and assistant clerk this session I have been compelled in order to do the work of my constituents to employ and pay out of my own pocket the compensation of an additional clerk.

So the result is that although there are criticisms here with respect to these committee clerks, the fact turns out to be that those Senators who have no committee clerks are the best served under the arrangement we have made.

Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to be able to secure the services of a man who could earn $1,800 a year in the matters pertaining to my constituents, but I have not under this amendment now the benefit of that situation at all, being chairman of a committee that has a great amount of work to do as respects the public business.

It is not that I desire especially to draw a discrimination between these clerks and the clerks of Senators that I asked for the yeas and nays upon this question, but I want the judgment of Senators put upon the record as respects this matter of compensation and as to the character of men who shall be employed by Senators. I know very well that if any Senator upon this floor belonging to either political party discharges the duties which are laid upon him by his constituents, it is necessary for him to occupy most of his own time and the time of a man well qualified for the transaction of detail business in the Departments besides.

Therefore it is, Mr. President, that in calling for the yeas and nays I simply want the judgment of the Senate in respect to this matter. I think we are making a mistake in placing this compensation at the sum proposed by the Senator from Oregon, but whatever it is I shall endeavor to sustain it and maintain it wherever I can, if that is the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator does this amendment now pending put all the salaries at $1,800?

Mr. ALLISON. All of them.

Mr. VEST. Without any distinction?

Mr. STEWART. All of them, without distinction.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is why I move this amendment. It is unjust, of course, in every sense of the term to put the salaries of the clerks of committees, many of whom have very little work to do, at $1,800 a year and pay the clerks of Senators who have no committee chairmanships at $1,500 a year. Therefore, I move to put them all on the same basis.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the tendency all the while is to increase the force of the Senate and to increase its pay, and some day or other the result of it will be that public attention will be called to the expenditures of the body, and if a scandal is not created, at any rate great public censure will be visited on this body.

The truth is that the salaries of the employes in this body are by no means properly adjusted. The chairmanships of the committees are not properly arranged. There are clerkships of twenty-two hundred and odd dollars that ought not to be more than $1,500. There are some committees the pay of whose clerks possibly ought to be raised; but, in my judgment, any step that the Senate takes now in the direction of raising the pay of its force, instead of a general increase, ought to be in the way of adjusting and fixing the salary that should be paid to committee clerks something in accordance with the work they do.

It is also a fact, Mr. President, that the best-paid places in the whole range of the Government are the subordinate places about the Senate. For the same work, for the same time, for the same responsibility, they are better paid than any other employes of the Government in any Department. They are the most desirable places. There is no man holding a clerkship in any of the Departments or in the House of Representatives who if he could change to a corresponding place in the Senate would not be glad to do it. The rates are higher, the vacations are long, the duties are not onerous, and in my judgment the Senate will make a mistake if it adds to its expenditures now in the direction the Senate is evidently inclined.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I should like to hear from the Committee on Appropriations what are the relative expenditures of the House of Representatives and of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I can not give the figures in that regard.

Mr. ALLISON. They are nearly equal.

Mr. HALE. They are very nearly equal. Of course pretty much everything in one body is duplicated or paralleled in the other body. There are the same number of committees, or about the same, and, with the exception of perhaps the folding-rooms and one or two other offices, the employes are about the same number. I think that with the much larger body that the House is to-day, the expenditures for its official force are but a little above those of the Senate. The Senate is constantly going on and increasing. It seems to be the fashion for every man who comes into a subordinate place in the Senate to at once, the moment he has got into a good place, begin to importune his Senator to get him raised, and Senators do not withstand the pressure, and they make the same effort to increase the compensation of their clerks and others who are here by their recommendations that they would make to get them into these places, and all the while the Committee on Appropriations has to withstand, as far as it can, these advances.

What I wish is that some committee would take charge of this matter, having ample time, and go over the whole scale of the committees of the body and classify them. A few clerks should have, perhaps, $2,000 or $2,200, another portion $1,600 or $1,800 possibly, and the clerks to other committees who have little to do $1,500. I think there can be no difficulty in getting good men to fill these places, and we should thereby not add to the expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not the Senator from Maine believe that there has been quite an amount of material furnished within the last two or three sessions of the Senate for scandal by Senators coming first one and then another, backed up by their committees, recommending and asking that their particular secretary or clerk be placed in the annual list at a salary of five or six or seven hundred dollars more than you propose to pay others?

Mr. HALE. I think that has been an evil.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will not the proposition now, instead of having the tendency to lead to scandal, have a tendency to prevent it?

Mr. HALE. The aggregate expenditure will be raised.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Committee on Appropriations themselves have already laid down a programme, first of putting up the salary. The only controversy here is whether it should be $1,500 or $1,800.

Mr. HALE. Of course the larger sum increases the expenditure of the body, and some day attention will be called to it.

What the Senator has referred to has led to just the condition we are in now. Every session Senators have come in at the solicitation of their clerks and by unanimous consent have got resolutions through putting their clerkships up to $2,200, and when there was nothing commensurate in the work of the committee to that salary, and out of that has sprung this natural desire which Senators have. I see it and I appreciate it, but we ought not to forget the other side of the question, and we ought not to forget that some day or other there will be a reckoning for us.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to answer the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as respects the relative expenditures of the House of Representatives and the Senate. As this bill came to the Senate the expenditures provided for amounted to $329,000 for the Senate and the corresponding expenditures for the House to $392,000; but owing to a large increase of the force—not a large increase, but a considerable increase of the force—during the session, the additions already made, including those just voted, increase the expenditures of the Senate to $408,000, which is, of course, more than $392,000, a difference of $16,000 in favor of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired generally with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but this not being a party question, I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreement to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now move, in order to make the section conform, to amend the amendment of the committee in lines 7 and 8, page 8, by striking out the words "fifty-two thousand five hundred dollars" and inserting the words "sixty-three thousand dollars."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 7 and 8, on page 8, it is proposed to strike out "fifty-two thousand five hundred" and insert "sixty-three thousand;" so as to read:

For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,800 each, $63,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask leave at this time to move to amend the bill, on page 55, line 23, by striking out, before "hundred," the word "two" and inserting the word "five;" so as to increase the salary of the chief clerk of the mint at Philadelphia from $2,250 to $2,550. I am going away, and I wish to have it done at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be constrained to raise a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. It has been before the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I know it has been before the committee. A great many amendments of this character have been before the committee, and they have all been rejected. I hope the Senator will not press it. I feel obliged to raise the point of order on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, in the opinion of the Chair.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five," and in line 11, after the word "Senate," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses, namely: For stationery and newspapers, including $5,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 14, after the word "Senate," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred;" and in line 16, after the word "all," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For postage-stamps for the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $200; for the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, $100; in all, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 24, after the word "labor," to strike out "six thousand," and insert "eight thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, oil, and cotton-waste, and advertising, for the heating apparatus, exclusive of labor, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 4, after the word "cleaning," to insert "repairing;" so as to make the clause read:

For services in cleaning, repairing, and varnishing furniture, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, to increase the appropriation for packing boxes to be used in the service of the Senate from "$870" to "$970."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to an abuse in regard to this matter. I happen to know from personal experience that the custom has grown up in the Senate, in regard to these appropriations for special committees, of permitting the first chairman of a special committee who goes to the Secretary or disbursing officer to draw what he pleases. There is no sort of rule observed. There is no sort of justice in the practice. It is simply a question as to who gets there first.

As a conspicuous illustration of this, in the last Congress we made an appropriation, I think, of $15,000 for investigating committees. There were five of the committees, six possibly, but I think five. I was chairman of one of the committees, the Select Committee on the Meat Product, and, taking it for granted that there would be an equitable distribution of the fund, I waited some time, my committee not being called together for two or three months after Congress adjourned; and when I went to the Secretary of the Senate I found that these other special committees, particularly two of them, had drawn out all the fund except about $1,000. One of the committees took $8,000, I think. I speak without having the figures before me and in round numbers, but one of these committees, the first one that came, took $8,000, the other took over $5,000, and that left for the other four committees about $2,000.

If it had not been for the fact that there was an appropriation left over for my committee of $700 or $800, which the assistant sergeant-at-arms, now dead, who had been in charge of the committee, happened to have in his possession, I should have been without a dollar and could not have held any session of the committee at all. As it was, I was compelled to exercise the utmost economy and to use my own personal means in order to carry my committee through its necessary investigation.

Now, I say it is not right that one chairman of a committee should be permitted to draw what he pleases out of this appropriation. There ought to be some sort of rule, and a discretion ought to be vested somewhere as to paying out this money. In the case I have mentioned I was indignant, and I told the Secretary of the Senate that it was an outrage that he had allowed these other committees to engross the whole of the appropriation for special committees. I asked him the plain question, "Suppose that the chairman of one of these committees had come and drawn the whole of that amount, would you have permitted it?" He said, "Yes, sir, I would have been obliged to have recognized his draft for the whole amount if he had wanted it."

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. VEST. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. I was going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Missouri. I recall very well the case that he has in mind, and it impressed me very much as it does him. But the difficulty is in arranging the matter in such a way that the money can be expended consistently with the freedom of the committee. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that a provision might be inserted that the money shall be disbursed as expended. That would provide, at all events, against the evil which the Senator from Missouri has in mind; but it might possibly embarrass some committees in regard to expenditures, because they could not have money advanced to them. Still, I can not conceive of any very great embarrassment of the public service that would be incurred by reason of such a provision. I think it would be very much better, in any event, than to give the chairmen of the committees lump sums to carry around with them, whereby, as the Senator has said, the fund might be exhausted in such a way by one committee as to prevent other committees, equally important and equally authorized by the Senate, from having what they were entitled to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations has given attention to this question. It is not an easy one to solve.

Mr. VEST. I understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. Ordinarily it would be supposed that no grab game, as it were, would be played, but that only a pro rata amount would be required by each chairman of a committee. That is one difficulty arising perhaps from the fact that we never appropriate as much as we expend. Now, the appropriation here of $15,000 as it came from the other House, or $25,000 as provided for by the Senate committee, will probably not be sufficient to carry on these investigations during the coming fiscal year. I hope it will be, because the next is a short session.

I do not see any way to improve this matter unless it is provided that when we raise a committee of investigation we shall, when that committee is raised, name the sum that is to be expended by the committee. The Secretary of the Senate can exercise no discretion. If the chairman of a committee presents himself at the office of the Secretary and asks for $5,000 or $2,000 or $3,000, or whatever sum, to carry on an investigation, the Secretary of the Senate must undoubtedly respond to that request.

Mr. VEST. That is not right.

Mr. HALE. The presumption is, is it not, if the Senator will allow me, that the chairman in making his request on the disbursing officer has looked the ground over and will only request what he expects to expend?

Mr. ALLISON. A reasonable sum.

Mr. HALE. A reasonable sum. I do not see how the Secretary can decide in such a case.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think that discretion can be or ought to be imposed upon the Secretary. He can not deny a Senator who is chairman of a committee making an investigation.

Mr. HALE. There is one thing that might be done. All these expenses of committees, as they are made out by bills, might be paid by drafts of the chairman of the committee on the Secretary of the Senate, which would obviate the great inconvenience of a committee starting without any money, and having to advance its own funds. They could be paid by drafts of the chairman of the committee on the Secretary of the Senate, and would then only come in as they were expended. But it clearly would not be the right thing to provide that they should only be paid after the expenditures were made, because then every chairman of a committee investigating a subject would have to advance his own money.

Mr. PLUMB. Then we come back to the same point. If the chairman starting out should draw the entire fund appropriated for this purpose, the Secretary would be obliged to honor the draft or else protest it.

Mr. HALE. He would only draw as the expenditures accrued. For instance, if a committee goes to Chicago and conducts an investigation there, and there is $500 to be paid for a stenographer, when the stenographer presents his bill the chairman of the committee makes his draft upon the Secretary of the Senate for that sum; and it is only done as the bills accrue.

Mr. PLUMB. That is exactly as I suggested, that it be paid as the money is expended, or as the expenses accrue, which would mean the same thing. I think there ought to be some amendment of the present system. In the first place, I think it would tend to economy in the expenditure. This has gone on in some rather haphazard way. As a matter of course there are a great many valuable investigations made, but at the same time it is altogether probable that even the most valuable of them might be made for a less sum of money.

Mr. HALE. We probably start too many investigations.

Mr. PLUMB. Very likely. But I suggest the amendment which I have stated, that the fund shall be disbursed as the expenditures accrue.

Mr. VEST. That is infinitely preferable to the present system, but why could not an amendment be adopted that would put the distribution of this money at the discretion of the Presiding Officer of the Senate; for instance, that the Secretary should not pay out to any chairman of a committee more than the Presiding Officer of the Senate should indorse as a just proportion of the appropriation?

I repeat, that under the present system it is possible to defeat the operations of every special or select committee of the Senate except one. I was approached last session by a Senator who was chairman of another select committee who asked me what would be the probable expense of my committee during the vacation. I told him that I could not even approximate to it; that it was impossible for me to do so; that I did not know how long the sessions of the committee would last or to what places we would go; that subsequent events would control our action. Then, within three months afterwards, when I went to draw the necessary expenses (not a large sum, either, for my committee did not expend over $1,500 or $1,800 during the whole summer) I found that the first chairman of a select committee who had gone to the Secretary drew $8,000 and segregated it from the general appropriations so that nobody who came afterwards could reach it.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the investigation commenced?

Mr. VEST. Before it commenced.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the amount drawn was all expended?

Mr. VEST. I have no doubt of it. I am not saying anything about that. The chairman of the next committee came and drew $5,000, and the appropriation was only $15,000, so that when I came I found that the actual appropriation left was $700 or $800.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the plan suggested by the Senator from Kansas is a very good one. It certainly will be economical, and in that way no chairman of a committee can secure any funds until he is ready to expend the money.

Mr. VEST. That is a great deal better than the present system.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it would be well to try that for one year, anyhow.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to try it. I think that would be a very good plan. Of course it may add somewhat to the circulation, because when this appropriation is exhausted, if the chairman expends money the Secretary can not pay the draft.

Mr. PLUMB. That is a very decided recommendation in favor of the amendment. What we want now is an increase of the circulating medium. If we can not get what we want we shall take what we can get.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will state his amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I propose to insert, "to be disbursed as the expenditures accrue."

Mr. HALE. Then, to avoid any inconvenience, it can be paid by draft on the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not think that a Senator charged with an important public duty ought to be required to advance money. I remember the first time I was called upon to act on a committee to investigate anything it was as a member of the House of Representatives, and I signed a note for $10,000, borrowed money. I thought it was a mean thing to require me to do. It was in the famous Kansas investigation. The Senate refused to appropriate money for the investigation.

Mr. PLUMB. At that date the credit of the Senator from Ohio was better than that of the Government of the United States. That is the reason of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I simply borrowed money on the credit of the Republican party, to be reimbursed, and it was afterwards paid. The money was borrowed from Mr. Morgan, of New York. He advanced the money. I do not think when a Senator is sent off on an important duty that he ought to be required to borrow money, to beg money, or to advance his own money. It seems to me that a reasonable discretion left to each Senator charged with a duty of this kind would not be abused.

Mr. PLUMB. But here, for instance, is an appropriation of $25,000. The Senate in the mean time may order a dozen investigations. The chairman of a committee comes in and draws the entire amount from the Secretary, which practically occurred last year. Two other committees were left almost without anything. Now, I think it would be just as well, while the pendulum is swinging, to let it swing back awhile and try the other plan.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be better if there could be a provision as to each committee when it is created, and that an estimate should be made as nearly as possible for the funds required by the committee for the investigation which it is about to make. Of course, as the Senator from Kansas has remarked, under the present system the first chairman who comes to the financial clerk may get all the money, if he represents to the financial clerk that he requires so much, because there is no authority on the part of the financial clerk to withhold anything so long as there may be a demand on him by the chairman of a committee, which committee is charged with the responsible duty of making an investigation.

It came to my knowledge last summer as a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate that the financial clerk was very greatly embarrassed in the instance alluded to by the Senator from Kansas. I can see no way to get at this problem satisfactorily so as to place a safeguard around it other than to have the amount required to be estimated for by the committee when it is created, and to have the committee limited to that amount.

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble about that is that the Senate can not appropriate money for the use of these investigating committees except as the same may have been appropriated for in one of the regular supply bills.

Mr. PADDOCK. I know; but the Senate can say in the resolution raising the committee that no more than a certain amount shall be expended for the particular investigation.

Mr. PLUMB. But suppose it should happen that we pass this bill providing $25,000 as the expenses of investigating committees and the Senate should appropriate in various resolutions $75,000 before we have adjourned. We have then the same problem as to how the $75,000 is to be accommodated to the $25,000 appropriation.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then the responsibility will be upon the Senate to pass a deficiency appropriation bill specially to cover that matter.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senate had the power to pass a deficiency appropriation bill, that would be another thing; but unfortunately the Senate has not that power. It has not the power to originate an appropriation bill; it can only originate on the other side. If the Senate were to seek to thus provide for the deficiencies created, the other House would simply lay the appropriation bill on the table and we should never hear again from it.

Mr. PADDOCK. We appropriate in gross for this purpose. If we appropriated a specific amount to be used by such a committee, it would be an authority to the financial clerk to restrain a committee seeking to get too large a sum.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Kansas as to the necessity of some step being taken to prevent the absorption of this fund by any one or two committees, if there should be more than that number appointed, but if it is meant to allow any investigations it would be better not to adopt his amendment. If it is intended to prevent all investigations, let us strike the item out.

It is impracticable, all will understand, in cases of that kind to provide for the payment of the expenditures as they occur, because if the committee is away from here it must spend its own money or it will have no money to spend under such a provision. It can not reach the Treasury from where it goes.

So it seems to me the amendment simply means that it is not the purpose of Congress to allow such investigations. If that is its meaning it would be better to strike out the paragraph; but if it is meant to be made available, it seems to me the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri is one that would overcome the difficulty by leaving it in the discretion of the Presiding Officer of the Senate to allot to the different committees, in view of the character of the investigations with which they are charged, their relative proportions of the sum appropriated.

I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas that we had better adopt some other plan than the one he proposes, because that is quite impracticable.

Mr. PLUMB. It might be practicable to provide that the chairman should draw in advance a sum not exceeding, say, $500 or $1,000.

Mr. REAGAN. What would be the objection to allowing the Presiding Officer of the Senate, in view of the contemplated investigations of special committees, to make allotments in proportion to the work required?

Mr. PLUMB. That would devolve on him a duty which he might not be able to properly perform, and it might perhaps operate just as the Senator says, to prevent the investigations. We carry on a great many investigations; I am not speaking now about their expediency; but when it comes to a question of distribution there is room for any one chairman to prevent the other committees from carrying on the other investigations at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Kansas state where he desires to have his amendment inserted?

Mr. PLUMB. It should be inserted after the word "Senate" in line 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Senate," in line 11, insert "to be disbursed as the expenditures accrue;" so as to read:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, to be disbursed as the expenditures accrue, including compensation to stenographers to committees, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PADDOCK. To be approved by whom?

Mr. PLUMB. As they accrue; not as they are approved, but as they accrue. The chairman of the committee will settle that. As he wants funds he will draw for them.

Mr. ALLISON. "To be disbursed as the expenditures accrue."

Mr. PLUMB. "To be disbursed as the expenditures accrue." If he needs money he will draw for it just as he would if drawing on his own bank account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to page 16, line 25.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 21, I move to strike out the words "For one chief official reporter, $6,000, and for four," and to insert "five;" so as to read:

Five official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House, at $5,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Library of Congress," on page 18, line 12, before the word "assistant," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-six;" after the word "exchanges," at the end of line 17, to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" and in line 20, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-nine thousand" and insert "forty thousand two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of librarian, $4,000; and for twenty-six assistant librarians, two at $2,500 each; two at $1,800 each; two at $1,600 each; two at $1,440 each; eight at $1,400 each, one of whom shall be in charge of international exchanges; seven at $1,200 each; one at $720, and two at $640 each; in all, $40,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Civil Service Commission," on page 21, line 5, before the words "clerks of class three," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 8, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-six thousand four hundred" and insert "thirty-eight thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $5,000; one secretary, $2,000; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; three clerks at $1,000 each; two clerks at $900 each; one messenger, and one laborer; in all, $38,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 10, before the word "traveling," to strike out "actual" and insert "necessary;" so as to read:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, $5,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 21, line 14, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter every application for examination before the Civil Service Commission shall be accompanied by a certificate of an officer, with his official seal attached, of the county and State of which the applicant claims to be a citizen, that such applicant was, at the time of making such application, an actual and bona fide resident of said county; but this provision shall not apply to persons who may be in the service and seek promotion or appointment in other branches of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 22, line 5, before the words "to the Secretary," to strike out "stenographer" and insert "clerk;" and in the same line, after the word "Secretary," to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

Clerk to the Secretary, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 22, line 14, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Secretary of State, Assistant Secretaries, the clerical force in the Department, etc., from "$117,470" to "$119,470."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 22, line 25, after the word "for," to insert "the purchase of an official carriage;" and on page 23, line 5, after the word "all," to strike out "four thousand eight" and insert "six thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses, namely: For the purchase of an official carriage, care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons, carriage, and harness; for rent of stable and wagon-shed; for care of clock, telegraphic and electric apparatus and repairs to the same, and for miscellaneous items not included in the foregoing; in all, $6,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 23, line 14, before the words "Assistant Secretaries," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 15, to strike out the semicolon after "thousand;" and in line 22, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-one thousand three" and insert "thirty-five thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretary's Office: For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, $8,000; three Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $4,500 each; clerk to the Secretary, $2,400; two private secretaries, one to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each; Government actuary, under the control of the Treasury Department, $2,250; one clerk of class 1; one copyist; three messengers; two assistant messengers; in all, $35,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for office of chief clerk and superintendent of the Treasury Department, on page 24, line 14, after the word "locksmith," to strike out "and electrician;" so as to read:

One locksmith, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to line 15 on page 24. There seems to be something omitted there. In line 14 it reads, "one locksmith, $1,200;" and then comes:

Three firemen; five firemen, at $650 each.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right. "Three firemen." There is a regular salary for firemen. Then there are five firemen at a lower rate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary suggests that the comma ought to be stricken out in that line.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the comma ought to go out after the words "three firemen," and the semicolon should stay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for office of chief clerk and superintendent of the Treasury Department, on page 24, line 20, after the word "watchmen," to insert "six special watchmen, at $720 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, on page 25, line 13, to increase the total amount of appropriations for office of clerk and superintendent of the Treasury Department from "$163,086.50" to "$167,406.50."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 9 on page 28.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In line 6, on page 28, after the word "bindery," the Secretary is of the opinion that there should be a comma instead of a semicolon.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; strike out the semicolon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for office of Second Comptroller of the Treasury, on page 30, line 13, before the words "clerks of class one," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" and in line 15, after the word "all," to strike out "ninety-one thousand seven" and insert "ninety-four thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

Second Comptroller of the Treasury: For Second Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; seven chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; ten clerks of class 4; ten clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; twelve clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; five clerks at $900 each; one messenger; and three laborers; in all $94,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 6, before the words "clerks of class four," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 11, after the word "all," to strike out "sixty-nine thousand two hundred" and insert "seventy-one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Fourth Auditor: For Fourth Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; three clerks of class 4; thirteen clerks of class 3; eight clerks of class 2; nine clerks of class 1; two clerks at $1,000 each; five clerks at $900 each; two clerks at $800 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $71,030.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 6, before the words "clerks of class one," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "seventeen;" and in line 9, after the word "all," to strike out "sixty-four thousand and eight" and insert "sixty-seven thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

For the force employed in redeeming the national currency (to be reimbursed by the national banks), namely: For superintendent, $3,500; one teller and one principal book-keeper, $2,500 each; one assistant book-keeper, at $2,400; and one assistant teller, at $2,000; two clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; seventeen clerks of class 1; thirteen clerks at $1,000 each; five clerks at $900 each; three assistant messengers; and one charwoman; in all, $67,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 3, before the words "clerks of class two," to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" in line 4, after the words "class one," to strike out "two" and insert "ten;" and in the same line, after the word "each," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Comptroller of the Currency: For Comptroller of the Currency, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,800; chief clerk, $2,500; three chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; one stenographer, at $1,600; eight clerks of class 4, additional to bond clerk, $200; eleven clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; ten clerks, at $1,000 each; thirteen clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; two assistant messengers; one engineer, $1,000; one fireman; three laborers; and two night watchmen; in all, $103,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 16, after the word "thousand," to insert "200;" after the word "each," at the end of line 17, to insert "two clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000;" and in line 19, before the words "clerks," at $900 each," to strike out "nine" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the national currency (to be reimbursed by the national banks), namely: One superintendent, at $2,200; one teller, one book-keeper, and one assistant book-keeper, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class 1; one clerk, at $1,000; five clerks, at $900 each; and one assistant messenger; in all, $16,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 24, after the word "board," to strike out "who shall be paid from the appropriations for the Light-House Establishment;" so as to read:

For the following additional employees in the office of the Light-House Board, namely, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Bureau of Statistics," on page 40, line 16, to increase the appropriation for compensation of chief clerk of the bureau from "$2,000" to "$2,250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 40, line 23, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics and the clerical and other force in the office from "$46,460" to "$46,710."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 3, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the services of experts, and for other necessary expenditures connected with the collection of facts relative to the internal and foreign commerce of the United States, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of Construction of Standard Weights and Measures," on page 42, after line 3, to insert:

For the construction of standard gallons and their subdivisions for the use of States and Territories which have not received the same, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "For contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, including all buildings under control of the Treasury in Washington, D. C.," on page 45, line 6, after the word "expenses," to strike out "seven hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For investigation of accounts and records, including the necessary traveling expenses, and for other traveling expenses, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 24, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of useless papers in the Treasury Department under the act of February 16, 1889, in accordance with the report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, being Senate Report No. 1083, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for collecting internal revenue, on page 47, line 11, after the word "butter," to strike out "and so forth" and insert "also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," and in line 19, after the word "act," to strike out "defining butter, and so forth;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses of collectors and deputy collectors, including expenses incident to enforcing the provisions of the act of August 2, 1886, entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," $1,750,000: Provided, That the number of deputy collectors and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased, nor shall the salary of said officers and employees be increased beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year, exclusive of the number employed under the said act.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "million," in line 14, I move to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and to insert "eight hundred;" so as to read "one million eight hundred thousand."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if that is sufficient. Is it possible for the office to be conducted during the entire coming fiscal year without a much larger sum than that being appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has in mind, I think, the item following. As to this particular item the Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that he has readjusted the salaries for the next year and that $1,800,000 will be enough.

Mr. COCKRELL. He thinks that will cover this particular appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. He thinks that will cover this particular item, but as to the next item the Senator knows there may be some question about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to know if the Commissioner had made an accurate estimate, so as to be certain that $1,800,000 instead of $1,750,000 will be required.

Mr. ALLISON. He has made not an accurate estimate, but a careful estimate.

Mr. COCKRELL. We ought to appropriate just the amount that is necessary, no more and no less.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to ask my friend from Iowa to explain to us the proviso of the clause that is under consideration:

Provided, That the number of deputy collectors and clerks employed in the collection of internal revenue shall not be increased, nor shall the salary of said officers and employees be increased beyond the salaries paid during the last fiscal year, exclusive of the number employed under the said act.

What does the phrase "exclusive of the number" mean? How is it to work out?

Mr. ALLISON. There is annually made an adjustment of all salaries of deputy collectors and expenditures in the offices of collectors, but that does not include such additional force as may be necessary from time to time to execute the oleomargarine law. As I understand the words "exclusive of the number employed under the said act," that is, under the oleomargarine act, the employees shall not be increased. They have not been increased in number for a good many years except under that act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It means, then, that the Secretary of the Treasury, or whoever has charge of it, may increase the number of people employed to execute the oleomargarine act?

Mr. ALLISON. He may.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very doubtful way of putting it; but, if the Department and the committee are satisfied, I ought to be. I do not see it.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the special criticism that the Senator makes?

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the proviso, which is a proviso with a limitation apparently, if the purpose be to allow the Secretary a discretion, to increase the number and the pay, if he likes, of the employees under the oleomargarine act, I am not able to see that this phrase accomplishes that end.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been in every similar appropriation act since the oleomargarine law was passed, and I have heard no complaint.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it has received a construction?

Mr. ALLISON. It has received a construction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. INGALLS. As the oleomargarine act is brought into this consideration, I should like to be advised by the chairman of the committee as to the condition of the revenue derived from the tax upon oleomargarine, if he has the statistics at hand.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not them at this moment in my memory; but I can have them here in a minute. The clerk has gone for them. I do not remember the exact amount received under that act, but my impression now is that it is over a million dollars.

Mr. INGALLS. Per annum?

Mr. ALLISON. Per annum.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator state whether the revenue derived from that source is increasing or diminishing?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is increasing.

Mr. INGALLS. That would indicate, then, that the manufacture of oleomargarine is increasing in the number of pounds produced yearly.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is the fact.

Mr. INGALLS. I make this inquiry, Mr. President, because I understand the original purpose of what was known as the oleomargarine act was, not to collect revenue, but to protect the dairy products of the country and to destroy as far as possible the production of oleomargarine, on the theory that it was an injurious product, dangerous to the public health and detrimental to other important industries of the country. From the statement of the Senator from Iowa it would appear to have been a law excellently adapted for the purposes for which it was designed!

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand the result of the law to be as claimed by the Senator from Kansas, although the revenue has increased, I think, moderately from year to year. I am not sure even about that. But it has served one purpose, and that is to protect the people from buying oleomargarine when they supposed they were buying butter. It has segregated that traffic from the more legitimate traffic perhaps of the purchase and sale of butter.

Mr. INGALLS. The result of it is that the people buy more and more each year, and in that way they buy less of the genuine products of the dairy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to say about this business, for the farmers of Vermont are interested in it, that I did not understand, and I do not think they understood, that the purpose of Congress was to prevent any citizen of Vermont or any other part of the United States from buying and eating oleomargarine if he wanted to do so, but to protect him against the fraud and pretense of oleomargarine being sold to him and being called genuine butter. That was the point. If, therefore, the number of people in the United States and in foreign countries (to which it largely goes, I believe, rather than being eaten here) wish to buy oleomargarine and eat that, they have a perfect right to do it, and the farmers of Vermont do not complain on that point. The only thing is not to have their product put in competition with a sham that pretends to be their product and the product of every other farmer in the United States. That was the point of it.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems, then, that in competition with the genuine dairy products of the United States the people are coming gradually more and more to eat oleomargarine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not seem at all to be that way. It only seems that with the increasing trade of the world and the increasing population of the world the production of this thing, being defined and classed by itself, has increased—I will take that to be true—and the exportation of it to savages, who have hitherto eaten palm oil, or opossum oil, or whatever it may be, has increased. But what the farmers of the United States want is that their reality shall be distinguished from the sham that was put off upon the people of the United States before as butter, but which was not.

Mr. PLATT. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue gives all the receipts from oleomargarine, including the tax upon manufacturers, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. PLATT. Page 278 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It gives the receipts for the year 1888 at $894,000, in round numbers, and for 1889 at $894,000, in round numbers, an increase of about $30,000.

Mr. INGALLS. What annual consumption is shown by the report, in pounds? [A pause.] That does not appear.

Mr. PLATT. I think not.

Mr. COCKRELL. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Kansas in regard to the production of oleomargarine, he will find on page 330 of the Finance Report, as it is called:

It appears from the subjoined tables that the average monthly production of oleomargarine during the fiscal year was 2,972,002 pounds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which fiscal year?

Mr. COCKRELL. The fiscal year 1889.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ending on the 30th of June last.

Mr. ALLISON. How much?

Mr. COCKRELL. Two million nine hundred and seventy-two thousand and two pounds.

Mr. ALLISON. That must be a mistake.

Mr. PLATT. That must be per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report says:

The average monthly production for the previous year was 2,860,460 pounds, and the average monthly production during the eight months ended June 30, 1887, was 2,711,828 pounds. It also appears that the average monthly quantity withdrawn from factories on payment of the tax was as follows: During the eight months ended June 30, 1887—

That was the beginning of the law—

	Pounds.
During the eight months ended June 30, 1887	2,592,946
During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.....	2,707,430
During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.....	2,821,970

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the production has not increased to any considerable extent?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not apparently; only about one hundred and odd thousand pounds.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, on page 163 of the Report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the production is given as 34,325,527 pounds during the fiscal year 1888, and for the year ending June 30, 1889, 35,664,026 pounds, over a million pounds more. So my answer to the Senator from Kansas, although from memory and not with the book before me, was moderately accurate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That corresponds exactly with the tables I have read, except that I have read the monthly product and the Senator gives the gross annual product. That is the only difference. He gives the annual statement and what I gave was the monthly statement.

Mr. ALLISON. But I merely wanted to state that there was an increase, and not a decrease.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, there was an increase of very little over 100,000 pounds per month.

Mr. ALLISON. Or over 1,000,000 pounds per annum.

Mr. COCKRELL. The table I read shows that for the year ended June 30, 1888, the average monthly product was 2,707,430 and for the year ended June 30, 1889, it was 2,821,970; so that there was an increase of 114,540 pounds monthly during that year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to be working well. Let us go ahead.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill with the appropriations for "Independent Treasury," on page 47, line 23.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have not acted upon the amendment before the provision in relation to the Independent Treasury. That certainly has not been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The amendment referred to by the Senator from Missouri has been agreed to. The reading of the bill will be resumed at line 20, on page 47.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 20 on page 47, with the following provision:

For salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses, $2,000,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. At that point I wanted the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill to state to the Senate the amount that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates, and what it is believed will actually be necessary to cover that item.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the amount of the appropriation of last year, as I remember it, and we have hoped that the expenditure may be confined to the sum appropriated. It may or it may not. I agree with the Senator that it is a very close appropriation, but we hope to get through with it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the Commissioner state expressly that it will take a decided advance over the amount named in the bill, and does he not estimate for it?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, he does.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much?

Mr. ALLISON. He estimated for $2,000,000, but afterwards he estimated for an additional sum of $100,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. He estimates that it will take at least $100,000 more. I have not the remotest doubt that it will take $100,000, or more than that. There is no doubt about it at all. The Commissioner is a man who seems to understand his business, and after reviewing the estimates and everything of the kind he says there is a necessity for an additional $100,000.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the deliberate estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, $2,000,000, and I do not wish to exceed his estimate, although I rather share the view of the Senator from Missouri that it will take something more; but, if it does, we can provide for it by a deficiency bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. In regard to the estimates, the committee, in the consideration of this bill, were guided very largely by the regular estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and because these estimates had been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury we left this item at the amount in the bill, but a subsequent estimate shows conclusively to my mind that it will take $100,000 more. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury is presumed, when quoted, to have given some consideration to these various estimates, but that is all imaginary, that is all ideal. Does anybody suppose the Secretary of the Treasury sits down and with the facts and data before him makes a calculation of the necessary expenditures for all the branches of the public service? He could not do it to save his soul and body. It would be a physical impossibility for him to do it.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; but, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, the Secretary of the Treasury always has behind him and before him the expenditures of prior years.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, the appropriation for this current year is only $1,950,000, and, so far as I have heard, there is no estimate for a deficiency this year. So it seems to me by economic efforts the Commissioner may be able to get on with $2,000,000. If he can not, of course we shall be in such a condition next winter that we can provide for the deficiency and no injury will be done to the public service.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt about that. No injury will be done to the public service, as we shall have to appropriate many, many, many millions of dollars next winter to defray the expenditures legitimately necessary in the conduct of the Government during the coming fiscal year, which will not be appropriated for at this session of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has been our previous experience always.

Mr. COCKRELL. To a greater or less extent it is always the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And generally greater.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it will be this time to a greater extent.

Mr. President, in regard to these estimates, the Senator from Iowa stated correctly that the Secretaries have before them the previous estimates and the previous appropriations, and there is just the trouble. They run in the same ruts that have been worn out from time to time, and if they keep within close proximity to what has been done before they are perfectly satisfied.

I am not censuring the present Secretary in regard to these estimates, not at all. I am not criticising. He is only tramping in the footsteps of his predecessors for years and years. The Secretaries do not make these estimates; they do not know anything about them; they can not explain them to save their lives, and it is a physical impossibility that they should. The estimates are made by the clerical force in the Departments, and we necessarily have to attach a great deal of importance to them, and in the consideration of this bill we aimed to follow as closely as we could the regular estimates. Although our judgment in many cases was—my own certainly was—that we should have to increase the appropriations, the committee decided not to exceed the estimates, and the deficiency could be provided for in a subsequent bill. I have no doubt in my own mind we shall have to increase this at the coming session $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean on this particular item?

Mr. COCKRELL. This particular item.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has been the experience of the present year?

Mr. COCKRELL. One million nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for this year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a deficiency now about to occur?

Mr. COCKRELL. We do not know. I have not examined the estimates on that point.

Mr. ALLISON. We have not heard of any deficiency on this account.

Mr. COCKRELL. No deficiency bill has yet been passed, except what is known as the little urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have no information at this time that the appropriation of the last regular bill has been found insufficient?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; but I am satisfied from the statement of the Commissioner that an additional sum will be necessary.

Mr. PADDOCK. I was informed the other day by the Commissioner, Colonel Mason, that there is an unexpended balance of $50,000 applicable to the payment of salaries of a particular class of clerks who receive a very small compensation, and for whom there is no demand, according to the requirements of the statute as it has been heretofore, which would require the expenditure of so large a sum as has been appropriated; but in another class of clerks there is a deficiency or will be a deficiency of more than $50,000 if the bureau shall be allowed the number of clerks it ought to have to carefully and fully and thoroughly carry on the business intrusted to it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nebraska is now speaking to the former paragraph, which we have passed and increased to $1,800,000.

Mr. PADDOCK. I want this appropriation made in gross to cover all the expenditures for clerks.

Mr. ALLISON. The paragraph under consideration is "for salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, and salaries of storekeepers." The salaries of all these people are absolutely fixed, or practically so, but no man can estimate exactly what they will be, as the Senator from Missouri well knows, because it depends entirely on the number of distilleries, etc., in operation. Of course, if all the distilleries in the United States should stop work during the year, which is hardly probable, there would be less use for these storekeepers and gaugers.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be a good corn crop this year in certain portions of North Carolina and the expenses will be immensely increased.

Mr. PADDOCK. The idea which I wish to convey is that the appropriation should be made in gross, so as to enable the Commissioner to make such changes in the classifications as may be necessary as the business itself develops the necessity for the changes. That is the point in my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill on page 47, line 23, with the appropriations for "Independent Treasury," and continued to page 50, line 18, in the clause making appropriations for "office of the assistant treasurer at New York."

Mr. COCKRELL. In lines 17 and 18, on page 50, the bill reads "two chiefs of division at two thousand four hundred each." I suggest that we insert the word "dollars" just before the word "each," so that it will read "$2,400 each."

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "office of the assistant treasurer at New York," on page 51, line 6, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read:

Fourteen clerks, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 51, line 8, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks, at $1,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 51, line 19, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "office of the assistant treasurer at New York" from "$178,890" to "$184,090."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 7, on page 52, in the clause making appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at Philadelphia."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert the word "dollars" after the word "hundred," in line 7, on page 52; so as to read:

Assistant cashier and assistant coin teller, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 53, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And any unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1890 is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1891.

So as to make the clause read:

For compensation of special agents to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand at the several subtreasuries and depositaries, including national banks acting as depositaries, under the requirements of section 3649 of the Revised Statutes of United States, also including examinations of cash accounts at mints, $5,000; and any unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1890 is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1891.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much is that balance? I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know the exact sum, but it is a very small sum. These counters are now counting the money in San Francisco, and they will not complete it before the 1st of July. The intention is to allow this appropriation, whatever it may be—it is probably not more than $200—to extend over beyond the beginning of the next fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed and continued the reading of the bill to the provision for "mint at Carson, Nev.," on page 54, line 25.

Mr. STEWART. I have an amendment which was prepared in the Department, which I desire to offer to that clause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Had the Senator not better wait until the committee amendments are concluded?

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to offer an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator prefers to offer his amendment now, I shall not object.

Mr. STEWART. That is all right. I shall wait.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, in line 11, on page 54, in the appropriations for "mint at Carson, Nev.," to insert "sixty" instead of "thirty."

Mr. STEWART. That is right. I meant to offer such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 11, after the word "adjusters," before the word "thousand," strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $90,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the reason for that explained. Let the letter from the Department be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say respecting the incidental expenses of all these mints that I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury asking increased appropriations for them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the letter be read.

Mr. PLATT. Is that amendment offered on account of the increased coinage of silver?

Mr. ALLISON. The letter explains the matter.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1890.

SIR: Referring to the legislative appropriation bill reported to the Senate on the 12th instant, I beg to direct your attention to certain reductions which have been made in the appropriations for "United States mints and assay offices" for the next fiscal year.

Under the head of "mint at Carson, Nev.," on page 54, the appropriation for "wages of workmen and adjusters" has been reduced from $90,000 to $80,000, and the appropriation for "incidental and contingent expenses" from $25,000 to $12,500.

These reductions were not recommended by the Department, and it will be impossible to carry on coinage operations at the mint at Carson with the amount appropriated in this bill.

Since October 1 of last year a coinage of 200,000 silver dollars and some gold has been executed monthly at this mint, and the appropriation "for wages and incidental expenses" made in the bill, as reported to the House of Representatives, was on the basis of an assay office. The present expenses for "wages of workmen and adjusters" at the mint at Carson aggregate $6,000 a month, the deficiency being paid from the appropriation for the coinage of the standard silver dollar.

If it is intended that coinage operations shall be continued at the mint at Carson it will be necessary to restore the appropriation to the amounts made for the current fiscal year and as recommended by the Department for the fiscal year 1891.

On the same page, under the head of "mint at Denver," the appropriation "for incidental and contingent expenses" has been reduced from $5,000 to $3,000.

This reduction was not recommended by the Department and is not in keeping with the growing business of the mint at Denver.

It will be practically impossible to purchase apparatus, supplies, chemicals, fuel, etc., necessary to conduct the business of this institution for the sum of $3,000, and I respectfully request that the appropriation be restored to the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year, namely, $6,000.

On page 56, under the head of "mint at Philadelphia," the appropriation "for incidental and contingent expenses" has been reduced from $100,000 to $80,000. This reduction was not recommended by the Department and should not be made. The mint at Philadelphia is one of the most economically conducted institutions in the Government service, and the coinage annually turned out from it is enormous and constantly increasing.

It will be understood that this appropriation is intended to cover not only the supplies, acids, chemicals, fuel, etc., necessary for the business of this large manufacturing institution, but also the purchase of new machinery, repairs, the entire gold wastage, and the expenses of the annual assay commission.

On page 57, under the head of "assay office at Boise City," the appropriation "for incidental and contingent expenses, including labor," has been reduced from $7,500 to $6,000.

This reduction was not recommended by the Department and is not in keeping with the increased business of this office. The present pay-roll of workmen amounts to $525 a month, so that if this appropriation is reduced to $6,000 a year it will be insufficient to pay the present small force of necessary workmen without providing anything for the purchase of supplies and the necessary incidental expenses connected with the establishment.

On page 57, under the head of "assay office at Helena," the appropriation "for incidental and contingent expenses" has been reduced from $5,000 to $4,000.

This reduction was not recommended by the Department, and, as in the case of the assay office at Boise City, is not in keeping with the growing business of the office.

I respectfully request that the appropriation be restored to $5,000.

I beg to say that the estimates for the mint service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, were very carefully prepared by the Director of the Mint and showed a net reduction of $1,800 from the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

W. WINDOM, Secretary.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be again reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 11, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert, in line 13, on page 54, "$25,000," instead of "$12,500;" so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $25,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that based upon the same letter?

Mr. ALLISON. It is based upon the same letter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to say "payable in silver." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, on page 54, in the appropriations for "mint at Denver, Colo."

Mr. ALLISON. In line 24, on page 54, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "six;" so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the mint at Denver is only an assay office really. There is no coinage of silver there and no necessity for an increase of the adjusters.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 11, on page 56, in the appropriations for the "mint at Philadelphia."

Mr. ALLISON. In line 11, on page 56, I move to strike out "eighty," before the word "thousand," and insert "one hundred," which is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, line 11, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "eighty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including new machinery and repairs, expenses annual assay commission (and purchases, not exceeding $300 in value, of specimen coins and ores for the cabinet of the mint), $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 7, on page 57, in the appropriations for "assay office at Boise City, Idaho Territory."

Mr. ALLISON. In line 8, on page 57, I move to strike out "six thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 22, on page 57, in the appropriations for "assay office at Helena, Mont."

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "four" and insert "five" before the word "thousand," in line 22, on page 57.

Mr. SANDERS. That is just what I wanted to do.

Mr. ALLISON. That is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 22, on page 57, before the word "thousand," strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For incidental and contingent expenses, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Government in the Territories," on page 59, line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Judge" and insert "judge;" in line 6, before the words "deputy marshals," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in line 7, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty-two thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Territory of Alaska: For salary of governor, $3,000; judge, $3,000; attorney, marshal, and clerk, $2,500 each; four commissioners, $1,000 each; six deputy marshals, $750 each; in all, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 9, on page 59, in the appropriations for "Territory of Alaska."

Mr. EDMUNDS. A comma should be inserted at the end of line 9, after the word "Territory."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction shall be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to page 60, line 5, in the appropriation for "Territory of Idaho."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert on page 60, after line 5, the amendment which I send to the desk, which is made necessary by the fact that we have not yet admitted Idaho as a State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, after line 5, it is proposed to insert: For legislative expenses, namely: For rent, fuel, lights, stationery, postage and other contingent and incidental expenses of the secretary's office, $1,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that for? Let us hear the explanation of that, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. It is to cover for the time intervening before the admission of Idaho as a State, the incidental expenses of the Territory. It was supposed when this bill was prepared in the House and passed by the House that Idaho would be a State in the very near future, and the House made no provision for the contingency that it should continue a Territory for a brief space of time.

Mr. PLATT. They had passed the bill there for the admission of Idaho.

Mr. ALLISON. They had passed the bill there and we were trying to pass it here.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 10, on page 60, in the appropriations for the "Territory of New Mexico."

Mr. COCKRELL. Have we not passed a bill granting another judge in New Mexico?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the bill is on the Calendar, and the additional judge has to be provided for somewhere, and the same is the case, I think, in Arizona, that we have passed by; but before the bill is finished I shall have the matter looked into so that it can be got into a condition for the committee of conference to act upon if it is necessary.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 61, beginning in line 1, to insert:

Territory of Oklahoma: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and two associate judges, at $3,000 each; and secretary, at $1,800, $13,400.

For legislative expenses, namely: For contingent expenses of secretary's office, $2,100.

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Territory of Utah," on page 61, line 18, after the word "governor," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 14, on page 62, in the appropriations for "Territory of Wyoming."

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment relating to Wyoming, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 62, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

For legislative expenses, namely: For rent, fuel, light, stationery, postage, messenger, clerk, and incidental expenses of secretary's office, $1,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the same as the provision inserted in relation to Idaho?

Mr. ALLISON. The same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," on page 62, line 22, before the word "chiefs," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 62, line 24, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks of class 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 63, line 7, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Secretary of War, Assistant Secretary, and the clerks and employes in the office of the Secretary from "$106,350," to "$110,150."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the clause making appropriations for the record and pension division, on page 63, after the word "dollars," in line 21, to insert:

And all employes provided for by this paragraph for the record and pension division of the War Department shall be exclusively engaged on the work of this division for the fiscal year 1891.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Signal Office, on page 64, line 25, before the word "clerks," to strike out the word "four" and insert "six," so as to read:

Six clerks of class 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 65, line 14, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read:

Three watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 65, line 15, before the word "laborers," to strike out "five" and insert "seven," so as to read:

Seven laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 65, line 16, after the word "laborers," to insert:

Two firemen, at $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 65, line 23, after the word "each," to insert "charwoman."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, on page 66, line 5, to increase the total amount of appropriations for "the Signal Office" from "$153,960" to "$158,960."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 23, on page 66, in the clause making appropriations for "the office of the Commissary-General."

Mr. EDMUNDS. A semicolon should be inserted on page 66, line 23, after the first word "four."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so inserted, if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the end of the clause making appropriations for "the Office of the Surgeon-General," on page 67, line 15, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of the printing for the office of the Surgeon-General of the Army as is required to meet emergencies or to expedite the work of that office may, when practicable, be done in the office of the Adjutant-General or of the Chief of Ordnance, as the Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean? I should like that explained.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will explain that. It was put in at my instance. Some years ago there was a printing office in the Surgeon-General's Office. It was put in charge of a gentleman and his brother, who were interested in an outside printing office, and a great deal of the work was done in this outside printing office, and we wiped out the office, destroyed it entirely. Now they have no printing office and are issuing a great many circulars, and are frequently delayed, on sending the papers to the Public Printer, in getting them back. This amendment simply provides that in an emergency of that kind the work may be done at the little printing office they have in the Adjutant-General's Office or in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, without putting any new printing press there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the appropriation to pay for it?

Mr. COCKRELL. The general appropriation will pay for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What general appropriation?

Mr. COCKRELL. The appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Surgeon-General's printing and of the Adjutant-General's printing and of that of the Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see any contingent expenses provided for here. I am opposed to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Office of the Chief of Engineers," on page 68, line 12, after the word "draughtsmen" to insert "civil engineers," so as to read:

And the services of skilled draughtsmen, civil engineers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed in the office of the Chief of Engineers to carry into effect the various appropriations for rivers and harbors, fortifications, and surveys for military defenses, to be paid from such appropriations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 25, before the words "clerks of class 4," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" on page 69, line 1, before the words "of class 2," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in line 3, after the word "each," to strike out "one pressman and compositor, $1,200," and insert "two pressmen and compositors, at $1,200 each;" and in line 8, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand three" and insert "thirty-one thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of publication of Records of the Rebellion: For one agent, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; three copyists, at $900 each; two pressmen and compositors, at $1,200 each; one compositor, $1,000; two copy-holders, at $900 each; two assistant messengers; two watchmen; and one laborer, at $900; in all, $31,790.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, on page 69, in the appropriations for "Office of publication of Records of the Rebellion."

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest an amendment after the words "Records of the Rebellion," in line 24 on page 69, to insert "and pension division." That is a building occupied on Tenth street, and there may be some repairs necessary to be made to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a memorandum of that. I move to strike out the word "and," in line 23, and insert what the Senator from Missouri suggests.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the word "Rebellion," insert "record and pension division."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 23, on page 69, after the words "Signal Office," strike out the word "and," and after the word "Rebellion," in line 24, insert the words "and the record and pension division of the War Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the clause in lines 1 and 2, on page 70, appropriating $25,000 "for stationery for the War Department, its bureaus and offices."

Mr. COCKRELL. While we are passing there I move to change "$25,000" to "$30,000," which is the amount of the estimate.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is absolutely necessary that that amount shall be appropriated, and, in my judgment, it will not cover the necessary printing which must be done. In the preparation of the card-index records a great deal of printing is required.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This clause refers to stationery.

Mr. COCKRELL. A great deal of stationery has to be purchased for printing the card-index records.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, line 2, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

For stationery for the War Department, its bureaus and offices, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 70, line 5, after the words "Rebellion Record Office," to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "three thousand;" in line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "and for expenses of removal of office, $150;" and in line 8, after the word "all," to strike out "two thousand two hundred" and insert "four thousand one hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For rent of buildings for use of the War Department, as follows: For medical dispensary, Surgeon-General's Office, $1,000; for the Rebellion Record Office, $3,000, and for expenses of removal of office, $150; in all, $4,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 9, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to dispose of useless papers in the War Department under the act of February 16, 1890, in accordance with the report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, being Senate Report No. 1084, Fifty-first Congress, first session, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us finish the bill to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 19, 1890, at 12 o'clock m.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., as follows:

Almighty God, forasmuch as it hath pleased Thee to take out of this world the soul of an old and honored servant of this House, whose unwearied and skillful hand has these forty years preserved for the future the words and acts of Congress; whose intelligence, industry, and faithfulness awakened the regard and admiration of all who knew him, we humbly beseech Thee, grant to the wife and children, bereaved by this heavy blow of affliction, Thy consolation and peace. Give to us, who day by day are drawing nearer to that "undiscovered country, from whose bourn no traveler returns," a simpler and more reverential faith in Thee, a profounder sense of obligation to Thy Son and to our duty, and thus may we be prepared for that solemn change so near to some of us. And may we enter with joy into the rest which Thou hast prepared for those who love Thee. We humbly pray, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIDGE OVER TENNESSEE RIVER AT OR NEAR GUNTERSVILLE, ALA.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 9523) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Gunter'sville, Ala., and for other purposes be called up for present consideration.

The bill was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the Tennessee and Coosa Railroad Company of Alabama, a corporation duly and legally incorporated under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Gunter'sville, Ala. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the persons by whom it may be built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot-passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States. And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all companies upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, and, if they can not agree, then as the same shall be determined by the Secretary of War; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

SEC. 3. That the said bridge shall be constructed as a draw-bridge; the draw or pivot pier shall be at such point in the channel of the river as the Secretary of War may direct, and the opening or passage-way of said draw-pier shall be so protected and arranged that water craft can be worked through it at any and all times; and the draw-span shall not be of less width, nor shall the lowest part of the same be of less elevation above high water, than are the widest and highest of those authorized by Congress for any bridge over the Tennessee River, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with and the bridge itself at right angles to the current of the river: Provided, That in said bridge there shall be one span of not less than 300 feet in the clear: Provided, also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passing of boats; and said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the cause may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the State of Alabama in whose territorial jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built. And if any change is required by the Secretary of War in the plan of said bridge, whilst the same is in process of construction, or after its completion, or if the entire removal of said bridge is required by him at any time, the cost of such change or removal shall be paid by the company owning or controlling said bridge.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date thereof.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

MR. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] if he will consent to insert as an amendment, after the words "at or near Gunter'sville," the further words "or at or near Deposit, in the discretion of the railroad company." I ask him if he will agree to that?

MR. FORNEY. No, sir, I do not wish to agree to it. I would like to accommodate the gentleman, but I prefer the bill as it is. Gunter'sville is the terminus of the railroad.

MR. RICHARDSON. I have introduced a bill in the exact words of this one, with the exception of the words which I have repeated; but, inasmuch as the gentleman objects to the insertion of them in this bill, I will not object to the passage of this bill as it stands and will trust to further legislation in the future.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

MR. FORNEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM D. MATTHEWS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill (H. R. 8392) for the relief of William D. Matthews.

The bill was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William D. Matthews, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and emoluments of a captain of infantry from the 4th day of August, 1862, to the 2d day of May, 1863.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am entirely willing that the bill be considered, but I would like to have the report read or some statement made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, the circumstances are these: Captain Matthews was appointed as a recruiting officer by the War Department in August, 1862. He went to work and recruited a company of eighty-seven colored men, and served with the regiment until May, 1863, when the officers were mustered in, and the mustering officer refused to muster him in because he said he could not muster in as an officer of any company, in any regiment, any colored man; that all the officers must be white. Captain Matthews served faithfully for nearly eight months, was at considerable expense, and has never received any compensation therefor whatever.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

TITLE TO LANDS, SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 9048), to confirm the title of certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lot or parcel of land in the city of Sault Ste. Marie, in the county of Chippewa and State of Michigan, subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved the 26th day of September, 1850, entitled "An act providing for the examination and settlement of claims for land at the Sault Ste. Marie, in Michigan," and designated on the connected [corrected] plat of survey, approved under date of September 4, 1855, by the surveyor-general at Detroit, made pursuant to the act aforesaid, as lot numbered 135, and also known and designated on said plat as "village cemetery," containing 2.65 acres, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the corporate authorities of said city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to make such disposition of the said land included in said cemetery or burying-ground as said corporate authorities may deem proper.

SEC. 2. That any right of reversion or otherwise which the United States may have or be supposed to have in the said cemetery lot be, and the same is hereby, granted and released to the said corporate authorities of said city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 2, after the word "Michigan," insert the words "with authority."

In line 18 strike out the words "or burying-ground."

In line 3 of section 2, strike out the words "granted and."

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have some statement in regard to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon unanimous consent for present consideration.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects only the title to a piece of ground containing a trifle over 2½ acres of land in the city of Sault Ste. Marie in the State of Michigan. It was platted in 1822 and this piece of ground was set apart for cemetery purposes. With the growth of the city, it being in the heart of the place, the result of the location was found to affect the health of the city, or so considered by the city authorities, and so proceedings were had in the local courts to authorize a change of the use of the land from the dedication that was made, for public purposes; this was obtained, and one-half of this piece of ground—a little over an acre—was exchanged by the city authorities for 5½ acres of ground upon the outskirts of the city for a cemetery, and upon the other half the buildings of the town were located.

Prior to the Forty-ninth Congress some question was raised by some holders of preferential scrip up in that country as to whether or not by reason of some technicality in the original dedication and the subsequent change of the use of the ground from a cemetery and exchanging a part of it for a piece of ground outside the town, this land did not so revert to the General Government as that scrip might not be located upon it for speculative purposes, and a bill similar in character to this was introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress and favorably reported, but no action was had for want of time. In the mean time the application for scrip entry of the land in the Land Office came to a hearing, and finally, on appeal, the Secretary of the Interior decided against the application. The decision of the Secretary of the Interior I have incorporated in the report which I have made upon this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I may have misunderstood the gentleman, but I understood him to say that the ground was unhealthy for cemetery purposes. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYSON. I said that, the land being located in the heart of the city and it being used for cemetery purposes, it was regarded as an improper place for a cemetery, detrimental to the health of the community, and so application was made to the local courts for permission to dispose of it by judicial authority and change the use of it. I hope I make myself understood. Nothing is decided by this bill except simply quieting the title to this land in the village of Sault Ste. Marie.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. ATWELL.

Mr. BRICKNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 209) to authorize the Secretary of War to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to cause to be mustered William P. Atwell as captain of Company G, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Regiment of Infantry, to date November 18, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read, reserving the right to object.

The report (by Mr. OSBORNE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill 209, have had the same under consideration, and recommend that the bill be amended by adding the following words: "and that the Secretary of War give to him an honorable discharge as captain of said company and regiment, to date at the time said regiment was mustered out of the service."

Your committee adopt the report of the Senate committee, as follows:

"William P. Atwell, on the 30th day of July, 1864, was acting as first lieutenant of Company G, Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and while acting in that capacity on that day was severely wounded in front of Petersburg, Va., and lost his leg, being in hospital from the incurrence of wound until November 18, 1864, on which day the captain of his company, M. H. Hells, was discharged the service, which created a vacancy in that office, and but for the wound received and necessary absence of said Atwell at that time he would have been entitled to have been commissioned as captain of said Company G in said regiment. Atwell's commission as captain was not issued until after his discharge as first lieutenant, to wit, November 22, 1864.

"Application was made by Atwell to the Adjutant-General United States Army for recognition as captain from November 18, 1864, the date on which the vacancy occurred in that office, but his application was denied, there being no power under the general law acts of 1864, 1867, to afford the relief asked for, as will appear from letter of Adjutant-General United States Army hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

"Your committee are of the opinion that the absence of the petitioner because of the serious wound received, and from which he was still suffering at time of the vacancy in the office of captain, should not deprive him of a commission which the War Department recognized him as entitled to, and that the same should date from November 18, 1864, the date on which the vacancy occurred. His enforced absence was the result of faithful discharge of duty patriotically performed."

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.
Washington, January 4, 1889.

SIR: In reply to your request for the re-examination of your claim for recognition as captain Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, from November 18, 1864, to November 22, 1864, under the provisions of the acts approved June 3, 1864, and February 3, 1867, I have the honor to inform you that the act approved February 3, 1867, is construed to afford relief only to those who actually rendered service in a grade from the date of rank fixed in their respective commissions.

The records of this office show that your commission as captain Thirty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers was issued July 3, 1866, to rank from November 18, 1864; that although a vacancy existed for you as of that grade in Company G from November 18, 1864 (date of rank of commission), to November 22, 1864 (date of your discharge as first lieutenant), you were absent from your command owing to wounds received in action, and therefore any relief looking to your recognition as that of the grade and organization named can only be afforded by Congressional legislation.

Letter from this office of October 16, 1888, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS WARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Capt. W. P. ATWELL.

U. S. Army (retired), No. 2913 P street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Your committee recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman if this man would have been entitled to the promotion if he had been present?

Mr. BRICKNER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended in the report of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS B. McELWEE.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6018) for the relief of Thomas B. McElwee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas B. McElwee, of Athens, Tenn., the sum of $117.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend, after the word "dollars," in line 6, to add the following: "Being for freight paid the military authorities of the United States on twelve bales of cotton in the year 1865."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EVANS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DABNEY, SIMMONS & CO.

Mr. ANDREW. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5183) for the relief of Dabney, Simmons & Co. be taken up for consideration at the present time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and settle the claim of Dabney, Simmons & Co., of Boston, Mass., for expenses incurred in retesting 88 cases of opium condemned by the Government, and pay them such amount as may be found due.

The committee recommended to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine the claim of Dabney, Simmons & Co., of Boston, Mass., for expenses incurred by them in the retesting of 101 cases of opium condemned by the Government, and to repay to said firm, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the expense of the re-examination of all of said cases which upon such re-examination were found to contain the standard amount of morphia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

Mr. ANDREW. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the regular order until the report can be read.

Mr. KILGORE. If you will give time to consider that bill, I will withdraw the demand for the regular order. Still I think we may as well have the regular order.

Mr. ANDREW. This matter will only take one moment.

Mr. KILGORE. I withdraw the demand for the regular order for a moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be read, reserving the right to object.

The report (by Mr. DUNPHY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5183) for the relief of Dabney, Simmons & Co., of Boston, Mass., report as follows:

During the three months prior to December, 1889, Dabney, Simmons & Co., of Boston, Mass., imported through their agents, Paddock & Fowler, of New York, 101 cases of opium. The opium was rejected by the customs authorities at New York, on the ground that it did not contain 9 per cent. of morphia, the required standard.

Dabney, Simmons & Co. demanded a re-examination of the opium, and, as required by section 2936 of the Revised Statutes, deposited with the collector $1,111 to defray the expense of such re-examination.

A re-examination was made by a competent analytical chemist, who found that 88 of these 101 cases contained morphia considerably in excess of the required standard, which 88 cases were passed.

Dabney, Simmons & Co. ask the return of $968, the amount deposited with the collector for the re-examination of the cases which, upon a proper examination, were found up to the standard.

The law makes no provision for the repayment of such expenses.

The committee believe that the first examination, if made by competent, careful persons, would have disclosed the presence in these 88 cases of the standard amount of morphia. The rejection, after examination, of the entire 101 cases satisfies the committee of the incompetency or carelessness of the person or persons who made the first examination. Dabney, Simmons & Co. should never have been put to the expense of a retest of the 88 cases passed upon re-examination. They seem to have been required to pay $968 for an opportunity to prove the incompetency or carelessness of the Government employes.

The committee recommend that the accompanying amended bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ANDREW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT WINONA, MINN.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8792) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Winona, Minn.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask that the reading of that part of the bill which has been stricken out by the committee be omitted and that the italics be read. That is a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that part of the bill reported by the committee will be read, and not the portion which is stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. DUNNELL. It is a substitute to the original bill, and embraces the amendments recommended by the Secretary of War.

The Clerk proceeded to read the substitute.

Mr. SPINOLA (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, is it in order to object to this bill at the present time? If it is, I desire to do so in order to save time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to make objection.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would state to the gentleman from New York that the reading is very nearly through, not more than a line or two remaining.

Mr. SPINOLA. It is too much of a bridge for me to-day.

Mr. DUNNELL. The bill that is being read contains the amendments recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPINOLA. I repeat, it is too much of a bridge for me to-day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10726) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, etc.

The question was put.

RETURN OF A SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the vote the Chair desires to lay before the House the following resolution of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 17, 1890.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2865) granting to the Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Halifax River Railway Company a right of way across the United States military reservation at St. Augustine, Fla.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be complied with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The "ayes" have it, and the motion of the gentleman from Kansas is agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10762. At the time when the committee rose a point of order had been made upon that paragraph of the bill found at page 14 relative to claims for removal of certain Indians, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] desired to address the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire at this time to occupy the time of the committee with any further remarks of my own. On yesterday, in the discussion of this point of order, the Chair's attention was called to a ruling of the Chair during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress on a point of order made to that item in the Indian appropriation bill known as the Choctaw judgment. The present occupant of the chair was a member of that committee, and no doubt well remembers the discussion. I desire now to have read from the Clerk's desk the ruling of the Chair upon that point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be order in the committee while the decision referred to is being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires that members of the committee will pay close attention to what is being said and to the decision which is to be read, because it is more than probable an appeal will be taken from the decision of the Chair, whatever it may be, and hence it is proper that members should be advised of what the points are.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The subject-matter of this point of order is the provision incorporated in this bill providing payment to the Choctaw Nation of the sum of $2,838,798.62, which amount had been adjudged to be due that nation from the United States by a decision of the Supreme Court, and also by the Court of Claims acting in pursuance of a mandate of the Supreme Court.

It is true that this is a judgment of the court, but at the same time it does not prevent the House of Representatives, or a committee of the House, from looking into the decision of the court to determine the subject-matter of the decision; and if we refer to the legislation of Congress upon the subject it will be found that the act of Congress referring this claim to the Court of Claims provided that that court was authorized to take jurisdiction and try all questions of difference arising out of treaty stipulations with the Choctaw Nation and to render judgment thereon.

The matter, therefore, referred to the court was the matter of a treaty stipulation between the Choctaw Nation and the United States; and the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States have adjudged that under that treaty stipulation the United States was indebted to this Indian tribe, or Indian nation, in the amount set forth in this bill covering the judgment of the court, which sum of money is adjudged to be due them in pursuance of this treaty made between the Government and the Indians. Therefore, the subject-matter of this claim, as the present occupant of the chair understands and believes, comes within the very terms of clause 16 of Rule XI, which provides that—

"All subjects relating to the relations of the United States with the Indians and the Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor—shall be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs."

It has been stated in the discussion of this point of order that previous to the rule of the House which divided the powers of the Appropriation Committee judgments of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States were reported either in the sundry civil bill or in a deficiency bill. That may be true, but the present occupant of the chair is not aware of any ruling or any judgment of the Court of Claims or of the Supreme Court relating to Indian affairs or carrying out the stipulations of treaties with the Indian tribes which has been made since this new rule was established by the House of Representatives, and as this is the first time that the House or a committee of the Whole House has been called on to interpret the powers of these committees, being the first claim arising out of treaty stipulations on a judgment since these powers of appropriation were divided among the committees, the Chair thinks that this committee may well infer that as this was a judgment based upon treaty stipulations the subject-matter of that judgment is a proper one to be taken cognizance of by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Now the question recurs as to whether this matter has been so referred. The Chair is of opinion that it has been. Under the rule laid down in Cushing, to which the Chair has called attention and which the Clerk has just read, the powers of a committee are found to be, first, those included by its title and the power which it has, and, second, such matters as it has referred to it by the House of Representatives. Under both of these heads this committee, it seems to the Chair, has jurisdiction of the subject-matter here referred to. It is a proposition within the general powers or jurisdiction which the committee has; and it has also been referred to it by a memorial of the Choctaw Nation, which, in due course of proceedings, under the rules of the House, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That memorial, as appears by the indorsement upon the back of it, was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs on the 3d day of March last; and by reference to the contents of the paper itself it will be seen that the memorial relates entirely to the subject-matter of these claims. The Choctaw Nation in this memorial requests Congress to make an appropriation for the payment of the sum of money found due under this award.

It seems, therefore, to the present occupant of the chair that on both grounds the Committee on Indian Affairs had jurisdiction of the claim. It also appears from various other papers cited that the Committee on Appropriations might have taken jurisdiction of this claim by the reference to it of the item in the Book of Estimates or by reference to it also of those papers accompanying the case; and if the present occupant of the chair had been presiding in the House at the time, and the question had been raised as to the power of the Committee on Appropriations in the premises, or the committee had shown its right, by the papers cited, to take cognizance of it, the Chair would have held that it could take, and properly take, jurisdiction of the case. But as the Committee on Indian Affairs has reported this proposition, and it comes within the name and general scope of the powers of the committee, and as it has been placed in a bill the very title of which is in part "for the purpose of fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes," the Chair is of opinion that it is properly in the bill, and that the committee had rightful jurisdiction of the subject.

One word further and the Chair will submit the question. The Chair desires to state that he would be glad to be relieved of the responsibility of deciding this question, and to have the judgment of the House upon it. It is a very important question and the present occupant of the chair has no pride of opinion whatever upon the subject, but would greatly prefer that an appeal should be taken to have the matter decided by the House.

While the Clerk was reading the extract sent up by Mr. PEEL the committee rose informally to receive a MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 5381) directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COWLES. Let us have its present consideration. The committee resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move that we proceed to consider the bill in the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan). The motion of the gentleman is not in order. The Clerk will continue the reading. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] is in the act of addressing the House and the Clerk is reading an extract as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair will not hold that it is not in order to move that the committee rise, because the committee has risen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has the floor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to yield for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas has yielded for a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has not so informed the Chair, and the motion to rise is not in order while he holds the floor.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the extract.

Mr. BLAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, my object being to move to proceed to the consideration of the silver bill in the House.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND; and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. I ask for a division.

Mr. COWLES. Every man who is a silver man let him stand up. [Laughter.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, yeas 87.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. SPRINGER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BLAND and Mr. PERKINS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, yeas 105.

So the committee refused to rise.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the point of order pending before the committee.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say, in conclusion, that if the ruling of the Chair in the case just read by the Clerk was correct there can be no question that the point of order now under consideration ought to be overruled. I can say furthermore that, having been chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs at that time, I conferred with the then Speaker, and with several other gentlemen, and they all concurred in the opinion that the committee had jurisdiction of the Choctaw matter and that it was proper to put it on the appropriation bill. That is all I desire to say.

The CHAIRMAN. During the consideration of the bill by the Committee of the Whole yesterday, a paragraph found on page 9, relative to the Cherokee Indians, to pay for their transportation to, and subsistence for a year after their arrival in, the Indian Territory, was the subject of a point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the point being that the paragraph was not properly in this bill; that the item, if anything, was a claim or a deficiency, and had no place upon this general appropriation bill.

The Chair ruled upon that point of order and sustained it. Subsequently several other paragraphs were read, as to which the same and other points of order were made. Points of order were raised on the paragraph beginning on page 13 and continuing to line 11 on page 15, and also on the paragraph extending from line 23, page 16, down to line 8, page 19. These paragraphs embrace sundry items, some for the payment of money to individuals and others for the payment of money to tribes of Indians. The bill before the committee is entitled "A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes." Had these items been offered as amendments to the bill in Committee of the Whole and had the point been made upon them, all points of order having been reserved, the Chair does not hesitate to say that they would not have been in order. Though in the bill, they have no status higher than if offered as amendments. This is an appropriation bill, appropriating money for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling certain treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes. The "other purposes," in the judgment of the Chair, are those incidental to the main purpose. If, then, these items could not be considered as amendments to the bill when offered in Committee of the Whole, neither can they be considered when reported in the bill. If they are anything, they are deficiencies—some of them—and others are claims of individuals.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will allow me, I will suggest that a "deficiency" is a failure to appropriate a sufficient amount of money to carry on the Government under existing law, and that a treaty stipulation does not come within the definition of a provision of an appropriation to carry on the Government. It is simply an obligation created by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has carefully examined the decision made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in the Choctaw case, so called, was present when the point was made and decided, and heard the whole discussion, and is clear as to how the word "deficiency" has been treated heretofore in the proceedings of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the Chair will pardon me, the point I make is that the carrying out of a treaty stipulation is not the making of an appropriation for a deficiency, even though the money may have been due for several years past; because it is not a part of the ordinary and necessary expenses of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that if any appropriation to carry out treaty stipulations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, should by any possibility fail to be reported by the committee or acted upon by Congress, the Government would not be absolved from its obligations, but the matter would be a deficiency to be cared for the following year under the rules of the House by being placed upon a deficiency bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Chair permit a suggestion? I do not know that it will furnish any additional light to the Chair, but I wish to suggest that during this session of Congress the Secretary of the Interior called the attention of Congress to the fact that there was a deficiency in the appropriations which had been made for the care and support of Indians, and that consequently the Indians at La Pointe agency in Wisconsin and Devil's Lake agency in North Dakota were in a destitute condition—suffering for the want of the necessities of life, and that an emergency appropriation should be made for their relief. The recommendations in those cases went by order of the Speaker of this House to the Committee on Indian Affairs, not to the Committee on Appropriations; and it was not presumed by anybody that any other committee had jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under obligations to the gentleman from Kansas for his suggestion; the Chair intended to cover that point in his decision. The relief was granted by a special bill properly reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and there could be no question as to its jurisdiction.

The Chair has no doubt that, these separate items having been referred as they were to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that committee has jurisdiction to report suitable bills upon the subject, but they have no place upon the annual appropriation bill. The Chair puts the question upon that ground squarely. The Chair has stated that these items would have no place here as amendments, for as amendments they would not be germane to the purpose or spirit of the bill as defined in its title; hence certainly they have no place when reported in the bill.

The Chair regrets that the Government owes as much as it does, the payment of which ought to be provided for by suitable legislation; but that legislation of course must proceed under the rules of the House. The Chair has nothing to do in the matter but to decide the question according to the best of his knowledge and ability, regretting exceedingly that the question has arisen while he was in the chair. Therefore the point of order upon these items is sustained.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, with deference to the opinion of the Chair, I respectfully appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. From the decision of the Chair the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] appeals. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. PEEL)—ayes 56, noes 28.

So the decision of the Chairman was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows, under the heading "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes:"

For pay of physician, two teachers, two carpenters, one miller, two farmers, a blacksmith, and engineer, per seventh article of same treaty, $9,000; in all, $56,000.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 18, page 23, insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission, to consist of three persons, with authority to negotiate with the northern band of Cheyenne Indians on the Tongue River reservation and in its vicinity in Montana and with the band of Northern Cheyenne Indians on the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota, and with the Sioux Indians of said Pine Ridge reservation for such modification of their treaty and other rights as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, and for the removal of said northern bands of Cheyenne Indians to a permanent settlement together upon one of the existing reservations in South Dakota, Wyoming, or Montana; and if the result of such negotiations shall make it necessary to negotiate with any other tribes or bands of Indians for such portion of their reservation as may be necessary for the permanent settlement of the said northern bands of Cheyennes as herein contemplated, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available; but no agreement shall take effect until ratified by Congress."

Mr. CARTER. This amendment is offered with the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Northern Cheyenne Indians are divided into two separate bands, one located at the Pine Ridge agency in South Dakota, and the other at an agency heretofore established by Executive order in Montana. These Indians have been traveling back and forth over the intervening territory, giving considerable trouble to settlers and preying upon the country by the killing of stock. To such an extent had this line of depredations proceeded that on the 14th of May last the President communicated to this House and at the same time to the Senate a statement of the facts embodied in Senate Executive Document No. 121. In that document this amendment is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of the Interior and the President concurring. The amendment as now submitted is practically identical in language with the item furnished by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. As I understand, the committee has no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CARTER, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

OSAGES.

For interest on $69,120, at 5 per cent. per annum, being value of fifty-four sections of land set apart by treaty of June 2, 1825, for educational purposes, per Senate resolution of January 9, 1838, $3,456, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Osage Indians in quarterly payments the interest on their land fund as it accrues, except so much as may be necessary for support of schools and pay of employes.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by inserting after the word "for," in the last line of the paragraph just read, the words "establishment and;" so as to read "necessary for establishment and support of schools," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States of America not otherwise appropriated, and that said sum be expended and paid to the Pottawatomie Indians, known as the Citizen and Prairie bands, according to their respective rights and interest, by the Secretary of the Interior. This amount to be in full for the sums due said Indians for arrears under article 3 of treaty of October 16, 1826; article 2, treaty of September 20, 1825; article 4, treaty of October 27, 1825; for educational purposes up to and including fiscal year ending June 30, 1891; this amount to be set apart as specified in said several treaties as a school fund for said Indians, and paid out under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving a point of order on this paragraph, I desire to obtain some explanation of it. It involves an appropriation of $80,000, which amount appears to be money due under treaties of 1826 and 1828, for arrears, as it is claimed, for educational purposes; and it includes the fiscal year 1891. I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill why this money has not been appropriated heretofore, whether any question has been made as to its not having been used, whether there are any charges upon it, and why it should be placed in this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] has the papers relating to this matter in his possession, and I will refer to him for an answer.

Mr. PEEL. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that under various treaties there rests with Congress the discretion of appropriating an annual amount for the education of these people. In other words, we are at liberty to appropriate $5,000 during the pleasure of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. During the pleasure of Congress?

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir; but they were dropped from the estimates for some cause or other some years ago, and the appropriations were suspended. The Indian Office in making up its estimate of the school fund generally, and in determining the best manner of appropriating the money for these people, whether it would be better to carry out the terms of the treaty, which rests in the discretion of Congress, or to appropriate a separate fund for the maintenance of the schools there, recommended that the treaty be carried out and recommended that an appropriation of money for this purpose be embodied in the bill.

I will state to the gentleman further, that this appropriation now embodied is made in conformity with the treaty. We are under obligation to supply a fund for the education of these people, and whether the appropriation is made in the manner here suggested, or a separate fund is set apart, the question is as broad as it is long. They want school money—and I have the recommendation of the Department here in my desk if the gentleman desires to see it—and in making up the general school fund it was found that these Indians were not provided for in any other way nor would they be provided for unless we carried out this treaty. Then this is simply keeping faith with them under our treaty stipulations, and giving them the money which is actually needed for their schools, and to which they are entitled.

Mr. CANNON. Then, as I understand from the reading of this provision, and from what the gentleman himself states, in 1826 and also in 1828 treaties were made with the Pottawatomie Indians by which they were entitled to have $5,000 a year appropriated for their use for educational purposes, provided Congress saw fit to appropriate the money and give it to them, and that heretofore Congress, for a number of years past, has not seen fit to do so, but has refused.

Mr. PEEL. Not exactly. I will state to the gentleman that Congress made an appropriation for years and years, up to—well, I do not remember exactly the period—when the estimates ceased to come in.

Mr. CANNON. Well, say twenty years ago.

Mr. PEEL. I should say ten or fifteen years ago the estimates failed to come in.

Mr. CANNON. This provides $80,000, which I take it to be about twenty years.

Mr. PEEL. It is $5,000 a year.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Congress for twenty years, we will say, not having seen proper to exercise that discretion and appropriate $5,000 a year for these people, this appropriation now embodied in the bill makes up for twenty years' exercise of the discretion of Congress, running back, say, for nineteen years past, which it failed to exercise during all that time, and that, too, in the light of the fact that Congress by this bill, independent of treaty stipulations, but from a humanitarian standpoint, provides for the education of all the Indians.

Mr. PEEL. Well, Mr. Chairman, while that may strike the gentleman from Illinois as an improper procedure, it is still a matter of obligation with the Government under treaty stipulations, and the only question was as to the best way to provide this fund for them, whether to exercise the discretion in Congress remaining under that treaty or to provide a separate common school fund for them.

The question of giving these Indians an educational fund came up. The gentleman will remember that these Indians were removed from Kansas and placed in the Indian Territory some years ago.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but we have appropriated for years and years for them.

Mr. PEEL. Yes, but not for this purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we could have done so if Congress had chosen to exercise the discretion.

Mr. PEEL. Yes, but we did not. There were no estimates. The question came before the Indian Office and was before our committee whether it was not better to carry out the treaty here so that the Indians would have no claim against the Government for non-fulfillment of these obligations hereafter.

Mr. CANNON. But they have no claim anyway. You say it is discretionary with Congress.

Mr. PEEL. But Congress never refused to so appropriate, and every time the estimates were sent in the appropriation was made. But the estimates were dropped.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This, then, might be called the exercise of an ex post facto discretion?

Mr. CANNON. Yes. That is to say, you now propose to exercise, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania well suggests, an ex post facto discretion—

Mr. PEEL. It may seem so to the gentleman, but we believe it is an obligation resting upon the Government.

Mr. CANNON. And make up for the twenty years' failure of Congress to exercise its discretion.

Mr. GIFFORD. I presume the gentleman from Illinois wants to be exactly correct in his statement?

Mr. CANNON. Of course; but I am taking the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas as my guide.

Mr. GIFFORD. Fifteen times five is seventy-five; so that this appropriation, which the gentleman speaks of being for twenty years, is really only for fifteen years.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; say fifteen years. What difference does it make? The principle is the same.

Mr. PEEL. Let me state further, Mr. Chairman, that the Indian Office on an investigation of this question, looking into the condition of the Indians as far as education is concerned, generally found that these people were entirely without funds. Now, the gentleman from Illinois knows that it is the policy of the Government—and we have plenty of it in this bill, because we have provided funds for certain Indians and appropriated money to carry on schools, some specifically and some generally—that it is the policy of the Government to educate the Indians as far as practicable. But these Indians not having any school fund, and never having started their schools since they removed from Kansas a few years ago, and the lands having been allotted to them in severalty and inalienable for twenty-five years, which means that they have to stay there for that time at least, the demand for schools naturally and necessarily comes up from them, and we must meet that in some way. Now, the question is, Is it better to drop the treaty altogether, to ignore it, and go on and establish independent schools, or appropriate this money exactly in pursuance of the treaty so as to avoid any question that may arise hereafter on the part of these Indians under the treaty? On a full investigation of the subject, and on reflection, the committee believe it to be better to carry out this provision than to appropriate some money independent of the treaty; because nobody need make any complaint if the Government appropriates the money in conformity exactly with the three several treaties with these Indians, one of the treaties being for $2,000, another one for $1,000, the other for $2,000. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON. Now I make the point of order upon this provision that it is not in order to appropriate this $80,000 under a treaty, as the gentleman states it, where Congress had the discretion, at the rate of $5,000 a year; while this proposes to appropriate not only for the coming fiscal year $5,000, but in arrears for fifteen years back, and is in the nature of legislation not authorized by any law.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman, if he will think a moment, I do not think he will insist that the point of order is well taken at all.

Mr. CANNON. If it is necessary to appropriate for the coming fiscal year for these Indians for educational purposes, I will make no point of order upon that, but I do not want to commit the Government to the performance of a treaty and the exercise of discretion now for all the years when Congress has exercised the contrary discretion.

Mr. PEEL. What I was going to say, if the Chair should hold the point of order was well taken, and I think it is not parallel to these other cases we have discussed at all, yet if the Chair should hold that it is well taken it simply forces the committee to make it up in some other way. There is no other estimate for it in this bill, and you just simply leave the treaty uncomplied with and force us under the general policy of the Indian Bureau and of the Government to make an independent appropriation and add to the appropriation for schools just that amount.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but, if my friend will allow me, this is a wonderfully unhappy appropriation. It appropriates $80,000, professing to do it under a treaty, professes that it is for arrears due to them under treaty for fifteen years, sets it apart as a school fund for said Indians, and to be paid out under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, a lump sum that, if it was in order here, I would never agree to at all.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman will remember, all the Indian funds are paid out under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The Indian Bureau is but a bureau of that Department. If gentlemen want the language changed we have no objection to that. We thought it was proper to put it in that way.

Mr. CANNON. If you want to build schools for the Pottawatomies, how much is it going to cost, and how many of them? If you want to appropriate for teachers for the Pottawatomies, how many, and what does it cost to take care of them? But do not give, under the bare form of fulfilling a treaty, where it is not their due, and where it is subject to point of order, $80,000 in a lump sum, to be used in a way that we do not know.

Mr. PEEL. It seems the gentleman would like to have the appropriation in small pieces rather to have it all together. That is about the only point in his objection.

Mr. CANNON. For the reasons that I have stated, I make the point of order.

Mr. PEEL. If you will let this stand as it is, it complies with these treaties strictly, and with what the Government agreed to do. It will then be settled. As a matter of course this Indian school fund is under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and when they come to locate school-houses for the Pottawatomies in the Indian Territory where they now reside, as a matter of course the estimates will have to be made and the amounts set apart by the Indian Office for that purpose. It is all under their control. Then they can hire teachers and put them in and start the school, and they will have this fund as a school fund. It is in conformity with the treaty, and if you do not do it in this way you have got to appropriate for them anyhow.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? How much is now needed for this special purpose, to establish this school?

Mr. PEEL. I do not know, because we do not know how many children there are of school age. The only object is to carry out this treaty obligation.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. As I understood you to say, this is only a conditional treaty, that Congress may exercise the discretion of appropriating $5,000 a year.

Mr. PEEL. All of these treaties are subject to the action of Congress.

Mr. KERR, of Iowa. They have gotten along without this school for the last fifteen years.

Mr. PEEL. Because they have not been so situated that they could have a school.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has my friend from Arkansas any estimate as to the probable number of children?

Mr. PEEL. No, I have not. I have the recommendation of the Indian Office on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear some portion of the conversation which gentlemen are carrying on among themselves, as a point of order is involved.

Mr. DOCKERY. It was simply a point of fact that I was inquiring about.

Mr. PEEL. They gave us a statement of the conditions of the treaties and recommended that we pass this legislation in this form rather than in an independent measure. There are about fourteen or fifteen hundred of the Indians, and you can, of course, form some idea as to how many children there would be of school age.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] insists on the point of order, I want to say in regard to that that the Committee on Indian Affairs have appropriated money for the support of Indian schools independent of treaties, at their discretion. There is no law and no rule to govern Congress in regard to the amount they will give for educational purposes. It is a question addressed to the sound discretion of Congress. At the commencement of each fiscal year the estimates are made up by the school superintendent and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and sent in by the Secretary of the Interior, but they are the regular estimates. It is all discretionary. There is no rule about it. There is no treaty stipulation, except in specific cases with a few of the Indian tribes, in regard to this school question. Two-thirds of the money which has been appropriated for this purpose ever since I have been a member of Congress and upon this committee has been appropriated independent of any treaty obligations at all. It is a matter of general policy upon which the Government entered years and years ago, and it is simply the carrying out of that policy which has been encouraged and followed out by Congress since I have been a member and long before. So that we could appropriate this item, and it is not subject to the point of order, independent of any treaty. It is only adopted in order that it may be said to be kept in perfect good faith. It would be upon the face of it literally a compliance with the treaty, and that we could do just as well as not to do so. We could throw the treaty away and appropriate this $80,000 if Congress thinks proper, and it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Now, a word upon the point of order. I had to ask the gentleman about these treaties to see what they were, and it will be noticed that the gentleman points to three treaties made in 1826 and 1828 providing that the Government should give $5,000 a year to these Indians for educational purposes during the discretion of Congress. It then appears that for fifteen years it has not been appropriated. Congress exercised its discretion not to appropriate. So that there has been no treaty obligation for the past fifteen years.

Again, in line 16:

For educational purposes up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891.

It seems that this is a deficiency.

Again—and this is something more than providing for the education of the Indians; it is legislation in its nature, and appropriates $80,000. Then in line 18:

This amount to be set apart as specified in said treaties as a school fund for said Indians—

Again legislation—and paid out under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

So that we find legislation as well as appropriation. Under the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior every dollar of this $80,000 can be paid out according to his own sweet will, practically according to the will of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Now, as to another point that he gives. The gentleman says that independent of law we could appropriate for the payment of this money to these Indians. That is broader, I think, than the rules justify. The rule allows appropriations on a general appropriation bill "where authorized by law," and in other instances "where a work or object is in progress."

Now, the gentleman says that the Pottawatomies never have been appropriated for. Well, if that is so there is no "law authorizing" the appropriation, and there is no educational "work in progress" among these two bands; yet I am frank to say that if the Committee on Indian Affairs will come and say how many children there are down there who are not provided for, how much it will take next fiscal year, and come in with a recommendation saying that it is necessary, I will be the last man to raise a point of order against it; but when it comes up by wholesale for the establishing of a special educational fund, all or part of which may at any time in the future be spent according to the will of the Secretary of the Interior, I will not support it. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. This provision is not, then, carrying out a treaty stipulation with these Indians?

Mr. CANNON. According to the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas it is not. The gentleman from Arkansas states that the treaties of 1826 and 1828 provided that the Government should pay $5,000 a year to these two bands of the Pottawatomie Indians for school purposes so long as Congress saw proper to do it, and for the past fifteen years Congress has not seen fit to appropriate.

Mr. PEEL. It has never refused to do so.

Mr. CANNON. Why, a failure to appropriate is a refusal. Now, this comes in under color of a treaty, and it proposes an appropriation of not only $5,000 a year, but $75,000 for fifteen years back; not for the purpose of education and to be spent next year, but to make an educational fund, and then the clause artfully or otherwise provides that the whole of that fund shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior according to his will.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, the criticism in which the gentleman indulges as to the phraseology of the bill has nothing to do with the point of order. I never did like to argue a question of fact on a question of demurrer.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I was speaking on the face of the bill itself.

Mr. PEEL. I want to say that the point of order that the gentleman has made is just as good against every other item of school money in this bill, unless it is in cases where a treaty provides for it. The Chairman and the gentleman know by experience that hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars are appropriated every Congress for the education of Indians, and it is discretionary with Congress whether they appropriate it all in one great bulk and let it be expended amongst the various Indian tribes, scattered all over this broad land, by the Secretary of the Interior, or whether you specify in the bill an appropriation for a certain band or tribe or located school.

We have got a school located at Pierre, S. Dak., which is not provided for by treaty. There are two or three in Colorado, and some in almost every State in the West. The industrial schools are ten in number and not one of them is provided for by treaty, according to my recollection; but yet Congress has entered upon a system of education of the Indians in various ways, at various places, and on various plans and systems. Now, these Pottawatomie Indians in the Indian Territory are as much entitled to education as any of the Indians. They are peaceable, quiet, law-abiding, good people. They were once citizens of the United States when in Kansas; but when they sold their lands under the order of the Government they yielded up their citizenship, and when they went into the Indian Territory became Indians again. In consequence of that this treaty stipulation provided for $5,000 a year for educational purposes. It has been omitted and they have gone without education, and their children have received no education from that time until now.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow a question there?

Mr. PEEL. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the treaty had Congress the right to appropriate $5,000 per annum?

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair also understand that it was in the discretion of Congress whether it should do so or not?

Mr. PEEL. Why, the language of the treaty was simple. There are three treaties upon that subject, two of which provide that there shall be appropriated $2,000 annually; the other that $1,000 should be appropriated during the pleasure of Congress. As far as that is concerned, there is not a treaty in existence but that is subject to the pleasure of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Oh!

Mr. PEEL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Supreme Court has decided that a treaty obligation is no higher than an act of Congress. It is all a matter of legislative enactment, and there is not a treaty in the land but is subject to ratification, or rejection, or abrogation, or repeal by Congress. If that is not true, then the Supreme Court of the United States is wrong.

The gentleman's strongest point is that these treaties only provide for five thousand annually, and that this item goes back and provides for past years. That is very true, but the question comes back: Suppose we had put $80,000 into this bill without saying a word about treaty or other obligations on the part of the Government; suppose we had just put in that amount of money for these Pottawatomies, for school purposes, would it be subject to a point of order? If so, every dollar in this bill for educational purposes is subject to the point of order. Remember that the Government does not proceed upon these educational matters as it does upon appropriations for the support of the Indians. There are large amounts of money appropriated in this bill where there is no treaty stipulation or obligation requiring such appropriation. It is a matter of humanity, a matter of a policy entered upon by the Government years and years ago, and we can not now afford to take a step backward. This item, I say, is in the same condition. Therefore, in regard to this treaty, wipe out all mention of it if you please and say that we propose to give this $80,000 to these Pottawatomie Indians in the Indian Territory; this House may vote the proposition down if they desire to, but it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that the work of education has not been entered upon with these two bands of Pottawatomies. It has been entered upon with nearly all the Indian tribes; school-houses have been built and teachers employed, and that is a public work already in progress. But if the work has not been entered upon with these Indians, then I do not think the appropriation would be in order even as an independent educational appropriation.

Mr. PEEL. It has not been entered upon with them where they are now. Before they were removed it was entered upon, but when they were removed down there it was stopped. But I claim, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriation of this money for educational purposes is in the discretion of Congress; I claim that it is for Congress to give what it pleases for school purposes, and that this appropriation is certainly not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether he does not think that an appropriation of $5,000 would be in order?

Mr. CANNON. From what the gentleman from Arkansas says of the treaty—I am not familiar with the treaty myself—it seems to me that an appropriation of $5,000 would be in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, on the theory that the treaty is as the gentleman from Arkansas states it.

Mr. PEEL. I have it here before me.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will take the gentleman's word that it is as he says.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that an appropriation of $5,000 for the year ending June 30, 1891, would be in order, the treaty being as the gentleman from Arkansas states; but the amount beyond that, the deficiency, is not, in the judgment of the Chair, in order on this bill.

Mr. PEEL. With all due deference to the Chair, I ask how the item can be divided? Why would not the point of order lie against every educational item in the bill, whether with or without treaty stipulations? Does the treaty obligation make it less in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Suppose that this clause had been offered to-day for the first time as an amendment to this bill, all points of order having been reserved, does my friend think that a point of order would not lie against it?

Mr. PEEL. This item simply recites the treaty in order to show that we are carrying out a treaty stipulation. The Indian Office thought that this amount of money was needed for these Indians and so recommended, and the Committee on Indian Affairs thought so, too, and they put the $80,000 in the school fund because these people had been doing without educational facilities for some fifteen years past, and it was felt that they ought to have some assurance of schools in the future. The recital of the treaty here might very well be treated as surplusage. We only cited it for the reason that it looked respectful to these Indians to show them that we had cited the treaty and were carrying out its provisions; because all over the country, when you come to deal with the Indians, you are met with the reproach, "You have not kept your treaties." Suppose there were no treaty about the matter at all (and the treaty surely does not make the case weaker), this item would certainly not be subject to the point of order. The only question is whether Congress will make the appropriation or not.

Mr. CANNON. If there are no schools there, I think it would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. PEEL. I can not see why; and, although I dislike to make an appeal, I must respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the opinion of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 25, noes 34.

Mr. CANNON. I demand tellers. I suppose the fact that less than a quorum have voted entitles me to have tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. CANNON and Mr. PEEL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 37.

So the opinion of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $48,897.95 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, and that said sum be paid, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the Pottawatomie Indians, known as Citizen and Prairie bands, according to their respective rights, shares, and interest, this amount to be in full for the amount found due said Indians by supplemental report of commissioners appointed by the President of the United States under Senate amendment to article 10, treaty of August 7, 1868, with said Pottawatomie Indians; in all, $130,997.95. These several amounts to be paid as above directed, less the amount due the delegate or delegates, agent or agents, under contracts made with said Indians and approved in the Interior Department.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph until I can hear some reason given for including it in this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this is an item which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] had in charge as a subcommittee. He reported upon it favorably, and subsequently, upon his motion, the committee consented to incorporate it in this bill. The gentleman [Mr. PEEL] is entirely familiar with its history and with all the circumstances, and I yield to him to explain it, merely suggesting that if the Chair is disposed to sustain this point of order, there is no propriety in spending time here in talking about it.

Mr. CANNON. I simply make the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. All I regret is that the gentleman does not make his point of order against every provision in the bill. The committee has no interest in this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I have made a point of order on every provision on which in my opinion the point should be made.

Mr. PERKINS. But every provision in the bill proposing to make payments in pursuance of treaty obligations stands upon precisely the same footing; and if the Committee on Indian Affairs has not jurisdiction in respect to such matters, all those provisions ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman talks about "treaty obligations" upon this point of order. Somebody exclaimed many years ago, "O, Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name." Now look at this provision. It appropriates $48,897 to pay the Pottawatomie Indians "according to their respective rights, shares, and interest." Now, listen to this legislation:

This amount to be in full for the amount found due said Indians by supplemental report of commissioners appointed by the President of the United States under Senate amendment to article 10, treaty of August 7, 1868, with said Pottawatomie Indians; in all, $130,997.95.

Listen to this additional language:

These several amounts to be paid as above directed, less the amount due the delegate or delegates, agent or agents, under contracts made with said Indians and approved in the Interior Department.

There is legislation for you. What contract is it that we are legalizing? What is the portion of this money that is to go to the "delegate or delegates," "agent or agents"—one-half or three-quarters? Is this money to go to a swarm of attorneys? To whom is it to go? I do not know. My point is that this is not an item for the annual appropriation bill for the expenses of the next fiscal year; that in lines 10 to 13 we have legislation; and also in this clause:

This amount to be in full for the amount found due, etc.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to argue the point of order with the gentleman any further; but I do want to reply to the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois—

Mr. CANNON. I had to criticize, because this was legislation.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman will read those portions of the bill appropriating the school funds he will find plenty of legislation; and if the reason urged in this case is a good one, this bill ought to be kicked out at once. I venture to say that the bill reported by the gentleman himself from the Committee on Appropriations contained similar language in many an item—language directing how money should be expended.

I simply want to say in regard to this matter of payment to agents, which the gentleman seems to think is a job—

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether it is a job or not.

Mr. PEEL. The gentleman asked whether these agents are to get a half or three-quarters of the amount.

Mr. CANNON. Well, how much are they to get?

Mr. PEEL. Do you distrust the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CANNON. How much are they to get?

Mr. PEEL. I do not know what the contract is; but unless it be approved by the Secretary of the Interior no agent will be paid a cent.

Mr. CANNON. How much does this agent get—a half or three-quarters of the amount?

Mr. PEEL. I do not know.

Mr. CANNON. It was your business to know before recommending this appropriation.

Mr. PEEL. The Secretary of the Interior is a man of standing in this country, and although that officer is not of my political faith I would not insinuate anything against his integrity, as the gentleman from Illinois has done.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not insinuate anything against anybody's integrity.

Mr. PEEL. The Indians themselves select their delegates to come to Congress; these delegates toil year in and year out, paying their own expenses, and the Indians are forced thus to send delegates, because Congress has neglected year after year to fulfill its treaty stipulations with them. If they employ an attorney they are criticised; if they undertake to come here themselves they are criticised. In this case an old Pottawatomie Indian has been here year in and year out looking after the interests of his people. The contract with him in regard to compensation must be filed in the Interior Department, and nothing can be paid under it unless with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. This is the course which has always been pursued—to allow the Secretary of the Interior to make payment where the contracts are such as he approves. The gentleman is so zealous in regard to the interests of the Treasury that he can not trust responsible officers of the Government to adjust these little matters. Why, sir, the gentleman is getting to be like the negro's pole—so plumb that he leans over very considerably. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CANNON. Just one word in reply to the gentleman. The Secretary of the Interior runs his Department. The Indian Department, while in form under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, is in fact conducted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I am here helping to legislate and appropriate, and in the performance of my duty I am going to see that nothing takes place here by my vote or without my protest that I do not believe to be wise. Therefore I make this point of order that in the first place this item, if proper at all, is a deficiency; second, that various portions of the paragraph embrace legislation, which is not in order upon a general appropriation bill. It is not necessary for me to "insinuate anything against anybody's integrity;" but here is a provision undertaking to legalize a contract. See how broad the language is:

Less the amount due the delegate or delegates, agent or agents, under contracts made with said Indians and approved in the Interior Department.

The large amount here appropriated is to be paid to these Indians less the amount which may be due to agents or delegates under these contracts. I have asked how much is to be paid in this way, whether one-half or three-quarters, and the gentleman from Arkansas says he does not know. I say that we are entitled to know; and as it is against the rules of the House, in the absence of that knowledge I stand by the rules. They are wise rules, and I insist upon them and their enforcement.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss the point of order. The Chair seems to have formed its own judgment upon these several points of order, and there is no propriety in consuming the time of the committee longer in discussing them.

But I desire to answer, and very briefly, the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat. We all know that for fifty years or more there has been a general complaint among the people of the United States that this Government has not been fair and honest in its dealings with these wards of the nation, the red people of the country. Whether that complaint has been well founded or not is perhaps not for me to say or to discuss at this time. It is not the question before us. I do not desire to pose as a sentimentalist on this subject, but I do believe in that which is just and right and proper. I believe that the white people of this country have some rights that it is the duty of Congress to respect as well as the red men, and while I believe that, I also believe it is the duty of Congress to meet its honest obligations and pay to the Indians that which is honestly due to them, and so far as I have occupied a seat on this floor or participated in the legislation of this body I have tried to conform to that policy and to secure the enactment of such legislation as would accomplish that end.

Now the claim embodied in this paragraph of the bill was investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which made a thorough examination of the subject. It came to our committee recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; it came to us with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and upon a careful investigation of it by the committee it was the judgment of the committee that it was honest and right; and upon a further investigation it was found that the treaties obligated the Government of the United States, in the judgment of the committee, to meet the demand and pay it. We did not stop to inquire whether it was an obligation, growing out of a treaty, which occurred this year, or last year, or the preceding one, and we do not understand, and did not understand, from the rules of the House that any distinction is created by them in that particular. But we found upon an investigation that the Indians had an honest demand upon the Government of the United States, and we believed that the Government was strong enough and that it should be honest enough to meet its obligations and pay what was honestly, rightfully, and properly due to these people. We believed that they should be relieved from the necessity of sending their delegates here year after year begging and beseeching Congress to meet its obligations to them and pay that which was honestly due to them. Because Congress has not done this heretofore, because Congress has failed to meet its payments to these people under our treaty obligations, the duty has been imposed upon these people of sending their delegates here year after year, incurring unnecessary expense, employing delegations and paying them, solely for the purpose of engaging in an effort to get from the Government that which was rightly their due.

Believing this, the Committee on Indian Affairs has for four years pursued this policy, not to load down the Indian appropriation bill with a vast aggregation of claims, but in a consistent and conservative way to appropriate each year for a few of these demands so that in the end all of these honest and meritorious claims can be met, and the Indians will be enabled to get from the Government that which they are entitled to receive. That, I say, has been the policy of the committee heretofore; and every Chairman of the Committee of the Whole heretofore has sustained them in that effort; and we had a right, Mr. Chairman, to expect that we would be sustained in this, because the treaty imposes the obligation on the Government of the United States to meet these payments. We did not suppose that we were violating the rules of the House when we were making an appropriation that the law directed us to make and the treaties required; and these treaties have been respected by all of the Speakers of the House, so far as I know, and by the Chairmen who have presided in Committee of the Whole, as law that should be respected and upheld.

And so, as I have said, we have attempted in a conservative way to provide gradually for the payment and extinguishment of the claims due these wards of the nation that we believed to be honest and right. We do not propose in this bill to pay all of them. There is a great accumulation of claims in the hands of the Indians, many of which are honest and right and which are established by proof in the various Departments of the Government, and yet they have been compelled by the technical positions taken by the committees of the House to come here year after year and ask for that which is honestly their due, and which they should receive without asking. As I said before, we have adopted the policy—our committee—of taking a few of those claims that we believed were meritorious, believing the rules of the House authorized us to do so, and providing for their payment in the appropriation bill, in which we have heretofore been sustained by the House.

If the judgment of the House should be that this claim is not honest, if their judgment is that it is not a meritorious claim, if the judgment of the House should be that the claim ought not to be paid at all, I have not a word to say. There is not a member of the committee who desires that there should be paid through the Indian appropriation bill, or otherwise, a dollar of these claims that is not rightfully, honestly, and fairly due to the Indians. But we have taken, as I said before, a conservative view of the matter and placed a number of those which we knew to be honest and proper in the bill with a view to adopting such a system to gradually secure the extinguishment of all the claims by their proper settlement and payment.

Mr. BREWER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. BREWER. In relation to the point of order only, which is the pending question, does not the gentleman concede that there is legislation in this section?

Mr. PERKINS. The concluding paragraph is legislation; and if the point of order had been leveled at that simply I believe it should have been sustained. That which provides that the money shall be paid to the Indians less whatever amount may be found due to the delegates or agents under contracts made with the Indians is perhaps subject to the point of order.

That, I believe, is new legislation; and if the point of order had been leveled at that I believe it would have been the duty of the Chair to sustain it; but as it has been made it covers the whole paragraph. Now, that is not new legislation, but it is simply making an appropriation to carry out the solemn treaty obligation of the Government of the United States with the Indians. I think that duty and obligation rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs; it is given to that committee by the rules, and no other committee has that jurisdiction, and no Speaker has ever referred a bill to any other committee of the House that carried such an appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Now, only a word in reply to all that. The gentleman says his committee have jurisdiction of claims. If so, let them do as the Claims Committee do. I, with my claim, and you with your claim, have to take our chances on the Calendar. The gentleman admits this is a claim, and not an annual appropriation to carry on the service for the next year.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to say anything more, but for fear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] or some other member of the committee might misunderstand the criticisms that were placed upon the bill in regard to paying delegates, I want to say that under the law an Indian tribe has the right to send its delegates to Washington to look after the tribal business, just as we do with regard to our own affairs. In this case and all other cases that have come before the committee since I have been a member of it the Indian tribe are first called in council to transact their public affairs like any other council of people. They then and there nominate and select their delegates to represent them at Washington, in very much the same way as the people in our districts nominate us to come and look after their business, the only difference being that while the law fixes our salary, that is, we fix it ourselves, at $5,000 a year—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. When the delegates are elected, do they take their seats, or is there a subsequent election?

Mr. PEEL. Well, they might be contested and put out if they happen to vote wrong.

As I was going to say, the delegates are selected in council, the only difference being that they do not have the say in fixing their salary, as we do with reference to ours. They take a contract in writing from their people, which has to be acknowledged before a court of record and has to be approved by the agent. They then come to Washington as best they can, they wait around here year after year waiting for Congress and pressing their claims upon the committees, as the Chairman knows. They take that written contract that has been approved by their own people to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and it is filed in that office. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs investigates the regularity of it. If he has any doubt about it he sends it back to the agent to see whether it is the free act of the people in regular council. If he finds it correct and reasonable he approves it. It then goes to the Secretary of the Interior, who supervises it. If he finds it in conformity with the rules and all right, he approves it. But even then, after that is done, when the work is completed and the day of settlement rolls round that Indian delegate can not demand his money, as we gentlemen can at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but the Secretary of the Interior can cut and curtail the amount as much as he pleases, and he finally settles with him for whatever he thinks his work is worth, in proportion to what he has done for his people. That is all there is about it. And if we do not know how much he is getting, that is not a strange thing to a man who understands that kind of business. It is not for Congress nor the Committee on Indian Affairs to run around and hunt up these contracts. That matter belongs to the Department in whose charge this is committed, and I have always proceeded upon the principle that other branches of the Government were as honest as I was and would discharge their duty as faithfully as I would if I was there. That is all there is about it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALLEN in the chair). The Chair in passing upon this point of order desires to say, in addition to what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS], the chairman of this committee, has said, that he heartily acquiesces in all that he has said about the injustice of delaying these long-deferred claims against the Government of the United States in favor of these Indians. And the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] has the Chair for a witness as to his assiduity and faithfulness in undertaking to bring these claims to the attention of Congress and the country that they might be adjudicated. But that does not do away with the duty of the Chair to rule as he understands the rules of this House require, that claims of this nature can not be put into or acted upon in a bill which provides for "the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1891." That all these claims can be paid whenever Congress desires to pay them is evident, and that the Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction of these matters is also evident to the Chair, and they can be brought in by bills at any time and passed upon by this House; but the Chair still feels, and is stronger in his opinion than before, that upon an annual appropriation bill items of this kind have no place whatever, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIoux, MEDAWAKANTON BAND.

For the support of the full and mixed blood Indians in Minnesota heretofore belonging to the Medawakanton band of Sioux Indians, who have resided in said State since the 20th day of May, 1886, or who were then engaged in removing to said State, and have since resided therein, and have severed their tribal relations, $8,000, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior, as in his judgment he may think best, for such lands, agricultural implements, seeds, cattle, horses, food, or clothing as may be deemed best in the case of each of these Indians or families thereof: Provided, That $2,000 of the above $8,000 shall be expended for the Prairie Island settlement of Indians in Goodhue County: And provided, That if the amount in this paragraph appropriated shall not be expended within the fiscal year for which said sum is appropriated it shall not be covered into the Treasury, but shall, notwithstanding, be used and expended for the purposes for which the same was appropriated and for the benefit of the above-named Indians: And provided, also, That the Secretary of the Interior may appoint a suitable person to make the above-mentioned expenditure under his direction; and all of said money which is to be expended for lands, cattle, horses, implements, seeds, food, or clothing shall be so expended that each of the Indians in this paragraph mentioned shall receive, as nearly as practicable, an equal amount in value of this appropriation: And provided further, That, as far as practicable, lands for said Indians shall be purchased in such locality as each Indian desires, and none of said Indians shall be required to remove from where he now resides and to any locality or land against his will.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the following amendment: In line 25 of page 36, after the word "implements," I desire to have inserted the word "buildings;" not to increase the amount of the appropriation, but authorizing it to be expended in the erection of buildings, if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it can be used to a better advantage in that way than otherwise.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 25, page 36, after the word "implements," insert the word "buildings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Nez Percé Indians in Idaho, including pay of physician, $6,500.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, in line 16, after the word "dollars," insert the following words: "For support and civilization of the Poncas, including pay of employes, $18,000: Provided, That this amount be divided pro rata among all the members of said tribe in the Indian Territory and in South Dakota."

Mr. PERKINS. In some way that was omitted in the preparation of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Yakamas and other Indians at said agency, including pay of employes, $10,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 44, line 12, after the word "dollars," insert the following words: "To supply food and other necessities of life in case of distress among the Indians not having treaty funds, arising from emergencies not foreseen or otherwise provided for, to be used at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000; and a report of all expenditures under this provision shall be made to Congress at its next session thereafter."

Mr. PERKINS. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the Department asked for $100,000, and we thought it best to give them something; so we recommend this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Unfinished allotments under act of February 8, 1887, reimbursable: To enable the President to complete the work already undertaken and commenced under the third section of the act of February 8, 1887, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the office of Indian Affairs, and the delivery to the Indians entitled thereunder of the trust patents authorized under said acts, to be immediately available, $10,000.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to come in between lines 12 and 13, on page 48.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint a commission to consist of three persons, who shall negotiate with the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in North Dakota, for the cession and relinquishment to the United States of whatever right or interest they may have in and to any and all land in said State to which they claim title, and for their removal to and settlement upon the White Earth reservation, or any other lands reserved for the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; also to obtain the consent of the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota to the settlement of said Turtle Mountain Chippewa Indians on the reservation lands of the Chippewas in Minnesota if they hold sufficient land for that purpose; and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of defraying the expense of the proposed negotiations.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I will say that that paragraph is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and is accepted by members of the Indian Committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of farmers: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers, in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each month, to superintend and direct farming among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $60,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, in line 18, after the word "dollars," insert: "And no person shall be employed as such farmer who has not been for at least five years previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of Indian police: For services of not exceeding thirty captains, at $25 per month each; forty lieutenants, at $20 per month each; sixty sergeants, at $17 per month each; and six hundred and forty privates, at $13 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and for the purchase of equipments and rations for policemen at non-ration agencies, $160,000.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make the point of order on all that paragraph, commencing at line 19 and ending with the word "each," in line 23.

It will be noticed that the paragraph provides for the thirty captains, at $25 each; forty lieutenants, at $20 per month, and sixty sergeants, at $17 per month, and six hundred and forty privates, at $13 per month, whereas the law provides for seventy officers, at $12 a month, and seven hundred privates, at $10 per month.

This is an increase of salary, creating forty lieutenants and sixty sergeants. I have no objection to an appropriation in pursuance of law, but I do object to a change of the law and an increase of the salaries of these seven or eight hundred people.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is probable that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is good, and if insisted on it will have to be sustained by the Chair where a change of law is made. The Indian police, so called, is provided for by statute, and the appropriation is imposed upon us as a duty in consequence, but in this provision we are classifying and changing it somewhat under the recommendation of the Commissioner.

We thought that it would be better to provide for officers, so that they might rank as captains, lieutenants, and sergeants, which would create a spirit of emulation and ambition among them; we thought that the service would be performed in a more satisfactory way; that it would encourage something like ambition among the Indians that would be to their credit and to their advantage. If the point of order is insisted upon it is good.

Mr. BREWER. What is the increase in the expense?

Mr. PERKINS. The appropriation for this same service last year was $114,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is not the gentleman mistaken? Was it not $90,000?

Mr. PERKINS. It was $114,000 last year for this same service, and this year we recommend $160,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAYSON in the chair). The paragraph before the committee is obnoxious to the point of order, and the point is therefore sustained.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, then I offer this amendment as an amendment to the entire paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the service of not exceeding seven hundred privates at $10 per month each, and not exceeding seventy officers at $12 per month each, of Indian police to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, and for the purchase of equipments and rations for policemen at non-ration agencies, $114,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one female skilled laborer, to be employed in Indian Office, $840 per annum.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on lines 1 and 2, on page 50. This is a matter that belongs to the legislative appropriation bill, and is, therefore, not in order upon this bill, being for the pay of a laborer in the Indian Office in the city of Washington.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not understand. This is a laborer already employed.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. PEEL. This is not on that bill.

Mr. CANNON. Let me explain to my friend, and I speak by the card. A female laborer was provided for in last year's Indian appropriation bill at $660, but she is now carried on the legislative appropriation bill for next year. We picked her up where she belonged, and you now put in another female laborer, not at $660, as we picked her up, but at $840. Well, I do not complain much about one, but I do when it becomes chronic; and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. PEEL. This female laborer was intended for the same purpose as the one provided for last year. Of course we do not want to duplicate.

Mr. CANNON. That one is provided for.

Mr. PEEL. She serves there as a skilled laborer mostly. There is a little difference in the pay. I do not suppose the gentleman cares about that.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. PEEL. The gentleman objects to a dollar and a half on the pay of a poor laboring woman. That is the kind of economy he wants to practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois the point of order will be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That there be paid to the Mexican Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas the sum of $27,011.60, to be apportioned among those now living and the heirs of those who may be dead, by the Secretary of the Interior, as their respective rights may appear; and that for this purpose there be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,995.46, and that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to pay them the further sum of $9,016.14 from funds standing to the credit of said Indians on the books of the Treasury: Provided, That said Indians shall accept said sum of $27,011.60 in full of all their money demands and claims arising out of any payments heretofore made under treaties with the Pottawatomie Indian Nation, of which they are a part.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, upon the paragraph commencing in line 5 and ending in line 21, on page 51, just read, I make the point of order, first, that it is not authorized by existing law; second, that it is not a provision for carrying on the Indian service for the coming fiscal year; third, that this is a mere claim; and fourth, that the paragraph contains legislation, as the Chair will discover.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I agree, as to this provision, that the point of order is well taken, but I attempted to explain briefly to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the merits of the provision, and I had hoped that he would not insist upon the point of order against it. The truth is that these Mexican Pottawatomies, so called, were at one time citizens of Kansas, but soon after the war they went to Mexico, and while they were absent unscrupulous men in Kansas took advantage of their absence, had them reported as dead, got themselves appointed administrators of their estates and guardians of their minor children, and took possession of everything that they had and squandered it. Subsequently, on the return of these Indians, suits were brought against some of these people and judgments were recovered in the United States district courts, but the parties proved to be insolvent and bankrupt, and only a mere bagatelle was collected on the judgments. These poor, unfortunate Indians came to Congress and asked for relief. The matter was presented to the Indian Office and the Secretary of the Interior, and it met approval there. Then it came to the Committee on Indian Affairs at this as well as at a former session, and upon careful investigation the committee thought it right. However, at the time of including the item in this bill they were of opinion that if the point of order was insisted upon it would have to be sustained. I agree that the paragraph contains new legislation, but I am in hopes that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], realizing the merits of the appropriation, will not insist upon the point of order.

These Indians need this money; it was wrongly taken from them in the method I have stated, and a technical objection ought not to be interposed at this time. I trust that upon this explanation the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw the point of order. The item carries only $17,000 from the Treasury. There is about $9,000 already to their credit, that has been collected, and that amount, with the $17,000 from the Treasury, makes up the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will have to be sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ one suitable person as matron to teach Indian girls in housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not exceeding $60 per month, $720.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain what the "other duties" are?

Mr. PERKINS. I would state for the information of the gentleman from New York that the Quakers have been exceedingly anxious that matrons should be employed at the agencies to teach the Indian girls and Indian women housekeeping and the household duties of a Christian home. That may be objectionable to my friend from New York; I do not know whether it is or not—

Mr. SPINOLA. That depends upon whether it is upon the Quaker plan or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. But the item seemed to the committee to be a reasonable and proper one. While it is merely experimental, the committee thought the suggestion was reasonable, and they decided that they would provide for one, and, if the experiment proved successful, others might be provided for in the future.

Mr. SPINOLA. The gentleman has not answered my question at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including pay of draughtsmen to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $751,870; for the construction on Indian reservations of school buildings and repair of school buildings, $100,000; and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine for schools, $10,000; in all, $862,700: Provided, That the entire cost of any boarding-school building, exclusive of outbuildings, to be built from the moneys appropriated hereby, shall not exceed $12,000, and the entire cost of any day-school building to be so built shall not exceed $600, and any of the unexpended appropriation of the current year is re-appropriated and made available at once upon the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why this provision extends the limit of cost of the boarding-school to $12,000. Heretofore the limit has been $10,000, and I wish to ask the gentleman if he does not think it is bad policy to allow the building of these structures at any higher cost than that.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was before the committee and explained particularly this provision. He thought that as a matter of economy it was better that the provision should be enlarged as recommended by the committee. He said that for $12,000 he could get a larger building which would accommodate more, and more in proportion, than a building costing $10,000, and while there is not any increase in the aggregate appropriation, the bill simply authorizes $12,000 to be expended in the construction of a building where heretofore the limit has been $10,000; the enlarged limit being given for the reason I have stated.

Mr. SHIVELY. I observe that there is here an appropriation of $100,000. This is additional to appropriations we have made heretofore, is it not? There has never been in any former bill a special appropriation of this kind has there, appropriating $100,000 for buildings on reservations?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes. The gentleman will find in the appropriation bill of last year the same provision.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish the gentleman in charge of the bill would tell us whether any estimates have been given as to the cost of these buildings and any statement of the reservations they are to be erected upon.

Mr. PERKINS. The general appropriation is estimated for, but the details are not sent to the committee by the Secretary of the Interior, although the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the detailed statement that he made, did furnish a list of the schools and of the places where it was thought best to provide these additional accommodations. That list I have not got here, but the Commissioner had it with him when he was before the committee. He brought with him the educational clerk of the Indian Office and they gave us all that information, and the committee thought that in view of the importance of this work, and in view of what the Indian Office was accomplishing in this particular, it was right to give a larger appropriation for the service than has heretofore been made.

Mr. SAYERS. Did he inform you as to the character of the buildings that he proposed to erect?

Mr. PERKINS. Under this provision of the bill no building can exceed the limit of $12,000.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Who has the right, under this bill, to designate the places where these buildings shall be constructed?

Mr. PERKINS. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas. Solely?

Mr. PERKINS. Solely. There may be a general supervision by the Secretary of the Interior, and the plans and specifications are subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. But I think the determination of the question where the buildings are to be erected is with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who acts upon the recommendation of the superintendent of Indian education.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Did the Commissioner give the committee any information as to the character of material which it is proposed to use in the construction of these buildings? Twelve thousand dollars will erect a very fine house. In our country it would be regarded as a liberal sum for the erection of a school building.

Mr. PERKINS. No detailed information of that character was furnished to us. On some of these reservations stone buildings are erected and on others frame buildings, the matter being dependent somewhat on local conditions.

Mr. SAYERS. Are these buildings to be erected by contract?

Mr. PERKINS. They are erected generally, I think, under the direction of a superintendent appointed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the persons employed being paid, I believe, by the day. The work is not done under contract as a rule. But that matter is left by us discretionary with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as it has been heretofore.

Mr. SAYERS. Can the gentleman tell us how much money there is appropriated in this bill, the disbursement of which is left to the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. PERKINS. In the aggregate nearly a million dollars.

Mr. SAYERS. All told, from beginning to end?

Mr. PERKINS. All told.

Mr. SAYERS. For what purposes?

Mr. PERKINS. Exclusively for educational purposes.

Mr. SAYERS. The employment of teachers?

Mr. PERKINS. For the employment of teachers, the erection of school buildings, the maintenance and support of children at day and reservation schools, and for payments to the contract schools. We do not provide for such payments specifically; they are made out of this general fund of which I have spoken. A very large portion of this money is expended in payments to the contract schools.

Mr. CHEADLE. Is it not true that it is the policy of the Indian Commissioner to build several industrial schools?

Mr. PERKINS. It is his purpose, I believe, to do so.

Mr. CHEADLE. That is the question to which I called attention yesterday, and I have no doubt that is the reason for asking this additional amount of $100,000.

Mr. PERKINS. That is one reason why the additional $100,000 was asked for.

Mr. CHEADLE. I believe that some of the best educators think that these industrial schools ought to be located on the reservations where their influence can operate alike upon the adult Indians and the children.

Mr. SHIVELY. I would like the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment. This bill, on page 53, provides an appropriation of $751,870 for educational purposes. Following that there is a provision for $100,000 additional. This additional item occurs in no former annual appropriation bill. It is a new and distinct provision, is it not?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is right in that respect. But there is a limitation; this sum of $100,000 can not be used for any purpose except the construction and repair of school buildings on Indian reservations.

Mr. SHIVELY. And any portion of the other appropriation can also be used for that purpose?

Mr. PERKINS. It can, although most of it, as I suggested a moment ago in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], is used for the support of the contract schools; yet it may be used for the purpose suggested by the gentleman from Indiana.

If the gentleman has no further question to ask, I move to amend by striking out after the word "and," in line 13, page 53, the words "eighty-two thousand seven hundred dollars" and inserting "sixty-one thousand eight hundred and seventy dollars." This amendment is designed to correct a mistake in computation or an error of the printer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Indian pupils, at $167 per annum each; enlarging and improving buildings, necessary out-buildings, repairs, and fencing at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent of said school, at $1,500 per annum, $35,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That any unexpended balance of the current appropriation made for the establishment and support of the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., is continued and reappropriated and made immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move further to amend the pending paragraph by inserting before the word "Dakota" the word "South."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of ninety Indian pupils at White's Manual Labor Institute, of Wabash, Ind., $12,525.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out in the first line the word "ninety" and inserting "seventy-five." Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for White's Manual Labor Institute has heretofore been $10,020 for sixty Indian pupils. This is a school which is under the charge of the Society of Friends, and the appropriation has been at the rate of $167 per pupil, and for sixty pupils. The management of this school has enlarged it so that it has now an outside capacity for ninety pupils. The Committee on Indian Affairs, before which I went, agreed on this appropriation of $12,525 for the support of ninety pupils, which would be at the rate of $137.83½ per pupil.

The management of the school, however, inform me that while they have a total capacity for ninety they must make allowance for at least five on account of the reductions in the number of attendance that might be possible by reason of sickness and from other causes. The Society of Friends are under a contract to pay for the education and maintenance of ten Indian pupils outside of and in addition to any appropriation made by the General Government. The effect of the amendment which I offer will be to provide for the education of seventy-five Indian pupils in place of sixty, as heretofore provided, at the same rate per pupil, namely, $167 per capita.

I will state that I have been in communication in this connection with Professor E. O. Ellis, of Marion, Ind., Professor O. H. Bales, superintendent of White's Institute, and also with Mr. Mr. J. E. Rhoads, of Bryn Mawr, Pa., and these gentlemen have asked me to impress upon the committee the necessity and expediency of making an appropriation to provide for the support and education of seventy-five instead of sixty pupils as heretofore, and this without increasing the amount fixed in this bill.

Mr. GREENHALGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GREENHALGE. Why do you not offer an amendment making the total sum $15,030, to correspond with an aggregate of ninety pupils at $167 per capita?

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Because the management of the school inform me—I have the letters here—and I have so informed the Committee on Indian Affairs, that an appropriation for ninety pupils would be an appropriation for ten pupils more than the Government ought to provide for, and of five more than they ought to bind themselves to educate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 34, on page 55, strike out "ninety" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, that for several years the Government has maintained more or less Indian pupils at this White's Manual Labor Institute or industrial school in Indiana, and during the current year we are supporting sixty there under a contract with that institution, paying $167 per capita for them. This is more than, with one exception, the Government is paying anywhere for the tuition of any of these pupils at any contract school. Many of the contract schools have to support the Indian pupils at $108, others at $125, and I think the average, as I remember, is about $125 per capita per annum. But last year the House consented, and also the Committee on Indian Affairs, to increase the compensation to be paid to White's Manual Training School, so as to allow the same to that institution as was allowed to the Lincoln School in Philadelphia.

My judgment then was against it and is against it now. I yielded then, or, perhaps, I was voted down—I have forgotten which. But so the committee decided to allow for sixty pupils at $167 per capita. This year the representatives of the school came before the committee and wanted to get an additional number. They wanted to provide for seventy-five rather than for sixty; and the proposition was that if we would vote for seventy-five at $167 per capita they would maintain and support ten in addition without charge to the Government. The matter was considered by the committee, and finally the committee made this proposition: That if they would take ninety, and let ninety be mentioned in the bill, so that they should be obligated to take, care for, and maintain that number, we would appropriate in the aggregate what they asked us to appropriate. That was consented to at the time, though I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], speaking for the school, said he had no authority to consent to that, but thought it would be satisfactory to the school. That was accepted, however, by the committee, and I think it is now as much as ought to be allowed. If this institution is willing to maintain and support ten gratuitously, I do not know any reason why the number should not be mentioned in the bill and the appropriation made definite.

Mr. CASWELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. How many are now supported there?

Mr. PERKINS. Sixty; that is, sixty under the Government contract; and they are receiving for the care and support of that number the sum mentioned, namely, $167 per capita.

Mr. CHEADLE. Is not that the same amount that is paid at the Carlisle school in Pennsylvania?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, the Carlisle school is a Government industrial school. I do not know of any contract school of any State, except the Lincoln School, or any private establishment, where the Government pays per capita as much as is paid at this White's Manual Training School.

Mr. GREENHALGE. Let me ask the gentleman what is the occasion for the difference in the rates per capita paid at these different schools? I notice that they vary considerably.

Mr. PERKINS. The reason is that in certain of the States, in Oregon and in other States where everything is high, provisions and everything that is necessary for the Government to procure for the support of the schools cost more than in other States, and therefore the committee made an exception in their favor. But in Pennsylvania and Kansas and Nebraska, and most of the States, the maximum amount was $167 per capita, while at the contract schools, with the single exception I have mentioned, there is no school that gets $167.

Mr. GREENHALGE. The average rate is about $137.

Mr. PERKINS. A little more—$139 and a fraction.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill I have no doubt is correct in every particular; I have no doubt he gives us an exact statement of the condition of affairs. But still it shows an extraordinary condition. At the Government schools, where the Government erects the building, buys the land, keeps the school in repair, furnishes everything, and makes an appropriation for the superintendent and an appropriation for the teacher, and all that kind of thing outside—at these schools, as I gather from what the gentleman says, it costs from $167 to $175 per year for pupils with all of these things thrown in. And yet at the private schools, where the teacher, the superintendent, and the building and the maintenance is provided, it costs the Government, as my friend says, from $108 to $125 per head for the pupils each year; another illustration of the fact that it is always best, where you can get the service, to do work for the Government by contract.

Mr. PERKINS. I would say, Mr. Chairman, in explanation of that, that it is because of the contributions of the denominations or associations that partially sustain these schools. There is not a contract school in the country that can afford to take and support one of these Indian children for $108 a year nor for $125 a year, but the denominations that are represented in and that sustain these schools make personal and private contributions to assist in this work, and in that way it is done for the figures suggested.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that before the Government undertook the education of these Indians that these denominations were carrying on these schools and educating these Indian children, and that the Government simply came to their assistance, and they still carry them on partly as a benevolent enterprise?

Mr. PERKINS. That is correct, Mr. Chairman, and the most of them were what were known and are known now as mission schools, the Baptist Mission School, the Catholic Mission School, the Methodist Mission School, the Presbyterian Mission School, and other schools of that character, established here and there throughout the country, and aided by the private contributions of the associations or persons sustaining them. In that way these Indians were educated, and in the course of time the associations carrying on the schools came to the Government and contracted with the Government to assist them in the work of educating some of these pupils and to make contributions for their support, and that is the way this contract system grew up; and, as I suggested before, it is not because it has cost these schools $108 or $125 to do this work that the appropriation is confined to that amount, but it is because they do the work in part and ask the Government to assist them to that extent, while in the schools that are maintained exclusively by the Government of the United States it is necessary to appropriate what it costs to maintain them, because there are no private contributions.

Mr. SHIVELY. No one, Mr. Chairman, can study this question without being impressed by the contrast between the Government school and the contract school in point of expense, and in my judgment, likewise in point of results. There has never been a stronger exhibition of enlarged charity and philanthropy than is displayed in our contract Indian schools, which are contributing in a practical way to the solution of the Indian problem. It is clear that the same amount of money effects vastly more substantial results when expended under the direction of these private charities than when expended by the Government. The Government is a corporation; it is the last thing in the world that can improve the mind or heart. Earnestness and zeal always accompany charity and philanthropy. The contract Indian school stands closer to the Indian children. There is more of heart and soul in the work. There is less of selfishness, less of politics, less of peculation.

To-day the contract schools are educating the Indian children at a cost to the Government of from $108 to $167 per pupil per annum. In these cases the Government buys no land, constructs no buildings, pays no salaries.

In the case of the Government schools the Government buys lands, erects buildings, furnishes school-rooms, pays agents and superintendents, employs a corps of teachers, and after all this expenditure pays from $167 to $175 per pupil per annum. Besides, the Indian question is not a permanency. The problem in a few years, we hope, may be solved. It is expected that the Government free-lunch counter will be taken off the reservation, the reservation broken up, lands allotted in severalty, all tribal relations dissolved, and the Indian incorporated into the body of American citizenship.

When that day comes the Government will have on hand an assortment of school-houses all over the country, a vast plant which can be of no service but to suggest the continuance of the relation of guardian and ward between the Indian and the Government, to the end that the school property may be utilized. It were better to encourage and sustain the contract schools, otherwise there is constant temptation to the Indian Office to perpetuate itself by keeping open the Indian question and magnifying its importance.

Instead of being a temporary bureau of the Government for the execution of a particular work, it will become an appetite that must grow with what it feeds on. I doubt the wisdom of any policy that endows the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with discretion to expend hundreds of thousands of dollars of the public money in building Indian school-houses all over the country without any reference to the temporary character of the Indian service.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to make an observation or two further in regard to the matter. I notice in some of the items of the bill which has just been read there is an appropriation of $167 in some instances, and in one or two instances $175 for each pupil. Now, it seems to me that the amount asked by my amendment has been recognized as a reasonable amount heretofore, and that it would be reasonable to allow the same amount per capita, as heretofore, for fifteen additional pupils. One matter which I speak of in particular is this: This is not only a question of teaching these Indian pupils how to read and write and instructing them in arithmetic, but it is a manual labor institution, at which every boy and every girl is educated in some of the useful callings of life, and when they return to their Western homes they carry with them not only a literary education, but they also carry with them a training that fits them for taking their place as actual, useful members of society, of great benefit to those around them. It is simply a question of providing for fifteen more Indian pupils, and it seems to me that a reasonable amount of the money of our Government can not be better expended than in educating these Indians. When they are brought away from their homes it is in every instance with the consent of their parents. Take them to these schools and teach them, educate them, civilize them, and in that way make them a potent factor for civilization amongst their own people when they return to their homes. This White's Institute is not only a most excellent institution, but those in charge thereof, including the lady teachers, are people of the highest character, and peculiarly successful in their work.

Mr. PERKINS. Just a word. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], who speaks for this school, is not willing to accept the provision of the bill reported by the committee, I am willing that it should be amended so as to conform with the bill of last year, giving to the school $167 each for sixty pupils, although, as I suggest, there is but one contract school in the United States that we pay so much, and that is the Lincoln School in Philadelphia, where living is high and where everything has to be paid for at the high rates which are to be found in a great city like that. This school in Indiana has a little farm and garden of its own and it can afford to take care of these children for less than the Lincoln School in Philadelphia can. Yet we are paying out to them what we are paying to the Lincoln School in Philadelphia, more than to any other contract school in the United States; and if they are not satisfied with the provision reported by the committee, I think the most they can ask for is to give them what we are giving to them to-day under existing law. And if the gentleman is not satisfied, or if the school is not satisfied with the provision reported,

I would move to amend it so as to reduce the number to sixty and pay what we are paying under the current appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if in the current appropriation we provide for sixty at $167; that is, we were paying at that highest rate of $167 for sixty, and the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana makes it seventy-five instead of sixty.

Mr. PERKINS. He wants fifteen more at the same rate.

Mr. CHEADLE. Is not this true: that if you pay them $167 apiece for seventy-five pupils they obligate themselves to take ten more for nothing?

Mr. PERKINS. They do not obligate themselves. That is simply a statement. The gentleman wants ninety provided for at $167. In the bill we provided for ninety, but we fixed the appropriation which gives $167 for seventy-five of them; and I will say, Mr. Chairman, if we accept this amendment to give this increase every other contract school in the United States will come here and ask for the same.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment, so as to make it conform to the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24, page 56, amend by striking out the word "ninety" and insert "sixty" in lieu thereof; and in lines 1 and 2, on page 57, by inserting "$10,020" instead of "$12,525."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For education and support of one hundred Chippewa Indian boys and girls at St. John's University and at St. Benedict's Academy, in Stearns County, State of Minnesota, at $150 each per annum, and for the education and support of one hundred Indian pupils at St. Paul's Industrial School at Cloutarf, in the State of Minnesota, $30,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, there is a verbal amendment to that paragraph. It should be "Cloutarf" instead of "Cloutarf."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. Chairman, we have passed a section over I wish to refer to, and I ask unanimous consent to turn back to line 3, in regard to the Cherokee training-school in North Carolina. The bill gives $167 per capita, while last year's act I think made it $150.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is correct; and that is an illustration of the evil that was suggested a moment ago. These Quaker people said we were paying $167 at White's school, Indiana, and why should you not pay them the same? The committee yielded in this instance and consented that we should pay to this school the same as we were paying to the White school in Indiana.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is not this a Government school?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; it is a Quaker school.

Mr. SHIVELY. Well, has it not got Government buildings?

Mr. PERKINS. I think not. The buildings were all erected by the Quakers. The Government never made an appropriation of a dollar except as contribution for its support. Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, is more familiar with the facts than I.

The Clerk read as follows:

For trust-fund interest due Menomonees, $950; in all, $101,460.

Mr. PEEL. Now, if the Chairman will turn back to page 52, I desire to offer the amendment that I spoke of awhile ago, to come in right after line 16, on page 52, so that it will read just like the item above it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, page 52, add the following:

"The accounting officers of the Treasury Department are authorized and empowered to settle the account of Thomas W. Jones, late an agent at the Shoshone agency, according to equity."

Mr. PEEL. It is just like the Patterson item.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I was absent from the House when the item was passed, and I want to reserve a point of order against this amendment until I hear something about it at least.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] will permit a suggestion, he should make his amendment conform to that reported in the bill in the interest of Mr. Anderson, which designates and fixes the sum.

Mr. PEEL. I want it like the item of Patterson, just above.

Mr. PERKINS. But that is not my understanding. My understanding is that Jones claims that his claim is of the same character as that of Anderson—that he was appointed but was not confirmed until subsequently. The Comptroller of the Treasury held that he would have to give a new bond, and during the time that he was there in the performance of the duties of agent, in charge of the agency, charged with the responsibility and with the care of the property there, he was required to give a new bond, and until that bond was given he did not get his pay. He received his appointment under the recent Democratic Administration and there are several others in the same condition, where, under a technical decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, they were not able to get their pay. If my friend will agree to make it the same as the Anderson item, so far as I am concerned I have no objection.

Mr. PEEL. I would state to the chairman of the committee that I do not know what the amount is. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] called my attention to it, but he had to go away, and the best I could do was to make it the same as the Patterson item above, where it authorizes the accounting officer to settle the claim according to equity. I have no interest in it, but I think that would be proper.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman can state that this is the same as the Anderson case, and can fix the amount—

Mr. PEEL. I can not fix the amount, for I do not know it.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is not in order upon the bill. It seems to me well enough where that amount can be given to make provision for the payment, but here is a provision, which I do not think ought to go into a bill unless on the fullest investigation and report, to settle an Indian agent's account according to equity.

Mr. PEEL. Very well.

Mr. CANNON. It is pretty broad.

Mr. PEEL. That was why I incorporated it. That was the best I could do with the information I had.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can get it put in in conference. I have no objection to its going in on the conference.

Mr. PERKINS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas that he leave the amount blank (my understanding is that it is less than $200), and let the provision be the same as in the case of Mr. Anderson.

Mr. PEEL. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. CANNON. Then it would read, For the salary of so and so, late an agent at such and such an agency, the sum of blank.

Mr. PEEL. Very well. I will prepare an amendment, and will withdraw this amendment for the present.

I ask unanimous consent to return to page 62, and insert, after line 21, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 62, after line 21, insert:

"For salary of Thomas W. Jones, late agent at the Shoshone Indian agency, from the — day of — to the — day of —, — dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 24, page 57, insert:

"For the education and support of one hundred Indian children at the Holy Trinity Indian School at Blackfeet agency, Montana, $12,500."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this amendment I will say that under a permit from the Department charitably disposed persons have erected a building at the Blackfeet agency in Montana, costing about $20,000. The report of the Indian Commissioner shows that outside of this building there are accommodations at that agency for but fifty Indian children, whereas there are four hundred and fifty children of school age on the reservation. This amendment makes but appropriate provision for a portion of the children there who are in no manner provided for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana is substantially the same in form as the provisions in the bill pertaining to the St. Joseph School, in Indiana, and the St. Boniface School, in California, and other schools that we authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to make contracts with, and I think the amendment should be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of occupying two or three minutes in making a comparison between this bill and former Indian appropriation bills, not to criticize the work of the present Committee on Indian Affairs, but to show how when appropriations even for extraordinary purposes once get a footing they are apt to be kept up in aggregate, even for ordinary purposes.

To illustrate: The Indian appropriation acts for the fiscal years 1881 to 1888, inclusive, were as follows:

1881.....	$4,657,262.72	1887.....	5,546,282.84
1882.....	4,567,866.80	1888.....	5,226,897.66
1883.....	5,228,374.01
1884.....	5,358,635.91
1885.....	5,859,402.91
1886.....	5,762,512.70
		Total for eight years.....	42,228,235.55
		Average per annum.....	5,278,529.44

According to the report on the pending bill it appropriates $6,312,620.46, to which there has been added, as reprinted, items swelling it to $6,390,743.10, which is $1,112,213.66 more than the average appropriated each year by appropriation acts for the years 1881 to 1888.

For 1889 the Indian appropriation act was unduly swollen by an appropriation of $2,858,798.62 to pay the Choctaw judgment; if that item had been omitted the act would have appropriated only $5,404,902.17, or $985,840.93 less than the pending bill.

For 1890 the Indian appropriation act was again unduly swollen by two unusual items, namely: Payment to Pottawatomie Indians of an old award, with interest for twenty years, and amounting to $361,682.04; and payment to Seminole Indians for certain lands, $1,912,942.02. If these items had been omitted from the act it would have appropriated only $5,802,829.33, or $587,913.77 less than the pending bill as it was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

This bill, however, now carries in round numbers $300,000 less than it did when reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, that amount having been eliminated by points of order that I believed it my duty to make.

Mr. SAYERS. Are there any extraordinary items in this bill?

Mr. CANNON. I am not aware of any extraordinary items in this bill now.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think there are some very extraordinary items in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. I mean in regard to amounts.

Mr. CANNON. I speak with reference to appropriations for the necessities of the public service. I understand that there has been a growth in the Indian schools to the amount of three or four hundred thousand dollars, and an increase in some other items. So, Mr. Chairman, we have here a bill which they say is less than the bill of 1890 and less than the bill of 1889, and of course it is. It is somewhat less now than when it was reported to the House, but possibly and probably it ought to be still less, because the bill of 1889 and the bill of 1890 were swollen by the extraordinary items I have spoken of.

I have thought it was proper, Mr. Chairman, not at all by way of unfriendly criticism upon the Indian Committee, to call attention at this time to the manner in which the bill of 1889 and the bill of 1890 were swollen by the extraordinary items I have mentioned, and to show how difficult it is, when you get an annual appropriation bill up to a certain point, to reduce it again, even after the extraordinary items have been disposed of.

Mr. PEEL. Having listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I desire only to thank him for his complimentary allusions to the action heretofore of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the fact is, as the gentleman from Illinois has suggested, that for two or three years at least the annual appropriations for the Indian service have been growing, and I think rightly growing. All who are at all familiar with the efforts which have been made by the Government to educate the Indians and improve their condition know that those efforts are, comparatively speaking, of recent origin. We know that this system of building up Indian industrial schools, of encouraging the adult Indians to send their little ones to school that they may be qualified for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, is of quite recent growth. Hence, naturally, and as I think properly, the expenditures on the part of the Government for this service have increased.

The Carlisle school, which was organized nine years ago, was the first school of its character in the United States. That was the inception of this system of Indian education. The results there proving satisfactory, Congress was encouraged to make appropriations to sustain that institution, the success of which prompted the organization of other schools. Thus the Indian education system has grown—grown upon the country, grown upon Congress; and in my judgment it is growing in the confidence and good-will of the people of the United States every day.

As I suggested in my introductory remarks on this bill, we receive petitions constantly from all sections of the country urging us to sustain the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his work and in the recommendations he has made to Congress for more liberal appropriations than have heretofore been made for this service. Responding to these petitions, responding to the supplications of the good people of the country, who believe it is proper to educate and christianize the Indians, rather than to maintain armies to fight them, we reported this bill. Because of the extension of this policy it may be that the bill carries more than did the annual appropriation bill of last year or the bills of previous years. But the increase involved is in the right direction. It is in the interest of humanity, in the interest of the wards of the nation; and I believe that our action has the approval of the good people of this land, irrespective of party and without denominational distinctions.

While it may be true that this Indian appropriation bill carries more than previous bills of this character, yet, if we examine carefully and find how much has been appropriated by the Government in the past to maintain armies for the purpose of fighting the Indians, we shall find that in the aggregate there is a great saving to the Government; that it costs less to maintain these schools, to employ these teachers, to educate these red children, and to qualify them for the duties and responsibilities of good citizens than it does to send battalions to the Rocky Mountains and to the lava beds of the West to carry on Indian wars. If we are actuated by no higher motives than those of economy—if we divest ourselves of all sentiment in this matter and look at this simply as an economical proposition, in that view alone the policy we are now pursuing is cheaper and better than that adopted in the past.

Mr. MORSE. Will my friend from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] allow me to interject a remark?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. MORSE. It has been estimated by competent authority that it costs the Government of the United States and the tax-payers a million dollars to shoot an Indian. Had we not better spend a far less sum in educating and civilizing these people?

Mr. PERKINS. The suggestion of the gentleman is in harmony with the views I have endeavored to submit.

It was not until 1887 that Congress passed the act providing for the allotment of lands to Indians in severalty. All this legislation looking to the education and moral elevation of the Indian is of recent origin. The system of building industrial schools, of erecting reservation day-schools and boarding-schools, of qualifying the Indians to discharge the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, of allotting lands to them in severalty, of encouraging them to build up homes and cultivate individuality of character, breaking up the tribal organizations—everything of this kind is of recent origin. And the work of the Government in allotting lands to the Indians in severalty and inducing them to establish homes distinct and apart from the tribal organization goes hand in hand with this work of Indian education; and this policy is accomplishing much in the direction that the people like to see work accomplished.

It is seldom now that you hear of an Indian outbreak. It is seldom you hear of the military forces of the Government being called upon to put down an Indian insurrection. As we progress in our work these Indian depredations and outbreaks gradually disappear, and in my judgment the time is near when every Indian tribe in the country will be prepared to take its lands in severalty and the members ready to establish and maintain their individual homes, and their little ones will thus be trained for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. And as a matter of economy, as I suggested a moment ago, if we are not to be governed by higher considerations, it is better and cheaper; and so while this bill may swell in the aggregate the expenditures of the Government in this direction, there is a decrease of appropriation and there is economy in it. That is all I desired to say in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The gentleman from Michigan, I believe, desired to occupy the floor for a few moments, but as I do not see him in his seat at present, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and as so amended that the bill do pass.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were severally read, considered, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 5974) extending the time of payment to purchasers of land of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. MORGAN.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 3596) granting to the Rio Grande Southern Railroad Company the right of way through the Fort Lewis military reservation, in La Plata County, in the State of Colorado.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 401) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Alexandria, State of Louisiana.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BELDEN. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. KILGORE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House do now adjourn, and the gentleman from Texas demands the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PERKINS, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the vote, the Chair desires to lay before the House certain personal requests, changes of reference, and a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 10065) constituting Irondequoit Bay, New York, a navigable water of the United States for certain purposes; and
A bill (H. R. 7217) to amend "An act for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ATKINSON, of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of a death in his family.

To Mr. PRICE, for ten days from this date, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEE, until Thursday next, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce the following changes of reference, reported back by the committees to which the bills were originally referred, namely:

The bill (H. R. 10590) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank—from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and

The joint resolution (H. Res. 176) authorizing payment of pay and allowance to minors who were discharged from Army of United States after close of war of rebellion by special order secured by action of friends and before the date of general order mustering out their commands—from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. PERKINS was then announced; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 19, 1890.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, submitting the estimate of an appropriation in the sum of $5,000 for appraisement of the Fort Angeles town-site reservation; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 5183) for relief of Dabney, Simmons & Co.; and

A bill (H. R. 6018) for the relief of Thomas B. McElwee.

The bill (H. R. 8392) for the relief of William D. Matthews was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 9048) to confirm the title to certain lands in the city of Sault Ste. Marie, and State of Michigan, and to release any reversionary right of the Government of the United States therein was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 9523) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN. I have a petition that is addressed to the President of the United States (but I have been requested to present it to the Senate for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations) by certain citizens of the United States, who claim that they are the rightful owners of certain lands in the Fiji Islands, in the South Sea, now known as the British colony of Fiji, and that they acquired their titles from the native chiefs by certain conveyances, which they proceed here to proclaim. They set forth the grounds upon which their title is based and the difficulty of getting any proper adjudication by the colonial authorities there upon that question; and they ask for a joint commission to be organized by agreement between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States for the purpose of taking into consideration their claim of title to those lands; and they pray that the Senate will take such action upon the subject as may be considered appropriate. Accompanying the paper is a long printed statement which sets forth the grounds upon which their title is based.

I move the reference of this petition or paper, with the accompanying documents, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Logan County, Ohio, praying for the passage of a per diem pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 11 citizens of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the passage of the McKinley tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present the petition of the Lake View Post, No. 246, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, praying for the passage of a service-pension bill, and stating that if the platform of the Republican national convention at Chicago, in 1888, on this subject meant anything it meant the passage of such a bill; and further stating that they believe their interests have been neglected by the present Congress. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of John H. Clark and other citizens of Clay County, Indiana, praying for the free coinage of silver and an increase of legal-tender Treasury-note circulation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of N. L. Noble and other citizens of Sebastian County, Arkansas, praying for the construction of a complete system of levees from Cairo to New Orleans on the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of John Colter, late a member of Company H, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, praying to be paid certain sums of money advanced as bounty to enlisted men during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURN. I present the petition of Eric Johnson, John Gahn, and a large number of other citizens of Stark, Chicago County, Minnesota, praying for the passage of the pending tariff bill called the McKinley bill. The petitioners suggest that they have heard that large importing firms are asking for the defeat of this measure, and that it would be very strange if the Senate of the United States would take part in favor of the rich importer as against the mortgage-burdened farmers.

I move that the petition lie on the table, as the bill has been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of the Sunny Hillside Farmers' Alliance, No. 542, of Cambridge, Nebr., praying for the speedy passage by Congress of House bill 283, known as the Conger lard bill, and also House bill 5353, known as the Butterworth option bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DIXON presented the petition of A. W. Colvin and 73 other citizens of Kent County, Rhode Island, praying for a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of J. E. Kennedy and others, merchants of Cshkosh, Wis., praying that a rebate be given dealers on all refined sugar on hand at the time the pending tariff bill takes effect; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL. I present memorials from New York, Vermont, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, opposing any heavier tax upon tin than is now imposed. The memorials are in the usual printed style. I move that they lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a memorial of many fish-dealers of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against any increase of duties on fresh and salt fish; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of District Assembly, No. 4, Knights of Labor, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of House bill 260, for the punishment of parties counterfeiting trade marks, labels, etc., and also remonstrating against the passage of Federal election bills; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Williams Farmers and Laborers' Union, No. 1276, of Blue Springs, Mo., praying for the free coinage of silver and denouncing the subtreasury system; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of the Carpenters and Joiners' Union of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the proposed increase of duties upon tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3834) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes," approved January 14, 1889, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, reported three amendments intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1411) to authorize corporations to become surety in certain cases in the courts of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9677) to authorize the county of Pulaski, in the State of Georgia, to maintain a high wagon and foot bridge across the Ocmulgee River at or near Hawkinsville, in the State of Georgia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9521) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 3917) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea. This bill adopts the regulations agreed upon by the late International Maritime Convention and is recommended by the Secretary of State, by the Maritime Association of the port of New York, the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia, and other mercantile bodies. It is an important bill, and I shall ask for its early consideration. It repeals the existing regulations and takes effect only upon the proclamation of the President, which I presume will not be until a sufficient number of nations have agreed to its provisions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1004) granting a bounty of $100 to the Second Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (S. 118) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George S. Ackerson; and

A bill (S. 1124) for the relief of Daniel W. Boutwell.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3436) to correct the military record of Roswell M. Shurtleff; and

A bill (S. 3455) to restore Henry S. Cohn to the rank of second lieutenant.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 865) to provide for paying certain advances made to the United States by the States of Maryland and Virginia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3799) making an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the construction of a light and fog-signal at St. Andrew's Bay, Florida, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2792) to make the Lake Borgne outlet and to improve the low-water channel of the Lower Mississippi River, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 278) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1358) to remove the charge of desertion against John Milroy, and authorizing his honorable discharge, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3865) to provide for the reorganization of the artillery force of the Army, reported it with amendments.

RETURN OF PAPERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back, with an amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. 95) relative to certain bonds, drafts, and other papers in the Department of State, and to ask for its immediate passage. It does not involve an appropriation and there is some urgency why the party interested should have these papers. I ask the Senate to consider the resolution now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information and then we can tell whether there will be objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. If there be no report in writing, will the Senator from Ohio kindly give us a statement of the reasons why this joint resolution should pass?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a report in writing, but I can state the case in a few words. Mr. Hargous had a claim against Mexico and submitted it to the Mexican and American Claims Commission, and they rejected it on the ground that it was not within their jurisdiction under the terms of the treaty. So the administrator has commenced a suit against Mexico in the Mexican courts, and it is necessary for him to produce these papers. We asked the Secretary of State if there was any objection. He says there is no objection whatever. The papers belong to a private party, and they were left in the Department of State by the commission because they could not take jurisdiction of the case. That is all there is of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 20, after the words "claim of," strike out the remainder of the joint resolution in the following words:

The person so entitled as aforesaid against Mexico, the same having been deposited in the State Department in error.

And in lieu thereof insert:

Louis S. Hargous against Mexico presented before the American and Mexican Mixed Commission, numbered 782, 783, and 784, and rejected by said commission for want of jurisdiction, and now in litigation before the courts of Mexico at the suit of Robert S. Hargous, administrator of said Louis S. Hargous, deceased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to surrender certain bonds, drafts, and other papers in the Department of State to Robert S. Hargous, administrator of Louis S. Hargous, deceased."

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT KANSAS CITY.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred House bill 8831, to report it without amendment, and I ask the Senate to consider the bill at the present time, because there is great exigency for its passage. It is very short, and is simply amendatory of a former act of Congress for the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River. It is an extension simply of one of the provisions of that law. It will take but a moment to dispose of the measure.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8831) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kana., and not over 10 miles above the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railway bridge at Kansas City, Mo.," approved March 1, 1889.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to increase the number of members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and to fill vacancies in such board, to report it with one amendment, and I beg immediate action upon this matter, as the vacancies in the board have existed for some time and ought to be filled for business reasons.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the Board of Managers for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall hereafter consist of eleven members, and the following-named persons be, and are hereby, appointed managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, that is to say: Edmund N. Morrill, of Kansas, for the unexpired term of office of John A. Martin, deceased; Alfred L. Pearson, of Pennsylvania, for the unexpired term of office of John F. Hartranft, deceased; and William B. Franklin, of Connecticut, John C. Black, of Illinois, Augustus B. Farnham, of Maine, and George W. Steele, of Indiana, for the terms of office commencing on the 21st day of April, 1890, to fill vacancies occasioned by the expiration of terms of office and by the increase provided hereby.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, in line 11, to strike out the name "Augustus B. Farnham" and insert "Thomas W. Hyde;" so as to read:

Thomas W. Hyde, of Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. These vacancies have existed for about two months and a half. For reasons I need not explain I wish the Senate would insist upon its amendment and ask for a committee of conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate insist upon its amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. WALTHALL were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4110) granting a pension to Cornelius Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WOLCOTT (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4111) to establish and maintain a national park in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather think that it ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee has special charge of the matter of mountain forests.

Mr. TELLER. The bill ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PADDOCK. Such bills have generally gone to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 4112) to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, concerning details of officers of the Army and Navy to educational institutions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 4113) to provide for the removal of saloons, breweries, and distilleries in Washington City on the complaint of persons residing in their immediate vicinity; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 4114) for the relief of John G. Bright and Robert T. Humphrey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 4115) to appropriate $18,484 for the completion and dedication of the monument commemorating the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4116) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Amsterdam, in the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, together with the accompanying petition of Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of W. T. Pate & Co., praying for the payment of his audited claim against the Government, and other papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to offer an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. There is a bill (S. 3397) for the purchase of George B. Matthews's portrait of John Paul Jones already pending before the Senate, and I propose it now as an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PRINTING OF TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that 10,000 copies of the tariff bill, reported yesterday, be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks that 10,000 copies of the tariff bill be printed in pamphlet form. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I also, in that connection, ask that the printer be instructed to indicate the amendments proposed by the Senate committee in italics in the usual manner, so that any one may see the difference between the House bill and the bill as reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. We did not catch on this side what was the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont asks for the printing of a large number of copies of the tariff bill as reported, which is right, and I want it printed so as to show the amendments of the Senate committee to the text of the House bill, and then the people of the country may know exactly what has been done.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that, and I think that would be done, as a matter of course, without a special order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did I understand the Senator to move for an additional number of copies of the report or of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just the bill, with the amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I understood.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the amendments to be so designated that anybody may tell the difference between the House bill and the bill as reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator from Vermont inform us when the tabular information that was to be furnished in accordance with the resolution of my colleague [Mr. PLUMB] will be ready for the printer?

Mr. MORRILL. I said yesterday that it would be ready within four days, and it will be ready, I think, sooner than that, to be sent to the printer.

Mr. INGALLS. How long will it take to print it?

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose a few days.

Mr. INGALLS. It will be ready, then, by the first of the week after next?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order to print will be made as requested.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10726) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 7217) to amend "An act for the erection of an appraisers' warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes;" and

A bill (H. R. 10065) constituting Irondequoit Bay, New York, a navigable water of the United States for certain purposes.

REMOVALS BY SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. CAMERON. My colleague [Mr. QUAY] yesterday offered a resolution which went over under objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] coming over from yesterday. It will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. QUAY was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to make no changes in his subordinates, appointees, or employés, prior to 1st July proximo, without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON. I move the following as a substitute for the resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That Charles H. Mann be employed as an additional page in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Both these resolutions should go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. The last one must, under the rule, for it makes a charge on the contingent fund, out of which he has to be paid. I move that both these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to interfere with the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but the other resolution I do not think ought to be referred. It had better be laid on the table.

Mr. INGALLS. The second resolution ought not to pass, for the reason that if an employé is put on the force by resolution of the Senate he is out of the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms. We have a number of those instances already, and they have been increasing from year to year to the detriment of the discipline of the official staff of the body. I have no objection whatever to the appointment of the person who is named in the resolution, but the practice of putting persons on the official staff by order of the Senate and thereby exempting them from the discipline of the Sergeant-at-Arms is destructive of the morale of the force. It ought not to be done; and I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania, with whom I am entirely in sympathy, will have some other arrangements made. We do not want to put people on as pages or as messengers by resolution of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not see how any other arrangement could be made that would benefit this boy. I do not know anything about him personally, but I am told he is an exceptionally good lad, and it seems to me hard that he should be turned out at this stage of the session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is.

Mr. CAMERON. And thus the little money that he would otherwise get be taken from him. I believe that without any very great stretch of discipline or without violating the rules of the Senate, so that it would make a precedent at all, this resolution might be acted upon to-day and the boy be put where I think he is entitled to be placed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, assuming that my friend from Pennsylvania is correct about this lad, as I have no doubt he is, it would seem a great hardship that he should be displaced just before the end of the session, and the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I have no doubt, with the unanimous consent of the Senate, can report a provision which will be consistent with the very just observations of my friend from Kansas and at the same time put this boy right from the day when his pay stopped if there is any trouble about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no desire to interfere at all with this young man, but the Sergeant-at-Arms is about to leave his position here, he having resigned it, but it seems that he turned out a person, which gave displeasure to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but it ought to be explained, in justice to the Sergeant-at-Arms, that the gentleman named is beyond the age at which he can be retained as a page, and therefore, in order to keep him over the time he gave him other employment, and there was no objection to him, but he was put on some other roll in connection with one of the other branches of the Sergeant-at-Arms's office. But under the rules of the Senate, which are permanent and which we ought not to change except in the form of legislation, the person referred to can not be kept as a page because he is beyond the age. He is now serving on another roll, and kept on another roll until the Sergeant-at-Arms, upon the urgent request of a member of this body, a Senator who had the right to claim something at his hands, gave another very worthy person the place that was occupied, some subordinate place occupied by the gentleman named by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

All I feel is that this resolution introduced and slapping a man in the face just as he is leaving the Senate service, I think ought not to be referred, but it ought to be disposed of, it ought to be laid on the table, and then, if the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] can be acted upon, I shall make no objection. This person can be kept on the roll in connection with the service in which he has been employed recently for the time required without violating the rules of the Senate, but he can not be kept as a page without expressly violating the rules.

Mr. CAMERON. If he can not be kept as a page, then the Committee on Contingent Expenses can not report the resolution favorably.

Mr. INGALLS. They can report an amendment to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law of the Senate forbids the employment of a page above a certain age, which we have found a necessary law. If the young gentleman is over that age, of course it is not fair to send him out into the world instantly. Something can be done useful to the Senate and for him, too.

Mr. CAMERON. I was not aware that he was over the age.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles H. Mann be employed as an additional page in the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is that a substitute for the resolution offered by the colleague of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in the nature of a substitute. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motion was to refer both the substitute and the original resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. That resolution would be liable to a point of order if we were strict about it, because the rule fixes the age.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be adopted as an amendment to the original proposition, and then the whole be referred to the committee. I think that would be the better way to dispose of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it makes any difference in respect of any implied reproach to the retiring Sergeant-at-Arms, I shall withdraw my motion for the moment in order that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] may be adopted, and it being adopted then I shall renew my motion to refer it, as it must be referred under the rule.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania to modify his amendment by adding the words "for the present session of the Senate," so that this person will not be placed permanently by resolution of the Senate on the rolls as a page.

Mr. CAMERON. I agree to that. I do not desire to place him there permanently against the rule of the Senate. I am informed that I have made a mistake in the name. The name should be George H. Mann, instead of Charles H. Mann.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to the resolution offered by his colleague [Mr. QUAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I move that the resolution as amended be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

SCIENTIFIC AND INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the agreement reached on Saturday last with reference to the bill reported by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3714) to establish an educational fund and apply the proceeds of the public lands and the receipts from certain land-grant railroad companies to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Vermont does not propose to antagonize the appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose it is understood that as soon as the appropriation bill is concluded this bill will come up in order.

Mr. PLATT. What was the understanding reached about that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was to be taken up after the morning business to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is only an understanding, not an order.

Mr. MORRILL. There was unanimous consent given.

Mr. PLATT. For the time being I do not wish to be put in the position of consenting to have the unfinished business displaced by this. I simply make this remark at this time. I do not suppose there will be any difficulty about it, but I want to preserve my rights if I should see fit to insist upon them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the agreement reached on Saturday last.

The Secretary read as follows from the RECORD of June 15, 1890:

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, if there is any desire on the part of Senators to have this bill considered and if they will give unanimous consent, so that it shall be considered next Thursday, after the morning business, I will consent to have it go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nobody will object to that, I suppose. I suggest that the bill be printed with the amendments already adopted and the amendments pending. Then every Senator can see it and have it before him, and know exactly what to do.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection, and asks that it be considered as the order of business on next Thursday—at 2 o'clock?

Mr. MORRILL. No, after the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I am not inclined to object, but no such consent understanding will displace the unfinished business, and I do not know exactly what it amounts to. However, I shall not interfere with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the order be made to print the bill with the amendments already adopted and the amendment pending, and then we can see exactly what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. MORRILL. By unanimous consent, I understand that the bill is to be taken up immediately after the morning business on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is to be taken up immediately after the morning business on Thursday next.

Mr. PLATT. There will be no difficulty between myself and the Senator from Vermont. I simply want to reserve all rights, not to have the unfinished business displaced, but we may make some arrangement about it.

Mr. HALE. Meantime let us go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have not got it up yet.

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes, I have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the appropriation bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, let us go on with it.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 18th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2311) to amend section 3354 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

An act (S. 2317) to provide for the exportation of fermented liquor in bond without payment of internal-revenue tax.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10726) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9066) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the reading goes on where it was left off on page 70 at the end of the paragraph on line 16, I wish to go back to page 59, a paragraph that attention was called to when the matter was in charge of the chairman of the committee [Mr. ALLISON], in respect of an additional judge for Arizona.

The Senate on the 7th of June passed a bill providing for an additional judge in the Territory of Arizona and it will undoubtedly become a law, but at any rate it is within the rule, it being to carry out a bill that has passed the Senate to make an amendment to appropriate sufficient for his salary if it should become a law. I accordingly move on page 59, line 13, in the paragraph headed "Territory of Arizona," to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three," and in line 16 of the same paragraph and page to strike out the word "thirteen" and insert "sixteen," so as to make the total of the appropriation correspond to the $3,000 increase for the additional judge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 59, line 13, before the word "associate," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "three," and in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "sixteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Territory of Arizona: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and three associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary, $1,900; interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; in all, $16,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the same subject of "Territorial judges" on page 60, line 10, in the paragraph commencing "Territory of New Mexico," I move to strike out the word "three" and insert "four;" and before the amendment is stated from the desk, and in explanation of it, I will say that the House of Representatives has passed a bill providing for this additional judge in New Mexico; and the Senate Committee on the Judiciary having reported favorably upon a Senate bill of the same character, for convenience the House bill has been substituted on the Calendar, but is not yet reached, so that this motion is in order and is proper.

Mr. HALE. Of course in any of these cases if it happens that unperfected measures do not become laws the amendments will be struck out in conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the bill does not become a law the appropriation goes for nothing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, line 10, before the word "associate," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Territory of New Mexico: For salary of governor, $2,600; chief-justice and four associate judges, at $3,000 each; secretary, at $1,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 13 of the same paragraph I move to strike out the word "sixteen," before the word "thousand," and insert "nineteen;" so as to make the total correspond to the additional $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. Yesterday I moved an amendment to the present bill on page 55, line 23, to strike out "two hundred" and insert "five hundred." The Senator then in charge of the bill had it ruled out on a point of order. I find since that he was mistaken as to that point of order, inasmuch as the increase has been recommended by the head of a Department. I now ask that that change be made on page 55, line 23, striking out "two" and inserting "five."

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 55, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and to insert "five;" so as to read:

Chief clerk, $2,350.

Mr. CAMERON. Strike out the word "fifty," so as to read "$2,500."

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear a word. What is the point?

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 55, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Chief clerk, $2,500.

Mr. CAMERON. I have moved this amendment at the request of the Director of the Mint, who addressed me a letter on the 13th of May, which I will read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., May 13, 1890.

SIR: I transmit herewith copy of a letter of the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia and my indorsement thereon to the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an increase in the salary of the chief clerk of that mint from $2,250 to $2,500 per annum. I also inclose copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of the above to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the favorable consideration of Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

E. O. LEECH, Director of the Mint.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON, United States Senate.

He indorses a long letter from the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia who says, under date of December 18, 1889:

MINT OF THE UNITED STATES AT PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
Superintendent's Office, December 18, 1889.

Hon. E. O. LEECH, Director of the Mint:

SIR: The chief clerk of this institution is one of the most responsible and important places in it. Under section 3502, Revised Statutes, he becomes, in the temporary absence of the superintendent, acting superintendent, with all the responsibilities of the place. For some unexplained reason, the cashier of the institution in point of salary is rated above the chief clerk, whilst in reality the latter certainly outranks the former, as he can regulate the policy of the duties of the cashier, and the cashier would be obliged to take instructions from him. The salary of the chief clerk is $2,250 per annum, that of the cashier $2,500. I want to strongly urge that the salary of the former be increased to $2,500 per annum, to be at least equal to that of the cashier.

When I assumed the position of superintendent, I desired as the chief clerk of this mint the man best equipped for the place I could get, and I found that Mr. Mark H. Cobb, who was the cashier, was the man I wanted. He came here in 1870, and his long service, earnest, absolute devotion to the interests of this institution has peculiarly fitted him for the position of chief clerk. When I expressed my desire to have him accept the place, he unselfishly said if I desired his services he would render them whenever I chose to designate, although he sacrificed $250 per annum to take a place he so acceptably fills. Apart from the fact that the place is rated too low in salary, Mr. Cobb's ability entitles him to a salary at least as great as the one he relinquished, and the services he renders the Government in the new place are fully entitled to receive all of the increase requested.

Trusting that the recommendation submitted will meet your cordial approval, I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. C. BOSBYSHILL, Superintendent.

It is needless to add that Mr. Cobb is entirely ignorant of my recommendation, and that he has not referred to it at all.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
December 19, 1889.

Respectfully referred to the Secretary of the Treasury with the recommendation that he transmit this communication to Congress with an earnest recommendation on his part to have the salary of the chief clerk of the mint at Philadelphia increased from $2,250 to $2,500 per annum.

The salary paid the chief clerk of the mint at San Francisco and chief clerk at the assay office at New York is $2,500 per annum, and yet the salary of the same office in the most important institution in the mint service is only $2,250. Not only are the duties of the office arduous and important, but the chief clerk is required by law to perform all the duties of the superintendent of the mint, in the absence of the latter officer. The salary of the cashier of the mint at Philadelphia is $250 more per annum than that of the chief clerk. All of my predecessors, and all of the superintendents of the mint at Philadelphia for a long number of years past, have recommended that the salary of the position of chief clerk be fixed at $2,500. The present occupant of the office has been in the mint since 1870, and for a number of years past has been the cashier of the mint. He is one of the most experienced and valuable officers in the mint service.

I most urgently request that the increase recommended be granted by Congress.

E. O. LEECH, Director of the Mint.

I know Mr. Cobb personally. He is one of the most capable men that I know of, and I should be very much pleased if this small advance should be made in his salary.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amendment that is pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On page 55, line 23, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "chief clerk of the mint of Philadelphia" from $2,250 to $2,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order first that under the arrangement the committee amendments were to be first considered, and I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not press his amendment now.

Mr. CAMERON. If the Senator will permit me I will say that I expect to leave the Senate in a few minutes to be gone for several hours, and I should be glad to have the amendment considered now. The Senator yesterday made the point of order that this could not be introduced as it was not estimated for. I have a letter from the Director of the Mint asking that this change be made and giving the reasons for the change.

Mr. ALLISON. That does not constitute an estimate, and I still make the point of order that it is not in order, not being estimated for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a recommendation, in order to be considered as an estimate, must be made by the head of a Department.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. CAMERON. No; it is made by the Director of the Mint. I trust the Senator will not insist upon the point of order. It is a very small matter, and certainly this gentleman is entitled to it.

Mr. ALLISON. If this was the only case I would not object, but this bill is full of items as to which there are similar requests, and I feel constrained to make the point of order, for the present, at least.

Mr. CAMERON. That means for all time.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill on page 70, beginning in line 17, with the appropriations for "Public Buildings and Grounds."

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the language on page 71, line 14, in the clause providing for watchmen in the different squares and circles. It says, "one at Rawlins Square." The statue of General Rawlins was removed from that square just west of the State Department, as I understand. Does that square still go by the name of Rawlins Square since the removal of the statue?

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Because there is no square now where the statue of General Rawlins is.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think that the removal of the statue would necessarily change the name of the square.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a rule those squares all go by the name of the statues that are placed in them.

Mr. ALLISON. I think these watchmen will be able to find it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt he will find Washington Circle, but whether the provision for Rawlins Square ought to be there or not is a question.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it had better remain as it is. It is estimated for in that way.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for public buildings and grounds, on page 71, after line 22, to insert:

For one night watchman at Garfield Park, $720.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Iowa oblige us with an explanation of the necessity for a night watchman in Garfield Park?

Mr. ALLISON. That is one of the new reservations, one of the large reservations in the District. Two watchmen for Garfield Park are estimated for.

Mr. INGALLS. By whom?

Mr. ALLISON. The Treasury Department; and it is now included in the other estimates affecting the parks in this city. We have spent a large sum of money there in fitting up that park, decorating and ornamenting it in various ways, and instead of providing for two watchmen we have provided for one night watchman.

Mr. INGALLS. Garfield Park lies south of what was formerly known as Duddington, where there was a few years since one of the few remaining specimens of colonial architecture, a magnificent house surrounded by a noble growth of original forest trees, constituting a part of the original estate of Carroll of Duddington, which, I think to the regret of all lovers of association and art, the Government allowed to be destroyed.

There is nothing in Garfield Park that requires a watchman, night or day. There is no fountain there, no statue, no money has been expended there except for a few gravel drives and walks and the planting of some shade trees. Of course I have no objection if the Government desires to put a day and night watchman there. It may be a very agreeable and comfortable place for some deserving patriot, I have no doubt, but there is no more necessity for a day and night watchman in Garfield Park than there is in any neighboring corn-field adjoining the city.

Mr. ALLISON. I will read what is said in the Book of Estimates respecting it and then leave it to the Senate:

5. One day-watchman for Garfield Park, $660; one night-watchman for Garfield Park, $720. Garfield Park, containing an area of about 24 acres, is now highly improved and contains a large number of valuable trees and flowering shrubs.

Many of these have undoubtedly been put there since the Senator from Kansas visited the place.

Mr. INGALLS. Then they have been placed there since last week, when I passed through on foot within that period of time.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a park containing 24 acres and it is possible that a few of these improved trees and shrubs have escaped the attention of the Senator from Kansas. Says the Secretary:

During the past year numerous acts of vandalism have occurred during both day and night. On one occasion the store-house on the reservation was broken open and a number of valuable tools stolen; these were recovered with the assistance of the District police. Watchmen are very much needed at the park.

I merely read this for the purpose of showing why the committee inserted this provision.

Mr. INGALLS. Then why do they disregard the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury when acts of vandalism have been committed there, and only give one-half of what is required?

Mr. ALLISON. Because they were afraid they might find in the Senate some critic who would object, and therefore we thought at present we would limit it to one. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "State, War, and Navy Department building," on page 72, after the word "laborers," at the end of line 16, to insert "four leading charwomen, at $300 each;" in line 18, before the word "charwomen," to strike out "eighty" and insert "seventy-six;" and in line 19, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the superintendent: One clerk of class 1; one chief engineer, at $1,200; eight assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; one captain of the watch, $1,200; two lieutenants of the watch, at $840 each; fifty-eight watchmen; one carpenter, $1,000; one machinist, $900; one plumber, $900; one painter, $900; four skilled laborers, at $720 each; twenty-four firemen; ten conductors of elevators, at $720 each; twenty laborers; four leading charwomen, at $300 each; and seventy-six charwomen; in all, $118,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Navy Department," on page 72, line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Assistant Secretary of the Navy, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, on page 73, line 14, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, Assistant Secretary, and the clerical and other force in the office of the Secretary from "$41,660" to "$46,160."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for Hydrographic Office, on page 75, line 12, to increase the total appropriations "for purchase of copper-plates, steel-plates, chart-paper, electrotyping copper-plates, cleaning copper-plates, tools, instruments, and materials for drawing, engraving, and printing," etc., from "$30,000" to "$35,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 21, after "San Francisco," to strike out "and;" in the same line, after the word "Oregon," to insert "Portland, Me., and Chicago;" and in line 1, on page 76, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses of branch offices at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, Savannah, New Orleans, San Francisco, Portland, Oregon, Portland, Me., and Chicago, including furniture, fuel, lights, rent and care of offices, car-fare and ferrage in visiting merchant vessels, freight, express, telegrams and other necessary expenses incurred in collecting the latest information for the Pilot Chart, and for other purposes for which the offices were established, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the end of line 22, on page 75, the Chair thinks the comma should be stricken out after the words "care of."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that it be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 76, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "one clerk of class 3;" in line 5, after the word "two," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" and after the word "all," at the end of line 6, to strike out "seven thousand five" and insert "ten thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting: For chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; two clerks of class 1; two copyists; one assistant messenger, and one laborer; in all, $10,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for Nautical Almanac office, on page 76, after line 21, to insert:

For rent of building, and for fuel, for use of the Nautical Almanac office, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 3, after the word "each," to insert "one assistant librarian, $1,200; one copyist, $720;" and in line 8, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty thousand five hundred and twenty" and insert "twenty-two thousand four hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval Observatory: For pay of three assistant astronomers, one at $2,000 and two at $1,800 each; one clerk of class 4; one instrument-maker, $1,500; two computers, at $1,200 each; one assistant librarian, $1,200; one copyist, $720; four watchmen, including one for new Naval Observatory grounds; two skilled laborers, one at $1,000 and one at $720; and seven laborers; in all, $22,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 18, after the word "freight," to insert "including payment to Smithsonian Institution for freight on Observatory publications sent to foreign countries;" and in line 22, after the words "five hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs to buildings, fixtures, and fences, fuel, gas, furniture, chemicals, stationery, freight, including payment to Smithsonian Institution for freight on Observatory publications sent to foreign countries, foreign postage, expressage, fertilizers, plants, and all contingent expenses, four thousand and five hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the first word "and," in line 22, on page 77, so as to read "four thousand five hundred and fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 77, to strike out the clause from line 23 to line 25, inclusive, as follows:

For payment to Smithsonian Institution for freight on Observatory publications sent to foreign countries, $136.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," on page 80, line 9, after the word "building," to insert:

Nine members of a board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each.

Mr. PLATT. I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill how much of an addition that is to the number of the board of pension appeals?

Mr. ALLISON. An addition of six. There are three now.

Mr. PLATT. Do they go out of office now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. PLATT. Are the three provided for anywhere here?

Mr. ALLISON. The present law provides for three members of the board. We simply add six, making the number nine.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems to me that it would be better to say "six additional members." It is very ambiguous the way it stands now, and the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] appears to me to be very pertinent. Either the three that are now in will be legislated out of office by this amendment or there are to be nine additional members of the board of pension appeals. I would suggest that if the three that are now in are to remain and there is to be an addition to the force it would be better to say "six additional members of the board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior," etc.

Mr. PLATT. Then the three would not be provided for, would they?

Mr. ALLISON. The present appropriation for the current year is—Three members of a board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each.

The year previous the same language was employed that we now employ, to wit, nine. If any Senator thinks this will have the effect to legislate any of the three gentlemen who occupy the places now out of office, I have no objection to a change; but we have put the item in here in the exact language of the Book of Estimates.

Mr. INGALLS. Were the three that are now serving appointed under a clause in an appropriation bill previously?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask in that connection is there any appropriation in this bill for those three members of the board?

Mr. PLATT. That is included in the appropriation for the nine.

Mr. ALLISON. It is included in the nine.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was not in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is aware that the Committee on Appropriations in the House reported the language that we have here, but on a point of order the whole clause was ruled out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not only the six increase was ruled out, but the three existing under the law.

Mr. INGALLS. Where were they ruled out?

Mr. ALLISON. In the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. The House, you know, is no longer a deliberative body, and the clause was ruled out; and not only was the proposed increase of six ruled out, but the three members of the board of pension appeals now existing. So the House bill as it came to us made no provision whatever for any pension appeal board.

Mr. PLATT. I think that explains what I could not understand about this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. There was no provision made in the House bill, and these members of the board of appeals have been provided for from time to time in these appropriation bills.

Mr. INGALLS. Are they required to be appointed annually?

Mr. ALLISON. Not as I understand. Last year's appropriation provided for six members of the board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each, and the year before the same bill provided for nine, but I do not think there is the slightest trouble about it. They have been carried all the time in these appropriation bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. The language used in this proposed amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is precisely the language which has been heretofore used in the authorization of the existence and payment of these members of the board of pension appeals. Now, I should like to have the Senator from Iowa state to the Senate why it is necessary that we shall increase the board of pension appeals. It was once composed of nine members, and then we reduced it down to three members, and at that time all pension appeal cases were disposed of. Now we are increasing it, and I should like to have the Senator explain to the Senate so that we may see that our action is justifiable.

Mr. ALLISON. My mind was diverted for the moment. Does the Senator wish that I should state why we insert this provision?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. We insert it because the appeals are now largely in arrears. I think there are about four thousand cases pending; the cases are being disposed of in the Pension Office very rapidly; the Secretary of the Interior deems this number necessary to keep up the work constantly with the work in the Pension Office.

I should say, in addition, that they have now details from the Pension Office, and have had for two or three years clerks doing this business, which we think, if not reprehensible, ought not to be continued.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to make this statement clear to the Senate that in the spring of 1885 the pension appeal cases were practically disposed of, and there were no arrears of business. In consequence of that, in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1886 the numbers of the board of pension appeals were greatly reduced. But the appeals taken since then have multiplied so rapidly that, as I understand, with the present force it would take them two years to dispose of the present accumulation of appeals.

Mr. ALLISON. That is substantially the situation.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is my recollection. That is, it would take the present number, the three members of the board of pension appeals, two years to dispose of the appeal cases now pending, not taking into account the number that come up from day to day.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator know how many of these appeals are disposed of per month?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know. We have no report as to the number disposed of a month. In the Appropriations Committee we thought it was a necessity to increase the number of members of this board of appeals in order that the pension appeal cases might be heard in the lifetime of the claimants and disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations on page 80, line 9, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 81, line 16, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, assistant secretaries, and the clerical and other force in the office of the Secretary, from "$174,210" to "$192,210."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after the word "dollars," at the end of line 21, to insert "one reporter of land decisions, $2,250;" and at the end of the same clause, in line 1, on page 82, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-six thousand seven hundred" and insert "thirty-eight thousand nine hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Assistant Attorney-General: For one law clerk, at $2,750; one law clerk, at $2,500; one law clerk, at $2,250; one reporter of land decisions, $2,250; thirteen law clerks, at $2,000; two clerks of class 3, one of whom shall act as stenographer; in all, $38,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for "General Land Office," on page 82, line 23, after the word "at," to strike out "eighteen hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

Three principal clerks, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 82, line 23, after the word "each," to insert:

Eight chiefs of division, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 83, line 1, after the word "each," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-two;" so as to read:

Thirty-two clerks of class 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the same clause, on page 83, line 7, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Assistant Commissioner, and the clerical force in the General Land Office, from "$542,550," to "$544,750."

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the head of "General Land Office," I propose to offer an amendment from the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Is there objection to the adoption of the amendment which is now under consideration?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to withhold his amendment until the Appropriations Committee amendments are first disposed of.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, in line 7, on page 83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 21, before the word "copies," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" and in line 22, after the word "and," to insert "of," so as to make the clause read:

For connected and separate United States and other maps prepared in the General Land Office, $15,000; 2,500 copies of said maps shall be delivered to the General Land Office, and of the remainder, one-third shall be delivered to the Senate and two-thirds to the House of Representatives for distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Pension Office, on page 84, before the word "medical," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "thirty-six;" so as to read:

Thirty-six medical examiners, who shall be surgeons of education, skill, and experience in their profession, at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 21, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, deputy commissioners, and the clerical and other force in the office of the Commissioner, from "$1,814,150" to "$1,846,550."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following clause, on page 86, beginning in line 21:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence for one hundred and fifty additional special examiners above provided for, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation and assistance, $190,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the word "assistance," in line 26, and inquires whether it should not be "subsistence."

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Chair that it is correct as it is. It is the language employed many years, covering a certain class of expenditures.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the appropriations for United States Patent Office, on page 87, line 10, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Thirty principal examiners, $2,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 12, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, assistant commissioner, the examiners, and the clerical and other force in the office of the Commissioner, from "$664,790" to "$667,790."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Bureau of Education, on page 89, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert:

One specialist in foreign educational system, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 8, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Commissioner of Education, collector and compiler of statistics, and the clerical and other force in the office of the Commissioner, from "$45,420" to "$47,220."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 14, after the word "information," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For collecting statistics for special reports and circulars of information, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 16, before the word "distribution," to insert "purchase;" and in line 18, after the word "appliances," to insert "text-books and educational reference-books;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase, distribution, and exchange of educational documents, and for the collection, exchange, and cataloguing of educational apparatus and appliances, text-books, and educational reference-books, articles of school furniture, and models of school buildings illustrative of foreign and domestic systems and methods of education, and for repairing the same, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 6, on page 90, in the clause making appropriations for the Bureau of Education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Iowa whether it is advisable to insert the word "at" after the word "clerk" at the end of line 6? The word "at" is usually inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. Where is that?

The SECRETARY. On page 92, at the end of line 6, "one clerk, $1,000."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to insert the word "at" after the word "clerk."

Mr. ALLISON. That is better. It is evidently an omission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON. The word "at" ought to be inserted in line 9, after the word "watchman," and after the word "janitor," in line 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that in looking further he observes that when only one person is named in the bill the word "at" is not used, and that where more than one person is named in the bill the word "at" is used. So perhaps it is not necessary to insert the word "at" in these instances.

Mr. ALLISON. The Chair is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Chair was called to it by the Secretary. It seems unnecessary to insert the word "at" in the places named, and it will be omitted if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 92, line 23, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "contingent expenses Interior Department," from "$75,000" to "$90,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 2, to increase the appropriation "for stationery for the Department of the Interior and its several bureaus and offices, including the Civil Service Commission and the Geological Survey," from "$50,000" to "$70,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 7, after the words "Bureau of Education," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" after the words "Indian Office," at the end of line 8, to strike out "five thousand five hundred" and insert "six thousand;" in line 10, after the words "General Land Office," to strike out "one thousand five hundred" and insert "two thousand;" and in line 11, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of buildings for the Department of the Interior, namely: For the Bureau of Education, $5,000; Geological Survey, $10,000; Indian Office, $6,000; General Land Office, $2,000; in all, $23,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "surveyors-general and their clerks," on page 94, line 12, after the word "office," to strike out "three thousand five hundred" and insert "seven thousand;" and in line 13, after the word "all," to strike out "five thousand five hundred" and insert "nine thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveyor-general of North Dakota, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $7,000; in all, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 19, after the word "office," to strike out "three thousand five" and insert "thirteen thousand seven;" and in line 20, after the word "all," to strike out "five thousand five" and insert "fifteen thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveyor-general of South Dakota, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $13,700; in all, $15,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it due to the Senate that some explanation should be made in regard to these very large increases for the two Dakotas.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, when the estimates were made for North and South Dakota they were estimated for as one office for the surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota. Then a new surveyor-general was appointed for North Dakota. The law providing for two districts, the House in making up the bill simply divided the sum that had been originally appropriated for the one office. We sent, as the Senator from Missouri perhaps will remember, to the Secretary of the Interior for a statement as to what was needed in these two offices, and the result was a statement of something less than the amount inserted here.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there was only one before, how does it come that there are two now?

Mr. ALLISON. That is on account of the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. A recent law?

Mr. ALLISON. A recent law provides for an additional surveyor-general, or, rather, for two surveyors-general, one in North and one in South Dakota, a law passed at this session.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the clause making appropriations for "surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho," on page 95, beginning in line 12.

Mr. ALLISON. On line 14, page 95, I move to insert "$3,000" instead of "$1,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, line 14, strike out "fifteen hundred" and insert "three thousand;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an estimate by the Secretary of the Interior furnished us later on, but was omitted in the amount. I desire to insert that amount in order that it may go into conference and we may look at it. The total should be changed.

The SECRETARY. In line 14 of the same clause, after the word "all," strike out "four thousand" and insert "five thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

In all, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 97, line 11, after the word "office," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" and in line 12, after the word "all," to strike out "eight" and insert "thirteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveyor-general of Washington, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $10,500; in all, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," on page 98, after line 12, to insert:

For twenty temporary clerks for five months' service, at $60 per month each, to be appointed by the Postmaster-General to enable him to tabulate the returns from all post-offices of a general count of the several classes of mail matter for one week, $6,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have some explanation of that.

Mr. ALLISON. The Postmaster-General states that he has been engaged for several months in classifying or arranging different classes of mail matter. He has a large accumulation of valuable information on this subject, and he now desires a small force for a few months to tabulate the information in his office which can not be tabulated otherwise.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not to be a permanent force?

Mr. ALLISON. A temporary force for only a few months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 894) to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside, in order that the appropriation bill under consideration may be proceeded with.

Mr. CULLOM. It being the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly, it remains the unfinished business.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 98, line 21, before the words "of class one," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in the same line, after the word "one," to insert "assistant messenger;" and in line 22, after the word "all," to strike out "ten thousand three hundred" and insert "twelve thousand two hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department: Law clerk, $2,500; two clerks of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; two clerks of class 1; assistant messenger; in all, $12,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office First Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 99, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Chief of salary and allowance division, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, line 13, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of First Assistant Postmaster-General, and the clerical and other force in his office, from "$123,980" to "$124,280."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 98, line 21, I move to strike out "two" and insert "three;" that is, substitute "three" for "two;" and in line 23 substitute "$13,420" for "$12,220."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In line 21, on page 98, it is proposed to amend the committee's amendment by striking out "two" and inserting "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 1.

In line 23 it is proposed to strike out "$12,220" and to insert "$13,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Office Third Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 100, line 8, before the word "clerks," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "seventeen;" so as to read:

Seventeen clerks of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 100, line 9, before the word "clerks," to strike out "twenty-one" and insert "twenty-two;" so as to read:

Twenty-two clerks of class 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 12, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and the clerical and other force in his office, from "$118,570" to "$121,570."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for office of disbursing clerk, Post-Office Department, on page 102, line 21, before the word "firemen," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four firemen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, line 5, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for office of disbursing clerk, Post-Office Department, from "$55,780" to "$57,220."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, line 9, after the word "Department," to insert "including the additional building occupied by the money-order division of the Sixth Auditor's Office, and the additional building used for storage of post-office supplies;" so as to make the heading read:

For contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department, including the additional building occupied by the money-order division of the Sixth Auditor's Office, and the additional building used for storage of post-office supplies, namely,

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. There seems to be some confusion respecting these contingent expenses in the Post-Office Department and in the Sixth Auditor's Office. The Postmaster-General, who sends me a letter respecting these expenses, states that if he is to have under his control or direction the Sixth Auditor's Office, the contingent expenses provided for by the House of Representatives are entirely insufficient. The chief clerk of the Treasury Department appeared, as the Senator from Missouri will remember, before the Committee on Appropriations and stated that, if a change was to be made, as the House bill provided, the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department should be increased. In that view I think it is proper that this amendment now proposed should remain in the bill. I suppose that it will then give us jurisdiction over the whole question to examine it more in detail than we can do now. The Postmaster-General sent me a letter this morning since 12 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that it may be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will send to the desk the letter of the Postmaster-General to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, June 15, 1890.

SIR: On the 12th of February last I had the honor to address Mr. CANNON, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, a letter, of which the inclosed is a copy, requesting that the wording of the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department (see page 103 of the legislative bill as reported to the Senate) should be so modified as to confine those appropriations, with the exception of fuel and repairs to heating apparatus, to the Post-Office Department, and not to require this Department to pay expenses properly under the charge of the Secretary of the Treasury. I notice that the wording which this Department requested should be eliminated has been restored in the Senate bill. I have the honor to advise you that this Department has not heretofore paid for the contingent expenses incident to the occupancy of the additional building known as Marini's Hall, and that if it is proposed by the wording to which reference is made to require the Post-Office Department to bear these expenses, it will be necessary that additional appropriations shall be made, as follows:

Under the head of "Stationery, blank-books," etc., lines 13, 14, and 15, page 103, $10,150, a total of $22,150. Under the heading of "Carpets and matting," line 22, $1,500, a total of $4,500. Under the heading of "Furniture," line 23, $1,500, a total of $4,500. Under the head of "Miscellaneous items," line 2, page 104, $412, a total of $12,412. These appropriations will be absolutely necessary if this Department is to defray the cost of the items for a division of the Treasury Department.

Very respectfully,

JNO. WANAMAKER,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether we left in the incidental expenses of the Treasury Department the total estimates for their incidental expenses, including Marini's Hall.

Mr. ALLISON. Including the Sixth Auditor's Office. This includes the office immediately opposite the Post-Office building.

Mr. COCKRELL. We ought to make an amendment in the item relating to the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department, so that if we make the appropriations recommended by the Postmaster-General here we can deduct the proper amount out of the Treasury Department appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. So I think; but the Senator will remember that the chief clerk of the Treasury Department came to us and said that unless the phraseology which is now under consideration be inserted in the bill we must increase the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department. It is evident from this letter that the House of Representatives intend to eliminate from the bill the provision which we have inserted, and that they made what they considered a sufficient appropriation for the contingencies of the Treasury Department. I only call attention to it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then they made no provision at all for the contingencies of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. ALLISON. The Treasury Department insist that they made their estimate for contingent expenses upon the basis of the appropriations for the current fiscal year, which included the expenditures for the Sixth Auditor's Office under the direction of the Postmaster-General. The Postmaster-General informs us this morning that they have paid none of these contingent expenses during the current fiscal year, and that they have just now discovered the difficulty between the two offices.

Mr. COCKRELL. That reminds me of the possibility, and even the probability, of a very important factor and a question in connection with these matters which the Senate is compelled to pass upon when they come to us from another branch of the service. It seems that probably sufficient deliberation and consideration had not been given in some place or other to some matters of legislation. In order that we may understand exactly how legislation is disposed of in some branches, I will read a clipping from a newspaper quoting a very distinguished citizen of the United States in regard to one deliberative branch of Congress, and a gentleman who is supposed to be somewhat familiar with the proceedings of that body, and this paragraph may account for what we at one time here witnessed early in the proceedings of the Senate—an announcement at the door of the Senate Chamber from a Clerk of the House of Representatives that "the Speaker" had "passed" certain bills and had sent them to the Senate for the consideration of the Senate. This is a quotation from the New York Star, a paper which I never see, and is dated Washington, June 16:

Meeting—

This is what the correspondent says:

Meeting Speaker REED in the Shoreham to-day. I said: "I presume, Mr. Speaker, it is useless to ask you when Congress is likely to adjourn?" "I can only answer for the House," he replied. "The House will be ready by the 1st of July. It will have completed all its business by that time." "Election bill included?" "Election bill included. Thank heaven, the House is not a deliberative body. We haven't thirty or forty members, each with a six or seven hours' speech in his belly."

That may account for the shape in which some of these bills come to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department, on page 103, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eleven" and insert twelve;" so as to read:

For stationery and blank-books, including amount necessary for the purchase of free-penalty envelopes, $12,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 22, on page 103.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 22, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

For carpets and matting, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 23, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

For furniture, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that later on I shall move to deduct similar amounts from the Treasury contingent expenses, and that will leave the whole matter to be further examined.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 103, line 24, after the word "purchase," to strike out "of;" so as to read:

For purchase and keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness to be used only for official purposes, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 7, after the words "Marini Hall," to insert "which shall be vacated;" in line 9, after the word "Department," to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" in line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert "and for expenses of removal to new location, $500;" in line 12, after the word "supplies," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" and in line 12, after the word "all," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of topographer's office, $1,500; for rent of a suitable building or buildings for the use of the money-order office of the Post-Office Department, $8,000; for rent of building other than the Marini Hall, which shall be vacated; for the use of the money-order division of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, $5,000; and for expenses of removal to new location, $500; for rent of a suitable building for the storage of post-office supplies, $5,000; in all, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 105, line 8, before the word "Assistant," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 105, line 21, after the word "each," to insert:

Clerk in charge of pardons, $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 105, line 22, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 105, line 23, after the words "disbursing clerk," to strike out "and clerk in charge of pardons;" and in line 24, after the word "dollars," to strike out "each;" so as to read:

Additional for disbursing clerk, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 8, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Attorney-General, Solicitor-General, Assistant Attorneys-General, and the clerical and other force in the office of the Attorney-General from "$122,070" to "$127,470."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 15, page 106.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In line 15, after the word "for," the Chair suggests that the words "use of" should perhaps be inserted.

Mr. COCKRELL. It should read "for the use of the Department."

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; "for the use of the Department."

Mr. COCKRELL. Put in the words "the use of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 106, line 15, after the word "for," insert the words "the use;" so as to read:

For purchase of session laws and statutes of the States and Territories for the use of the Department, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of Labor," on page 108, line 4, after the word "laborers," to strike out "at $600 each;" and in line 8, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "six hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Labor, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; disbursing clerk, $1,800; three statistical experts, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class 4, who may be statistical experts; five clerks of class 3; six clerks of class 2; eight clerks of class 1; five clerks, at $1,000 each; two copyists; one messenger; one assistant messenger; three watchmen; two laborers; two charwomen; six special agents, at $1,600 each; ten special agents, at $1,400 each; four special agents, at $1,200 each; in all, $85,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, line 20, to increase the appropriation for postage-stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to Postal-Union countries from "$200" to "$250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, after line 3, to insert:

For the investigation of, and report upon, the various industrial school systems, and also technical school systems, of the United States and foreign countries, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for United States courts, on page 110, line 7, to increase the amount of the appropriation for compensation of the district attorneys of the United States from "$20,550" to "$20,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, line 10, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the district marshals of the United States from "$13,300" to "$13,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire now to make the corresponding amendment with reference to the contingent expenses of the Treasury Department. On page 44, line 19, I move to strike out "eight" before "thousand;" so as to read "$20,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 44, line 19, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

For stationery for the Treasury and its several bureaus, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 46, line 1, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For purchase of carpets, carpet-border and lining, linoleum, mats, rugs, matting, and repairs, and for cleaning, laying, and relaying of the same by contract, $9,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 46, in line 10, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "ten" and insert "nine;" so as to read:

For purchase of boxes, book-rests, chairs, chair-caning, chair-covers, desks, book-cases, clocks, cloth for covering desks, cushions, leather for covering chairs and sofas, locks, lumber, screens, tables, type-writers, ventilators, wardrobe cabinets, washstands, water-coolers and stands, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the appropriation for "clerks and messengers to committees," on page 13, line 18, after the words "war claims," I move to insert "irrigation of arid lands." This is a request that comes from the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is that?

Mr. ALLISON. I have a note from the chairman of the House committee suggesting it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a dangerous precedent for the Senate to go to interfering with the offices of the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the amendment if there is any objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, wait a moment. If we have any authority from the House Committee on Appropriations that this is an omission, or anything of that kind, and they desire us to insert it, as a matter of courtesy to them, I have no objection to doing it.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator read that letter, and if he assents to it I will offer the amendment. Otherwise I will not press it. [The letter was handed to Mr. COCKRELL.] On page 10, line 16, I move to strike out "ninety-two" and insert "ninety-one." That is in accordance with the other changes made yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 16, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "ninety-two" and insert "ninety-one;" so as to read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the House of Representatives, $991,113.30.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 73, line 17, before the word "clerks," where it first occurs, I move to strike out "four" and insert "five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 73, line 17, in the appropriation for Bureau of Navigation, before the word "clerks," where it first occurs, it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, on page 73, in line 21, to change the total to correspond with the amendment just made in line 21, from $28,120 to $29,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the appropriations for the office of the Secretary of the Senate, on page 3, line 5, I move to strike out "five" and insert "six."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, at the end of line 5, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Six clerks, at $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 3, I ask unanimous consent to omit the amendment which has been agreed to in line 7, so as to leave it "five clerks at $2,100 each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment already adopted on page 7 will be disagreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been agreed to, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be reconsidered and disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so considered, so that the line will read, "five clerks."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to change the total there so as to read, "$64,538.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that in the appropriation

"for compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate," on page 2, lines 3, 4, and 5, the proper sum may be inserted when it is footed up according to these amendments. The clerks will be able to fix that amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the clerks will be authorized to insert the proper amount.

Mr. ALLISON. They will make the computation. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations will aid them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

Mr. PADDOCK. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report an amendment to come in on page 82 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 82, it is proposed to strike out all after the words "General Land Office," in the tenth line, down to and including the word "dollars," in the eighteenth line, and to insert in lieu thereof:

For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; one assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents, and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Commissioner, and shall act as Commissioner in the absence of that officer, or in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner, $3,500.

Mr. ALLISON. Inasmuch as that amendment changes existing law, I think it is subject to a point of order, and therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the Senator to make the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the amendment is clearly within the rule. It is recommended by a standing committee of the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations in accordance with the rules of the Senate. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, the head of the Department of which this officer is a subordinate. I think the point of order is not well taken. It has the double recommendation of a standing committee and of the proper head of a Department—the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I do not wish to discuss the point of order, but it is clear to my mind that if this salary can be changed every salary in the bill can be changed, and we open up a field that is certainly a very dangerous one to enter upon. I happen to know the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be a most able, efficient, and capable man, and I should be glad to serve him in any way possible or practicable, but I think that we can not afford to open the door to the increase of salaries that are provided for in the bill under existing statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read the portions of the rule which refer to the question of order.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XVI.

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion—

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, allow me to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to decide in favor of the amendment being in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then I shall not interpose any objection to the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, this amendment, having been reported by the Committee on Public Lands and referred to the Committee on Appropriations more than one day previous to the time of its being moved, is in order under the last clause of section 1 of Rule XVI.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, the argument made by the chairman of the committee against an increase of the salary of this officer, which he will admit as readily as any Senator on this floor is too low a salary, considering the responsibilities and duties of the office and considering the equipment required for the faithful and thorough and capable performance of those duties, I think is a very poor argument, with all due deference to my distinguished friend from Iowa. If comparisons are to be instituted I should like to call the attention of the the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, to other salaries which are above and not below; and I believe the Senator from Iowa will admit that the duties and responsibilities of this officer are as great as those of any one of the officers to whom I shall call his attention.

The Comptroller of the Currency receives $5,000; the Treasurer, $6,000; the Second Comptroller, $5,000; the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000; the Director of the Geological Survey, $6,000; the Commissioner of the Department of Labor, $5,000; the Commissioner of Patents, $5,000.

I do not think it is necessary to make any comment on those salaries. Whatever may be below I care to say nothing about by way of invidious comparison. Even these salaries may be too low; I know in some instances they are too low. I know the one in question is conspicuously, exceptionally, and the most absurdly low salary that is paid by the Government, considering the amount, character, and responsibility of the duties performed.

Here is an officer who is not only an executive officer, not only in charge of administrative affairs, with three or four hundred people or more under him to look after, but he is a judge. He is required to pass upon questions of law and of fact. In his hands there are the titles of hundreds of thousands of people which are to be adjusted. Why, sir, this officer passes upon a larger number of titles than any court of this country, not excepting the Supreme Court of the United States. The Director of the Geological Survey gets a salary of $6,000 for overlooking a section of country which is not one-half of the whole area within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. And yet every acre of these arid lands which the Director of the Geological Survey has to deal with is under the jurisdiction of the General Land Office.

I make no complaint as to the salary paid to this officer, but I do complain, I protest, considering the enormously greater jurisdiction, labor, and responsibilities of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that his salary should be only two-thirds as large as that of the officer in charge of these surveys, and that it should be permitted to be at least a thousand dollars less than that of any officer of his grade in the public service. It is wrong. It is shamefully unjust.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 6—no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and I withhold my vote, in his absence.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], and will withhold my vote unless it shall be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DIXON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and in his absence, I wish to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CASEY. I desire to State that my colleague [Mr. PIERCE] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the negative). In the absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], with whom I am paired, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 11; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No quorum having voted, the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Power,
Allison,	Dixon,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Bate,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sanders,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Moody,	Sherman,

Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vest,
Coke,	Hale,	Payne,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Higgins,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The roll will be again called on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. BERRY. Is the question open to debate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the matter was presented a few minutes ago. I have been informed, however, that the pending amendment is a proposition to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $4,000 to $5,000. Is that the question pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question.

Mr. BERRY. There was a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands proposing to increase this salary. It came before the Senate some two or three weeks ago. It was debated some time, and it was evident that a majority of the Senate was opposed to the increase. The senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] made a very able speech in opposition to an increase of salary for this particular officer when that bill was pending. That bill is still before the Senate, and now the Senator from Nebraska seeks to take out of that bill, which could not be passed upon its merits, and place in an appropriation bill an increase of the salary of this officer.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. BERRY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to know upon what authority the Senator states that the bill when it was up for consideration by the Senate was substantially defeated. I got no such impression as that from the action of the Senate, nor did the friends of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. It was so evident that the friends of the bill allowed it to go over.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill went over because there was an absence of a quorum; and we were on the Calendar of unobjected cases. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] objected to its further consideration in the absence of a quorum, and therefore it had to go over.

Mr. BERRY. The RECORD will show what was done upon that occasion. It was evident I think to every Senator upon this floor at that time that the bill would be defeated, and the friends of the bill did not press it upon the Senate, but agreed that it should go over.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill went over, as I said before, for want of a quorum. I urged a vote repeatedly, and only yielded because it was impossible, under the objection raised, to get one.

Mr. BERRY. But this is a proposition to increase an officer's salary upon an appropriation bill when there is a bill pending for the same purpose now on the Calendar of the Senate which the Senate has declined to pass.

I want to say in addition, Mr. President, that there are a number of other officers who receive less salary than is proposed to be given in this amendment. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior, if I remember correctly, receives only $4,000 or $4,500 a year. There are a number of other officers who were named at the time of that debate (I do not remember them now) whose positions are equally as important as this officer's and who receive less than that sum. I can see no justice, no reason, no equity in selecting out one particular officer and increasing his salary while others equally important are left with a less amount.

A similar proposition came before the Senate during the last Administration to increase the salary of this officer from $4,000 to $4,500. I opposed the proposition then, and it was opposed in the Senate by a large number of Democrats at that time, when we had a Democratic administration. It is claimed now that the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions was increased when we had a Democratic majority. Probably it was increased to $4,500.

But the law upon the statute-book fixes the salary at a less sum than has been appropriated for a number of these officers from year to year. This method of making the law state that an officer shall receive so much and then trying to hoodwink the country by coming in here and making an appropriation for a larger sum is, in my opinion, an unjust system. If the law says that the salary of an official shall be $4,000 a year, then I think that it is unjust and unfair to go on and appropriate $4,500 or $5,000 when the statute fixes the amount on the deliberate judgment of Congress as to what the officer should receive. If it is not enough it ought to be corrected by an act regularly for that purpose, so that the country would understand that we were increasing the salary.

We go before the people from year to year and insist that we are opposed to the increase of salaries, and when you seek to increase them for the purpose of giving some favorite more money than he is entitled to you ought to come up and do it directly, by a repeal of the present law, and not increase it by putting an amendment on an appropriation bill.

I think that this officer should be treated as other officers. If the salary is not enough, let the bill now on the Calendar take its chances, but do not seek to select him out and make a specialty of him because he happens to have friends when others have not, and give him more than the statute says he is entitled to receive.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas if it is not true that the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions during the last Administration was increased upon an appropriation bill by Democratic effort, and Republican effort as well, because, as I remember, every Republican believed it ought to be, and was willing to see it increased?

Mr. BERRY. I stated awhile ago that while General Black occupied the position of Commissioner of Pensions the salary of the office was increased on an appropriation bill, I think, from $4,000 to $4,500. But I opposed it then, as did a number of other Democrats. It was carried by a majority, some Republicans and some Democrats voting for it, I do not know the proportion. But I care not whether it was in that Administration or in this Administration. I say that it is a wrong system and an unjust system, and that the salaries should be fixed by the statute, and that the amount should not be increased in an appropriation bill.

Appropriation bills are intended to appropriate according to the laws in force, but it is proposed to leave the law standing which provides that this officer shall have $4,000 and to give him by an appropriation bill $5,000. I say, Mr. President, that is not dealing openly; that is not dealing fairly. It misleads the country, and they do not understand it. It is an unjust way of dealing with salaries, and it is doubly unjust to pick out one particular officer when there are others equally important and equally entitled to an increase of salary, and give it to him on an appropriation bill, and that too when there is a bill pending, now on the Calendar, which will settle the whole question in regard to this salary.

Mr. PADDOCK. That seems to me to be a very absurd proposition on the part of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. I did not hear the remark.

Mr. PADDOCK. I say, with all due deference to the Senator, it seems to be rather an absurd proposition to oppose the amendment because a bill is pending on the Calendar which was intended to accomplish the same purpose. Here is an amendment reported from the committee that reported the bill to which the Senator refers—a standing committee. The amendment was reported regularly and in order, and referred properly to the Committee on Appropriations, and now presented, not only as a report from a standing committee, as the bill itself was, but backed up by the opinion and the desire and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior himself.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, as to whether my position as a Senator is absurd or otherwise, that is simply the opinion of the Senator from Nebraska. It is no argument in regard to the proposition.

Mr. PADDOCK. What I mean is this—

Mr. BERRY. The statute law at this time fixes the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office at $4,000, or $3,500, I do not remember which it is.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me just one moment, I do not object to his antagonizing the bill on its merits. That is his undoubted right, but I do object to his making an invidious reflection upon this particular proceeding, which is altogether regular and just and fair and proper. Here is a most meritorious officer, one of the most capable and efficient and thorough officers who has ever been in the administration of that bureau, and everybody knows it on both sides of the Chamber. He has accomplished reforms and systematized the work there, purified the service, and among other results accomplished has reduced the number of final entries pending fully sixty thousand since he came into office, and kept the routine work of the office up from day to day.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, as to my manner of opposing or antagonizing this amendment, with all due respect to the Senator from Nebraska, I will select that myself, and not look to him to dictate as to how or in what manner I shall oppose it. I opposed the bill and I opposed putting it on this appropriation bill because I believe that the system is wrong. I am opposed, in addition to that, to increasing this officer's salary, because he receives enough already. I oppose it because there are other officers equally important who are receiving a less salary than it is proposed to give this one. I oppose it for the same reason that was so ably given by the Senator from Kansas when this matter was last before the Senate, that this is a bad time to be increasing the salaries of the officials of this Government, at a time when there is distress throughout the country, when the farmers are complaining from one end to the other.

It is proposed to give this officer $5,000 a year, and to do it in an indirect way, when you have not the courage to come in and pass a bill to give it to him directly. You seek to cover it up by putting it on an appropriation bill, and point to the statute as though he were receiving $4,000, when in fact he is receiving $5,000. I say if there is anything insidious about my manner of opposing this amendment it is far less so than this attempt to mislead and hoodwink the people and tell them the salaries are so and so when you are giving to the officers on appropriation bills more than the statute says they are entitled to have. I say that the system is wrong. It was inaugurated by the Republican party, and if the Democratic party or any part of it in the last Administration did it that was a mistake. The Republicans invariably quote something of that kind where the Democrats follow them in their worst methods.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nebraska will let this question be settled upon the bill now pending upon the Calendar, and not seek to force it on an appropriation bill where it does not belong.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not see why there should be any discrimination in salary against the Commissioner of the General Land Office. That was supposed to be the most important bureau in the Interior Department, and it ought to be to-day. They have taken from it in various ways and usurped its jurisdiction in various forms. I admit that that bureau is very much crippled, to the detriment of the people. It is true it fell behind, and it may have been the fault of some Commissioners and it may have been the fault of the appropriations. It got into disrepute.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Nevada that this is a statutory salary that has been in existence for a great many years.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that. I will ask the Senator a question about statutory salaries when I get a little further on, and I hope the Senator will stay here a moment longer.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been here all day, and propose to stay.

Mr. STEWART. I say the Commissioner of the General Land Office ought to be at the head of the most important bureau in the Interior Department, and it would be if the legislation would allow an officer there who is competent. I must say that I believe the present incumbent is competent. I have not been able to say that for some of the Commissioners, and I profess to be familiar with the Land Office. I believe this gentleman is competent, and I do not know why he should not receive as much as the Commissioner of Patents or the Commissioner of Pensions, both of whom receive $5,000 under this bill. The Director of the Geological Survey receives $6,000. Whether that is useful or not posterity can judge.

Besides, the Director of the Geological Survey has an executive officer at $3,000. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa what that executive officer is for, and what he does. I see that none of the other bureaus have that kind of an officer. It is an anomaly; and I want to know under what law that office was created and what are the duties of an executive officer of the Geological Survey.

Mr. ALLISON. The executive officer of the Geological Survey, I have no doubt, is engaged in the various executive and administrative duties of that office, while the Director of the Survey is engaged in the examination of scientific questions. But I did not know that that question was under consideration at this moment. If the Senator desires to make any motion respecting the executive officer of the Geological Survey he may not find me opposing it, unless he also wants to increase that salary.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to increase any salary except that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I want to put his salary up to that of the other Commissioners, simply because I think it is fair. The Commissioner of Patents and the Commissioner of Pensions receive $5,000, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not only the same executive duties that they have to perform, but he has judicial functions. It requires a lawyer of high standing to discharge the duties of that office well, and we rarely get a man competent. I believe we have one now, and I think if we put the salary at $5,000 we should secure the services of a competent man. There has been great difficulty in filling that office with competent men, and the suffering and inconvenience of the people in consequence of incompetency in the Land Office have been immense.

Mr. HALE. We have had good men there.

Mr. STEWART. You had good men there formerly. You had Mr. Hendricks there at one time, and his decisions are luminous.

Mr. HALE. Voluminous?

Mr. STEWART. Not voluminous, but luminous. They were landmarks. You had Joe Wilson there.

Mr. MANDERSON. And Sparks.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to talk about him; that is too recent. But you have had great failures in recent dates. The present Commissioner is from Nebraska. He is a lawyer and a competent man, and I would put him on a level with the Commissioner of Patents and the Commissioner of Pensions. I do not see that the bureau of posterity should be placed above the other bureaus, the living bureaus. They are bureaus for posterity; yet the head of the bureau for posterity gets $4,000. If we should reduce that to $5,000 and raise the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to $5,000 we should have all of these great bureaus on a level. It seems to me that nobody could object to that.

I hope that the amendment will prevail; and I will try to move a further amendment then, if that is proper, to equalize the salaries by reducing the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey $1,000, the amount that we should add to the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator will not move such an amendment now.

Mr. STEWART. I would not make that motion now, but I say it might be done if anybody wants to make the motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator does not desire to decrease the general expenses, then?

Mr. STEWART. I should like to decrease them by getting rid of the executive officer of the Geological Survey. I think unless somebody can say what he is useful for I shall make that motion. But I hope that the Commissioner of the General Land Office will be placed on an equality with the Commissioner of Patents and the Commissioner of Pensions. I hope he will be placed on a level with them, because he is an important officer.

As to whether we shall give a large amount of money to officers we have no use for in this generation, I leave that to the Senate; but so far as these officers are useful we ought to make no discrimination among the useful ones. The Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Patents and the Commissioner of Pensions are useful and necessary officers, and their compensation should be equal. There is no reason why it should not be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. ALLISON. The occupant of the chair a few moments ago decided that this proposition is in order. I think that is a matter of so much importance that we ought to understand clearly and definitely that this is now a proposition to change on an appropriation bill the salary of an officer fixed by law. If this can be done in the case of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it can be done as respects every salary in the United States, including our own, and the salaries of all the bureau officers, of the members of the Cabinet, etc. I think it is a matter of such grave and serious importance that it ought to be decided on the question of order.

There shall be in the Department of the Interior a Commissioner of the General Land Office—

Mr. INGALLS. What is the Senator reading from?

Mr. ALLISON. I am reading from the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878.

Mr. INGALLS. What section?

Mr. ALLISON. Section 446, chapter 3:

There shall be in the Department of the Interior a Commissioner of the General Land Office, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of $4,000 a year.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the existing salary.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the existing statutory salary. I therefore make the point of order again. This is a matter of so much moment and affects so many other things involved in this bill and in other bills that I think it is a question which ought to be understood in the Chamber.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will state that this question has already been decided by the Chair, but not by the present occupant of it. I do not see how the Chair can determine it a second time. Of course I do not object to a ruling by the present occupant of the chair, but I can not see how there can be any other ruling by anybody.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, whether it is not a fact that the salaries of a great many other of the executive officers of the Government that are fixed by general statute, by the law creating the office, have been changed by legislation upon appropriation bills and their salaries increased, and whether that increase of salary as made upon appropriation bills has not received the sanction of the Appropriations Committee year after year, and the raising of the salaries been recognized in appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no recollection of any such instance, but it may be true. I should be glad to have an instance called to my attention; I have no recollection of any such instance.

Mr. MANDERSON. Is it not true as to the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. ALLISON. The Commissioner of Pensions formerly received a salary of $6,000. It was reduced to $5,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. By a general statute?

Mr. TELLER. We raised it during the last Administration.

Mr. MANDERSON. On an appropriation bill, when Mr. Black was Commissioner.

Mr. ALLISON. We changed the salary; I do not remember precisely how it was changed. But the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions, as I understand it, is not a salary fixed in the Revised Statutes, as is this salary. The salary of the Commissioner of Pensions was reduced and afterwards restored. That is my recollection about it.

This is a matter I care nothing about personally. I know the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I know him to be an estimable person; but I want the Senate now to decide whether the whole question and range of public salaries and compensation shall be subject to change from year to year upon these appropriation bills. That is all.
